TO

THIS EDITION OF THIS VOLUME.

1st. This volume commences with a chronological statement of the Statutes referred to, and the pages where they are commented upon.

2ndly. An alphabetical table of the names of the cases and the pages where they are referred to.

3rdly. Then is given an analytical table of the contents of the volume, referring to the pages in which each part is to be found.

4thly. Follows the body of the work, greatly enlarged, with entirely new heads, and showing the important alterations introduced by the new system.

5thly. Then follow the Addenda, containing a statement of such points and new decisions as have been suggested or have been decided during the progress of the work, to the end of last Michaelmas Term.

6thly. Is given an Appendix of Forms, most of which are entirely new, and all of them have been settled by the editor with care and attention.

7thly. Concluding the volume, is the Index, which has been considerably enlarged, and is new in arrangement, and on reading every considerable head, it will be found to contain an outline of the law applicable to it, being the preferable mode of forming an Index.

Throughout this volume considerable improvements have been made. The statutes are stated in the very words of the enactments. Unnecessary details of facts in the cases have been compressed. Several new titles and subdivisions have been introduced. The Editor again avails himself of the opportunity of acknowledging his great obligations to his friend Mr. MONTAGUE B. BERE, of the Western Circuit, for many valuable suggestions throughout this volume, and in framing the Index.

Relief of the poor
siastical concern.

ACCORDING to the early writers upon the subject of the poor, and their relief, one of the first consequences of the establishment of the Christian religion in this kingdom, was a provision for the maintenance of the poor. It is stated that a fourth part of the tithes of every parish was devoted to this purpose under the direction of the minister, assisted by the churchwardens and other principal inhabitants; and as it was regarded as a matter of ecclesiastical concern, the whole was under the supervision and control of the bishop whenever his interference became necessary.

Blackstone upon this subject says, "The poor of England till the time of Henry VIII. subsisted entirely upon private benevolence and the charity of well disposed Christians. For though it appears by the Mirroure, that by the common law the poor were to be 'sustained by parsons, rectors of the church, and the parishioners, so that none of them die for default of sustenance;' and though by the statute 12 R. II. c. 7, and 19 Hen. VII. c. 12, the poor were directed to abide in the cities or towns wherein they were born, or such wherein they had dwelt for three years, (which seem to be the first rudiments of parish settlements,) yet till the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25, I find no compulsory method chalked out for this purpose; but the poor seem to have been left to such relief as the humanity of their neighbours would afford them." (1 Bla. Com. 359.) Still, however, if the contributions were voluntary, the method was, in the course of time, so far reduced to a system, as to be sanctioned and upheld by acts of parliament, for by the statute last cited, the churchwardens or two others of every parish were to make collections for the poor on Sundays. By 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 2, the minister and churchwardens were annually to appoint two able persons or more to be gatherers and collectors of alms for the poor. By 5 Eliz. c. 3, the parishioners were to choose these collectors, and by 14 Eliz. c. 5, the appointment was to be made by the justices, who were also to appoint overseers. And the 18 Eliz. c. 3, is to the like effect. By 39 Eliz. c. 3, the churchwardens of every parish, and four substantial householders, were to be nominated yearly in Easter week by two justices, and called overseers of the poor. Next followed the important statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, out of which, Dr. Burn observes, more litigation, and a greater amount of revenue have arisen, with consequences more extensive and more serious in their aspect, than ever were identified with any other act of parliament or system of legislation whatever. By these and other acts, as observed by Sir John Nicholl, in Wilson v. M'Math, 3 Phillimore's Rep. 88, the maintenance of the poor has now become much more matter of temporal than of spiritual concern.

The consequences of which Dr. Burn here speaks, became so serious, that after several ineffectual attempts to remedy them, in A. D. 1831 a commission was issued "to make diligent and full inquiry into the practical operation of the laws for the relief of the poor in England and Wales, and into the manner in which those laws were administered, and to report their opinion as to what beneficial alterations could be made." The result of this inquiry was laid before the Houses of Parliament in 1834, and the commissioners reported, "that the fund which the 43 of Eliz. directed to be employed in setting to work children and persons capable of labour, but using no daily trade, and in the necessary relief of the impotent, had been applied to purposes opposed to the letter, and still more to the spirit of the law, and destructive to the morals of the most numerous class, and to the welfare of all. That the great source of abuse was the out-door relief afforded to the able-bodied on their account, or on that of their families, given either in kind or in money." They also reported, that "great maladministration existed in the workhouses." To remedy the evils, they proposed considerable alterations in the law; and the principal portion of their suggestions was embodied into the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, which received the royal assent on the 14th August, 1834. The important alterations in the relief and management of the poor, which have been introduced by this statute, induce the present editors to give the whole statute in the Appendix, with occasional references, in notes, to the Report of the Commissioners. The various alterations of the previously existing law will be noticed also in their proper places. It is necessary to premise generally, that one great object of this statute was, to produce an uniform system of relief and management of the poor throughout England and Wales; and for this purpose a Central Board of Commissioners has been appointed.

In former editions of this work, although principally designed for the assistance of justices of the peace, there was no general summary of their powers and duties; but it is now proposed to enumerate, in a brief form, the principal points relating to justices, before entering on the general title of "Officers concerned in the administration of the Poor Laws."

II. Of the Persons concerned in Administration of Poor Laws.

1. Justices.

1. Of Justices of the Peace, their Jurisdiction, Powers, and Duties relating to the Poor.

Before the recent statute of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the justices of the peace had the general superintendence over all persons entrusted with the care and management of the poor, and they entirely directed the mode and amount of relief which should be given to the poor. This latter part of their duties has been almost, if not altogether, transferred to the Poor Law Commissioners. (a) Still, however, by various legislative enactments, it will be found that the justices out of sessions have many important duties to perform. They are authorized to appoint overseers; (b) to supply a vacancy caused by the death, removal, or insolvency of an overseer; (c) to allow their accounts, and to cause books to be delivered to their successors; (d) to compel the overseer to perform every order made under 17 Geo. II. c. 38; (e) and to pay the required rates to the guardians. (f) With regard to the relief of the poor, by the statute of Eliz. the overseers were required to take order for the relief and employment of the poor, "by and with the consent of two or more justices of the peace."

Two justices.

3 W. & M. c. 11.
One justice.

By 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 11, the overseers were required to keep a register of all persons who were admitted to receive relief, and no other person was to be allowed "to receive collections at the charge of the parish but by the authority of one justice of the peace."

9 Geo. I. c. 7.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 1, no justice of the peace shall order relief to any poor person dwelling in any parish, until oath be made before such justice of the peace of some matter which he shall judge to be reasonable cause for having such relief; and that the person had applied for relief to the parishioners, or to two of the overseers, and was by them refused to be relieved; and until such justice hath summoned two of the overseers to show cause why such relief should not be given; and the person so summoned hath been heard or made default to appear before such justice.

W. 4, c. 53, s. 53.

By the 36 Geo. III. c. 23, the enactments of which were extended and modified by the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 3, and the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 2 and 5, magistrates were empowered to order relief to poor persons at their homes, notwithstanding a workhouse had been provided and contracts entered into for lodging, keeping, maintaining, and employing the poor. But this statute, (36 Geo. III. c. 23,) as well as the above-mentioned sections, by which it was so extended and modified, have been repealed by the Poor Law Amendment Act, and consequently the powers which the justices derived therefrom have terminated.

The acts of 3 W. & M. c. 11, and 9 Geo. I. c. 7, are not repealed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, and those acts still authorize justices of the peace to exercise a control over the overseers in the administration of relief to the poor. But this control can now be exercised only in parishes in which there is no board of guardians, no select vestry, or other similar body constituted under any local or general act. (g)

It will be observed, however, that the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 54, enacts,

(a) The Poor Law Commissioners have declared, that since the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 27, justices of the peace cannot specify in their order what kind or quantity of relief shall be given.

(g) We are indebted for this remark to a circular issued by the commissioners in October, 1834.

that it shall not be lawful for any justice, by writing under his hand and seal, to order relief to any person from the poor-rates, except as therein provided; and though this clause refers to unions and select vestries, the limitation of this power of the justices is in general not confined to such cases only; and where they can exercise a control, no relief can be ordered for any person out of the workhouse, unless the rules of the commissioners direct it. (Sect. 52.) However, even when there is a board of guardians, one justice is authorized, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, to order temporary relief in articles of absolute necessity, but not in money; and in cases of sudden and dangerous illness, to give a similar order for medical relief only; and in any union, two justices may order relief to be given to any adult person who, from old age or infirmity, shall be wholly unable to work, without requiring such persons to reside in the workhouse. (Sect. 27.)

Justices also have, under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, power to enforce the repayment of loans made by the guardians, and for this purpose may order the master of the pauper to pay the wages to the guardians. (Sect. 59.) The proper relief to be given by the guardians under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, is to be determined by the justices, although the visitor alone must decide whether that relief shall be given in or out of the workhouse. (a) In their petty sessions the justices may make an order upon the grandfather, father, &c. to maintain their grandchildren or children; (b) but no such power is given to enforce the extended liability of those who marry women having children; (c) other statutes authorize justices to seize the goods and rents of persons deserting their families, (d) and on complaint of guardians, to punish such as neglect them. (e) When Chelsea or Greenwich pensioners desert their families, (f) the justices may attach their pensions, and may direct the owners of merchant ships to pay the wages of the seamen employed by them to the relief of their families. (g) They may also order the wages of those who have been convicted of smuggling, and are serving in the king's ships, to be applied to the relief of their families. (h) They formerly possessed a similar authority in providing relief for the families of militiamen, (i) but this is now repealed. (k) A power is given to them to order relief to prisoners for debt in gaols (not being county gaols) under mesne process. (l)

The poor-rate must be allowed by them, (m) and its payment may be enforced by them by a warrant of distress after a summons. (n) Parish apprentices are still to be bound out under their order and direction; and they are further required (in addition to their consent and allowance) to ascertain if the rules of the commissioners for binding out apprentices have been complied with, and to certify the same at the foot of the contract or indenture. (o) The complaints of apprentices in trade or business are cognizable before them. (p) Their consent was formerly required to the union of parishes. (q) The select vestry received its appointment from the justices, (r) who also consented and approved of the guardians, (s) visitor, (t) treasurer, (u) and governor, (v) and might appoint the keeper of such workhouse to be such governor. (w) Upon the neglect of any guardian to pay the money in his hands, the justices might enforce it, (x) and they may punish them for enticing persons to remove without an order. (y) Their assents to contracts for the maintenance of the poor is repealed. (z)

It is an essential part of the duty of justices to visit and examine the

2. The Poor Law Commissioners, their Powers and Duties.

Three commissioners under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 1. (i)

The stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 1, enables his majesty to appoint three commissioners for five years, to carry the statute into execution; and the administration of the relief of the poor, according to the existing law, or such laws as shall be in force for the time being, are subject to their direction and controul. The great power and authority of the commissioners will be best understood by reciting the enactment at length.

Administration of relief to the poor to be under controul of the commissioners, who are to make rules and regulations for the management of the poor and administration of the laws for their relief, &c.

The 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 15, enacts, "that the administration of relief to the poor throughout England and Wales, according to the existing laws, or such laws as shall be in force at the time being, shall be subject to the direction and control of the said commissioners; and for executing the powers given to them by this act, the said commissioners shall, and are hereby authorized and required, from time to time as they shall see occasion, to make and issue all such rules, orders and regulations, for the management of the poor, for the government of workhouses and the education of the children therein, and for the management of parish poor children under the provisions of an act made and passed in the seventh year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled 'An Act for the better regulation of parish poor children of the several parishes therein mentioned within the bills of mortality,' and the superintending, inspecting, and regulating of the houses wherein such poor children are kept and maintained, and for the apprenticing the children of poor persons, and for the guidance and control of all guardians, vestries, and parish officers, so far as relates to the management or relief of the poor, and the keeping, examining, auditing, and allowing of accounts, and making and entering into contracts in all matters relating to such management or relief, or to any expenditure for the relief of the poor, and for carrying this act into execution in all other respects, as they shall think proper; and the said commissioners may, at their discretion, from time to time suspend, alter, or rescind such rules, orders, and regulations, or any of them: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as enabling the said commissioners or any of them to interfere in any individual case for the purpose of ordering relief."

These general rules must be submitted to one of the secretaries of state forty days before they come into operation, and the king, by the advice of his privy council, may disallow them within that time, or afterwards, and upon such disallowance they are to cease to operate, s. 16. And all general rules in force at the sitting of parliament, shall, within one week after the commencement of the session, be laid before both houses, s. 17. Before the same can have any operation in any union or parish, a copy of them must be sent to the overseers, the guardians of the union or clerk, and the clerk of the justices of the petty sessions, who are required to give publicity to them, to allow inspection, and give copies of them, s. 18.

The commissioners are also empowered to make rules for present or future workhouses, and vary bye-laws already in force or to be made hereafter, and no addition to the schedule of 22 Geo. II. c. 38, is valid till confirmed by them.

A rule which affects more than one union is a general rule, and is to be distinguished from the rules, &c. issued for the government of a particular union or parish; and although the rules which the commissioners have issued for the management of the various unions correspond with each other in their leading features, yet they differ in some minute particulars, suggested by local convenience. The validity of any rule may be determined by removing it into the Court of King's Bench by certiorari, s. 105.

Before this statute, much benefit had been derived from the union of parishes for the relief of the poor and the use of a common workhouse; and the commissioners are empowered to effect this object, and even if necessary without the consent of the parishioners. Already a very large number of unions have been formed, and the whole kingdom of England and Wales will be speedily brought under the same arrangement.

The commissioners may, with the consent of the majority of guardians of any union, or a majority of the rate-payers and owners of property in any parish, order a workhouse to be built, purchased, or enlarged, s. 23. They may, without consent, direct any parish or union, having a workhouse or a building convertible into a workhouse, to be enlarged, but the principal sum to be raised in any parish must not exceed 50*l.*, nor one-tenth of the average annual amount of the rates for three years, s. 25.

The commissioners are entitled to attend every parochial and other local board and vestry, and take part in the discussions, but not to vote. Besides the great power which is given to them by the second section, of requiring the attendance of persons, and the production of papers, they are expressly empowered to require, from any person holding a trust property belonging to the parish, or which may be applicable to the relief of the poor, an account of such property and its application; and by sect. 90, service of summons on the party's last place of abode is sufficient. Sect. 98 imposes a penalty on the disobedience of their orders, or contempt of the board.

3. Assistant Commissioners.

The principal commissioners are empowered by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 7, (a) to appoint nine assistant commissioners, and to delegate their authority to them, and with the exception of making a general rule, the assistants may exercise all the power of the principal commissioners.

4. Guardians.

All the power and authority given by any statute to overseers, (with the exception of making and collecting rates,) was transferred by Gilbert's Act, (b) the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, to guardians in every parish or united parishes, which adopted the provisions of that act; and the same powers are given to the guardians appointed under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. There is reason to believe that every parish will soon form part of some union, and therefore be under the care of guardians. In a work then which treats of the duties of parish

The editors attach much importance to this branch of the subject, and therefore have treated it in detail, under the following subdivisions, of the appointment and duties of guardians under the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, and the rules of the commissioners, as well as their appointment and duties under preceding statutes.

The commissioners are empowered to direct that the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor of any single parish shall be governed by a board of guardians, sect. 39; and where a union of parishes has been formed, a board of guardians shall be chosen, the workhouse shall be governed, and the relief of the poor administered by them, sect. 38. The guardians are to be elected by the rate-payers and owners of property. The commissioners are to determine the whole number, as well as the number for each parish. The persons must be qualified by being rated at a sum to be fixed by the commissioners, but not to exceed the annual rental of 40*l.* They are to continue till 25th of March, or appointment of successors, and may be re-elected. The election to be held within fourteen days of the 25th of March. Justices of peace residing in the parish, and acting for the county, are ex officio members of the board. None of the guardians are paid officers. The owner is entitled to the same number of votes as persons are entitled to by the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, (b) and for the purpose of ascertaining that number, the assessment of the property in the rate shall be deemed the annual value. When the owner is also the occupier, he may vote in each character, and the officer of a corporation or company may vote as owner. Persons rated under 200*l.* shall have a single vote; at 200*l.* and under 400*l.* two votes; and at 400*l.* or more, three votes; such person must have been rated to the poor for the whole year preceding his voting, and paid the parochial rates assessed on him for one whole year, except such as were due within six months preceding his voting. The owner may vote by proxy, but whether he votes in person or by proxy he must give a previous statement of his property, &c. Persons not complying with the directions of the commissioners considered to have no vote.

Since the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, a barrister, on 11th March, 1835, gave his opinion that a churchwarden or overseer, having the necessary qualification and other requisites, was nevertheless ineligible, by reason of his office, to be elected guardian. But on such opinion being laid before the attorney-general by the commissioners, he was of opinion that a churchwarden or overseer might be elected guardian for his parish, and sit as guardian, notwithstanding his being churchwarden or overseer at the time, and this latter opinion has been since constantly acted upon.

The commissioners have also signified their opinions, first, that a guardian elected for two parishes in a union, has only one vote at the board, see sect. 38; secondly, that a corporation justice is not a guardian ex officio. (See Evans qui tam v. Stevens, 4 Term Rep. 224, 459, and confirmed by an opinion of the attorney-general.) The words of the act are, "justices acting for the county, riding, or division." The latter word applies to Lincolnshire, and not to towns, &c. of exclusive jurisdiction.

2. THE POWERS AND DUTIES OF GUARDIANS.

The relief of the poor.

The workhouse.

To the guardians belong exclusively the ordering and directing of all relief to the poor of the several parishes and places comprised in the union, and the building, hiring, and providing of any workhouse, poorhouse, or other premises, for the reception and maintenance of paupers therein, and the altering, improving, or enlarging the same, or any other existing workhouse or poorhouse within the said union, and the regulation and management thereof, and the hiring or purchasing of land for such workhouse or workhouses, or for the employment of paupers therein, subject to the directions of the poor law commissioners, and excepting such powers as in the act are given to justices of the peace and overseers of the poor.

(a) The general subject of unions will not amounting to 50*l.* is entitled to one vote; amounting to 50*l.* and upwards, be considered in a separate chapter.

No guardian can act except at a meeting of the board, (a) and there to make a quorum three guardians must concur. (b)

The guardians must meet weekly, and extraordinary meetings may be held on giving the notices of the rules, or without notice in cases of emergency.

At the board they must direct the nature and amount of relief to be given, subject however to the rules relating to relief, (which see post, "Relief") and hear the application of paupers, who have previously applied to the relieving officer. They must determine the kind of work to be done by paupers in or out of the workhouse, and give directions to the overseers for raising the money payable by their parish.

The duty of giving relief and employment, and making inquiries relating to the poor, is entrusted to the "relieving officer," whom guardians have been directed, under the 46th sect. of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, to appoint and to pay.

3. APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIANS UNDER 22 GEO. III. c. 83.

It will be found that the principle of Gilbert's Act has been much followed in the recent enactments; but by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the option of appointing guardians and directing the unions of parishes, is transferred from the rate-payers to the commissioners.

By the 3d sect. of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, a single parish might avail itself of the provisions of the act, and appoint guardians, upon complying with certain regulations prescribed in that section and some later statutes, (c) and also adopting the forms in the schedule. The same power was given to two or more parishes to unite, and the guardians were directed to execute an agreement for that purpose, according to a form prescribed.

Sect. 6 requires "that the notice for every public meeting directed by this act, shall be given in the church or chapel of every such parish, township, or

Notice of meetings.

(a) 1st rule of commissioners for ——— union. See Appendix.

(b) Sect. 38.

(c) As the practical utility of these statutes is much diminished, the substance of them only is given here.

By this section, whenever two-third parts in number and value, according to the poor rate, of the owners or occupiers of lands, &c. within any parish, qualified as therein mentioned, should, at a meeting holden pursuant to the act, signify their desire to adopt its provisions, and should recommend to the justices three persons qualified for guardians of the poor, and three persons qualified to be governors of the poorhouse, and fix the salaries to be paid to such guardian and governor, and should procure the consent of two justices, such parish was entitled to all the benefits and powers of the act. The two-third parts were by 33 Geo. III. c. 35, s. 1, to be two-third parts in number and value of such qualified persons only, actually attending such public meeting; and by sect. 2, if such meeting signified their opinion to the justices, that on account of the extent and population of such parish, more than one guardian of the poor was necessary, and shall desire that two may be appointed guardians, the justices might appoint two guardians. This power was further enlarged by 41 Geo. III. c. 9, s. 1, which enacted, if it shall be the opinion of two-thirds in number and value of the owners or occupiers of lands, &c. that one guardian is insufficient for carrying into due execution the provisions of the said act, and the same shall be certified by two of the persons present at such meeting to two justices, together with the names of four persons qualified for the office of guardian, the justices might appoint so many of them to be guardians of the poor as they in their discretion thought necessary for duly carrying the act into execution. The first part of the 7th sect. of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, made similar provisions for the appointment of a guardian for each parish in a union.

4. Guardians. place, on three successive Sundays before the time of such meeting, immediately after divine service, or on such of the said Sundays as service shall be performed there, and also fixed in writing on such church or chapel door, or if no church or chapel, at some public place within any such parish, township, or place, where notices of parish business have been usually given, fifteen days at least before the day to be appointed for such meeting, in the form or to the effect mentioned in the said schedule, No. VI."

This section then described the qualification of voters to be an assessment to the poor-rate, after the rate of 5*l.* at least, and payment of the rates; if there were not ten qualified persons in the parish, then every person assessed and paying rates might vote; but all elections under this act or any local act must now be governed by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76. (See sects. 38, 41.)

4. POWERS AND DUTIES OF SUCH GUARDIANS.

Guardians are to be overseers.

By sect. 7 of Gilbert's Act, 22 Geo. III. c. 83, "every such guardian shall attend the monthly meetings thereby directed to be holden, and execute the several powers and authorities given to guardians by that act, and shall have and is hereby invested with all the powers and authorities given to overseers of the poor by any other act or acts of parliament, and shall to all intents and purposes^(a) (except with regard to making and collecting rates) be an overseer of the poor for the parish or township for which he shall be so appointed guardian, and shall be liable to such forfeitures and penalties for neglect of duty as overseers of the poor are made liable to by this or any other act of parliament, and all notices or applications directed by this or any other act of parliament to be given or made to the overseers of the poor with respect to the care and management or removal of the poor, shall be given and made to the guardian of the poor, where any such guardian shall be appointed under the authority of this act; but in case any orders of removal or notices shall happen by mistake to be given or sent to the churchwarden or overseer, the same shall be as valid and effectual as if given to the guardian; and such churchwarden or overseer shall, and is hereby required forthwith to deliver the same to the guardian, or shall forfeit forty shillings for his neglect."

Orders and notices, &c., to be delivered to guardians.

Overseers not to interfere.

"Where such guardian of the poor shall be appointed as aforesaid, neither the churchwardens nor overseers of the poor shall interfere or intermeddle in the care and management of the poor, but shall continue to have and be invested with the same powers of making and collecting poor's rates as they have at present, and shall be subject to the like penalties for neglect or misbehaviour in making and collecting such rates as they were at the time of passing this act."

Penalty for absence from monthly meetings.

By sect. 26, "If the guardian for any parish, township, or place, which shall adopt the said provision as aforesaid, shall not attend each monthly meeting hereby directed to be holden, or send some substantial inhabitant of such parish, township, or place, to attend and answer the payments for him, in case he shall be prevented by sickness or other unavoidable accident from attending in person, the guardian for every such parish, township, and place, making such default, shall, for every such neglect, forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds, nor less than forty shillings."

Officers, how long to continue.

By sect. 14, "The offices of guardian, governor, visitor, or treasurer, to which any person shall be appointed under the authority of this act, shall determine in Easter week next after the respective persons shall be appointed thereto, on the day upon which the public meeting for such parish, township, or place, shall be held there, when the persons who, according to this act, are qualified and have a right to recommend another person to the justices, to be appointed to such office, shall either agree with the persons who held

(a) Although these words are very strong, yet it appears by subsequent parts of the statute that various powers are expressly given to guardians, but the power of putting out apprentices not mentioned, the overseers and not guardians are the proper persons to bind out apprentices. (R. v. Lutterworth, 3 B. & Cres. 487; 5 D. & R. 343, S. C.; see post.) the same to continue in such office, or shall proceed to recommend others, in the manner hereinbefore directed, as if such person had died."

Sect. 13. "That when and as often as any vacancy shall happen in any of the offices aforesaid by death, resignation, or removal, meetings shall be called, and recommendations offered to the justices in manner aforesaid; and they shall proceed, so soon as conveniently may be, in the manner before directed, to appoint a fit and proper successor to the person so dying, declining to act, or so removed as aforesaid."

The whole care and management of the poor was entrusted to such guardians, reserving to the overseers the duty of making the rates and collecting the same. This is the general language of the statute. See, however, R. v. Laughton, post, title "Workhouse," for some limitation of their authority.

5. *Of Overseers of the Poor.*5. Overseers.

One of the earliest enactments relating to any parochial officer to collect monies for the use of the poor was the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25. By 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 2, the minister and churchwardens were annually to appoint two able persons or more to be gatherers and collectors of alms for the poor. By 5 Eliz. c. 3, the parishioners were to choose these collectors, and by 14 Eliz. c. 5, the appointment was to be made by the justices, who were also to appoint overseers. And the 18 Eliz. c. 3, is to the like effect. By 39 Eliz. c. 3, the churchwardens of every parish, and four substantial householders, were to be nominated yearly in Easter week by two justices, and called overseers of the poor. Next followed the important statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2. The portion of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, which relates to the appointment of overseers is—

43 Eliz. c. 2.

Sect. 1, which enacts, "That the churchwardens of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, having respect to the proportion and greatness of the same parish and parishes to be nominated yearly in Easter week, or (a) within one month after Easter, (now by 54 Geo. III. c. 91, on 25th March, or within fourteen days after,) under the hand and seal of two or more justices of the peace in the same county, whereof one to be of the quorum, dwelling in or near the same parish or division where the same parish doth lie, shall be called overseers of the poor of the same parish; and they, or the greater part of them, shall take order, from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more such justices of peace as is aforesaid, for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not, by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep and maintain their children; and also for setting to work all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary or daily trade of life to get their living by."

Who shall be overseers.

Duties.

In some parishes, however, there is no churchwarden, and by 17 Geo. II. c. 18, s. 15, the overseers are empowered to execute all the authorities given to the churchwardens and overseers.

1. THE PLACE FOR WHICH OVERSEERS ARE TO BE APPOINTED.

The statute merely related in terms to parishes only, but the system was extended to townships and vills parochial and extra-parochial, by the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21, which recites that "whereas the inhabitants of the counties of Lancashire, Cheshire, Derbyshire, Yorkshire, Northumberland, the Bishopric of Durham, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and many other counties in England and Wales, by reason of the largeness of the parishes within the same, have not nor cannot reap the benefit of the act of parliament made in the three and fortieth year of the reign of the late Queen Elizabeth for relief of the poor;" and enacts, "That all and every the poor, needy, impotent, and lame person or persons within every township or village within the several counties aforesaid, shall, from and after the passing of this act, be maintained, kept, provided for and set on work, within the several and respective townships and villages wherein he, she, or they shall inhabit, or wherein he, she, or they was or were last lawfully settled, according to the intent and meaning of this act; and that there shall be yearly chosen and appointed, according to the rules and directions in the said act of the three and fortieth year of Queen Elizabeth mentioned, two or more overseers of the poor within every of the said townships or villages, who shall from time to time do, perform, and execute all and every the acts, powers, and authorities for the necessary relief of the poor within said township or village, and shall lose, forfeit, and suffer all such pains and penalties for non-performance thereof, as is limited, mentioned, and appointed in and by the said in part recited act."

Officers of corporate towns have the authority of justice of peace.

Aldermen of London.

A parish extending into two counties, or into two liberties.

43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, also enacts, "That the mayor, bailiffs, or other head officers of every town and place corporate and city within this realm, being justice or justices of the peace, shall have the same authority by virtue of this act, within the limits and precincts of their jurisdiction, as well out of sessions as at their sessions, if they hold any, as is herein limited, prescribed and appointed to justices of the peace of the county, or any two or more of them, or to the justices of peace in their quarter sessions, to do and execute for all the uses and purposes in this act prescribed, and no other justice or justices of peace to enter or meddle there: (a) and that every alderman of the city of London within his ward shall and may do and execute in every respect so much as is appointed and allowed by this act to be done and executed by one or two justices of peace of any county within this realm.

And by sect. 9, If any parish extend itself into more counties than one, or part to lie within the liberties of any city, town or place corporate, and part without, that then, as well the justices of peace of every county, as also the head officers of such city, town or place corporate, shall deal and intermeddle only in so much of the said parish as lieth within their liberties, and not any further: and every of them respectively, within their several limits, wards and jurisdictions, to execute the ordinances before-mentioned concerning the nomination of overseers, to consent to binding apprentices, the giving warrant to levy taxations unpaid, the taking account of churchwardens and overseers, and the committing to prison such as refuse to account, or deny to pay the arrearages due upon their accounts; and yet nevertheless, the said churchwardens and overseers, or most part of them, of the said parishes that do extend into such several limits and jurisdictions, shall, without dividing themselves, duly execute their office in all places within the said parish, in all things to them belonging, and shall duly exhibit and make one account before the said head officer of the town or place corporate, and one other before the said justices of peace, or any such two of them, as is aforesaid.

By the 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, jurisdiction is given to county justices in all boroughs which have not a separate court of quarter sessions under that act.

A churchwarden is ipso facto overseer.

To be sworn in immediately.

For what districts overseers may be appointed.

Churchwardens, it has been seen, were in effect overseers of the poor long before the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1. And as the statute declares them to be such, and requires others to be added to them by the justices, they need no formal appointment, but are overseers ipso facto, by becoming churchwardens. And the ordinary is bound to swear in churchwardens elect, immediately upon their applying to be sworn in, notwithstanding an usage not to swear in until the first visitation after Easter. (The King v. Middlesex, 5 Nev. & Man. 494.)

As the right and the duty of providing for the poor is created by statutes, no other districts than those mentioned therein, viz. parishes, townships, and vills, can assume or be compelled to adopt the system; nor can a township or vill separate itself, and form an independent establishment for the maintenance of its own poor, unless it cannot otherwise reap the benefit of the 43 Eliz. (See Hilton v. Powle, Cro. Car 92; Nicholas v. Walker, ib. 394).

(a) This excludes the justices of the county. (St. Mary, Taunton, 1 Bott, 82.) But in franchises not having four justices, the appeal may be to the sessions of the county. See 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 5.

What is a Parish, Township, or Vill.

"A parish is that circuit of ground which is committed to the charge of one parson or vicar, or other minister having cure of souls therein." (1 Bla. Com. 3.) This, though not a very popular definition, may suffice for the present purpose. However, if a district were a parish by reputation at the passing of the 43 Eliz., and has so continued ever since, it is sufficient under this act, although it may not be a parish in the precise sense of the above definition, but the assumption of that character at any period subsequent to that time, unless it be by express act of parliament, will not constitute it a parish within the meaning of the poor laws. (See the cases last cited, and Dean v. Linton, 2 Salk. 487.) And the immemorial exercise of some of the rights of a parish, as making rates and having a chapel of its own, will not make a distinct parish without all other parochial rights. (Rudd v. Foster, 4 Mod. 157; 1 Bott, 25, note). (a)

In Rex v. Severn & Arnold, Say. 278; 1 Bott, 2, two persons were appointed overseers of the poor within the precincts of the Tower, otherwise called the parish of St. Peter ad vincula. Denison J., delivered the resolution of the Court. This is not a good appointment under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, which requires them to be appointed within a parish; neither is it good within the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12, which says, that there shall be yearly appointed two or more overseers within every township and village respectively. Precinct is a word of ambiguous signification; it is not a boundary of any parish or vill; it may be more than a parish, or may be less. If it were a parish or vill by reputation, it might have been good (Cro. Car. 92, 394); but the Court cannot intend this precinct to be a vill, and the words of the statute ought to be pursued. Neither will the words otherwise called the parish of St. Peter ad vincula aid the want of this in the appointment; for in all constructions of alias dict. the words that go before the alias dict. must be presumed to be true; as in an indictment, the addition of the party not coming till after the alias dict. will vitiate the indictment, for what precedes the alias dict. is the true and proper appellation. (3 Bulst. 296). If in this case the alias dict. had come after the parish of St. Peter, it would have done. And the appointment was quashed.

Rex v. Rufford, 1 Stra. 512; 1 Bott, 47. In the vill of Rufford there are divers substantial freeholders able to contribute to the maintenance of the poor, and there are no churchwardens or overseers to make a rate, and the poor are unprovided for. The vill is part of no parish, but time out of mind has been extra-parochial, without church, chapel, or parochial rights, and there never have been any overseers of the poor. By the Court: "The powers given by the 43 Eliz. to be executed in parishes, were, by the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12, extended to all townships and villages, whether parochial or extra-parochial, and consequently overseers might be appointed in this case."

Rex v. Denham, 1 Bott, 48. The Court said, "It is now a settled point that the justices may appoint overseers in an extra-parochial place, but such place must come under the notion of a town or village."

So also a place in a parish must be a township or vill, to have its own overseers distinct from those of the parish (Rex v. Showler, 3 Burr. 1391), or a reputed vill; and this must appear in an affidavit for a mandamus to compel the appointment of overseers. (Rex v. J. of Bedfordshire, Cald. 167; 1 Bott, 58.)

And if the sessions find as a fact that the place is a vill, the appointment of separate overseers is of course. (Rex v. Ronton Abbey, 2 T. R. 207.)

The island of Fowlness in the county of Essex, which is no parish, but the lands are situate in divers parishes, is made a parish for this purpose by 18 sect. of 43 Eliz. c. 2. (b)

5. Overseers.
What is a Parish, Township, or Vill.

The appointment of overseers cannot be for a Precinct.

But the township or vill may be extra-parochial.

But the place must be a township or village.

Or a reputed vill.

5. Overseers.
What is a Parish, Township, or
Vill.

Whatever may be the distinction generally between a town and a village, the words vill, village, and township, are considered as denoting the same topographical division for the purposes of the poor laws; and a place so called may be such either in strictness or by reputation; but it must have been a vill in one or other of these modes, at least as early as the 13 and 14 Car. II. which, as the 43 Eliz. c. 2, has been decided to embrace only parishes in esse when that statute was passed, must be taken to embrace only such vills as had an existence in the year 1662, the date of the 13 and 14 Car. II. (Vide Jacob's Law Dictionary, tit. "Parish;" 1 Bla. Com. 114.)

What is or is not a township or vill.

Rex v. Denham, Burr. 37; Bott, 48, S. C. Lord Hardwicke, C. J., observes, "It is certainly very hard to define exactly what is a township or a village; it must be left to the judgment of the Court upon the circumstances of the case stated." Lord Coke says, "Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata, et collata ex pluribus vicinis." (1 Inst. 115 b.) But in this case, as there were only two houses, that cannot amount to the notion of a town or village, and that if it had been formerly a town or village, if the houses were in fact decayed and gone, it would cease to be a town or village. Lee, J., observed, "that the notion of a village, according to the ancient law, is a tithing consisting of ten families; that, according to the modern notion, it is a place that has a constable; that it ought to have at least the reputation of a town or vill; and that a vill must at least mean more than two houses."

Houses recently built within the
castle not a vill.

Rex v. Standard Hill, 4 Maule & Sel. 378. Overseers were appointed for the township of Standard Hill, which was a piece of ground within the precincts of the castle of Nottingham. It was sold in 1807, and several dwelling-houses built upon it. The castle and precincts were extra-parochial, and "no part of it ever reputed to be a township or vill, or assessed to the poor, or had a constable," except some who were appointed in 1808, without the steward's knowledge, and who in 1814 gave orders that the practice should be discontinued, which was done. On a motion to quash the appointment, it was urged that as there were seventeen houses, and some in progress, and 140 inhabitants, the Court should draw the conclusion that this was a vill. Lord Ellenborough: "The immediate consequence of holding this to be a vill, for which overseers ought to be appointed, would be that overseers must be appointed for all the inns of court, and every collegiate or ecclesiastical establishment, which would work a great alteration in the laws relating to this subject. This consideration makes me unwilling to pass the ancient limits, unless warranted by positive affidavit, and therefore until I find it stated that this is a vill, I shall defer coming to such a conclusion which may lead to so extensive a consequence." Order quashed.

Where there is a
vill.

Wherever there is a constable, there is a township; there may be a constable for a larger district but not for a smaller. (Rex v. Horton, 1 Bott, 54, per Buller, J.; 1 Term Rep. 376, S. C.) "It is true one parish may contain three vills; the parish of A. may contain the vills of A. B. and C. that is, when there are district constables in every one of them; but if the constable of A. run through the whole, then is the whole but one vill in law; or where there is a tithingman, there may be a vill; but if the constable run through the tithing, then it is all one vill." Per Hale, C. J., in a case where it was held that a fine of lands in A. would pass lands in B., a tithingman being appointed for B., but the constable exercising authority in B. (Waldron v. Roscarrior, 1 Mod. 78.)

houses and farms held not a township or vill.

In Rex v. Grafton, (Burr. S. C. 101; 2 Str. 1071; 1 Bott, 49;) the manor of Grafton, an extra-parochial place, once consisting of a capital mansion-house and three keepers' lodges in the park, now disparked, and consisting of five dwelling-houses and farms, occupied by five several tenants, but never having had any overseers of the poor or other officers, till the overseer now appointed for the purpose of the present removal, was adjudged by the justices to be a township or village within the statute into which a removal might be made. A rule to quash the order was granted, and afterwards made absolute without defence.

Rex v. Showler, 3 Burr. 1391; 1 Bott, 41. Showler and Atter were appointed overseers of the township or village of Haugh. The sessions adjudge Haugh to be a village or township, and confirm the appointment, and state specially that Haugh consists of a capital messuage, in which Showler and his family dwells; and of two small ancient cottages; and of one other small cottage lately built (all the cottages are let, with the said messuage and the farm thereunto belonging, to Showler); and of another tenement, part of the said messuage; and all of them inhabited by families; and that one of the cottages is inhabited by Atter, who is a day-labourer, and his family; and another of the said cottages is inhabited by another day-labourer; and another of the said cottages is inhabited by a shepherd; and the tenement, part of the capital messuage, is inhabited by a poor widow and her children; all which occupiers of the said cottages, and of the said tenement, part of the capital messuage, are under-tenants to Showler. The Court were unanimously of opinion, that both these orders ought to be discharged. Lord Mansfield, C. J., observed, "that by this method a place might be made into a village, which in fact was not so; and the inhabitants of it might, by this contrivance, withdraw themselves from contributing towards the support of the poor of their parish."

In Rex v. Justices of Peterborough, (Cald. 238; 1 Bott, 59;) a rule for a mandamus to require the appointment of overseers for the minster in Peterborough, it appeared that it was an extra-parochial place, containing upwards of sixty acres of ground, upon which were twenty-five dwelling-houses at least, besides poor houses of the annual value of 40*l.* at least; that these houses were inhabited, except in the instance of the bishop and three of the prebendal houses, altogether by laymen or strangers to the cathedral, and mostly persons of fortune, who kept servants that acquired settlements therein; that the poor had been supported from some fund belonging to the dean and chapter; "that it was not a township or vill, or ever reputed so to be;" that there never was any constable or other civil officer appointed for the said precinct, or any overseer of the poor, or churchwarden; nor had the inhabitants ever contributed to the relief of the poor within the precinct, or been called upon so to do. Lord Mansfield, "This space comprehends no more than the site of the cathedral and the area round it, and consequently was, in former times, within the sanctuary, and, as such, sacred and inviolable as the church itself. In modern times, to be sure, there is no such thing as sanctuary, but these places have throughout all ages, without interruption, enjoyed those immunities, as Westminster Abbey now does, and other places of the like nature. The ancient inns of court, though not exactly upon this principle, have also, at all times, been privileged; and a similar exemption was not questioned in Rex v. Gardner, Cowp. 79, with respect to that part of the court and garden ground of Catherine Hall in the university of Cambridge, which lay within the old and extra-parochial part of that foundation. Would you say that Christchurch, in Oxford, is a vill? I am not satisfied that this place is a vill, and the party applying do not even call it so." Buller, J. An order, appointing overseers of the "hamlet" of B., in the parish of C., is good; for it shall be intended that the place was a vill, unless it be stated to be otherwise; for "vill" and "hamlet" are, in common acceptance, used as synonymous terms. (Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.) and other officers having formerly been appointed; upon which it was expressly found by the sessions to be a vill by reputation, which precluded all question before the Court above whether it were so or not; so that this case proves not that three houses alone make a vill, but only that if a place be found by the sessions, upon the evidence there produced, to be a vill by reputation, it may be taken to be such, though there be but three houses remaining, and no other characterizing circumstances.

An extra-parochial district may become a township by act of parliament, but in that case it cannot be treated for the purposes of settlement, &c., as having been of that denomination before the date of its creation under the act, up to which period it must be regarded as if it had been wholly uninhabited. This statute extends to all counties. (a)

In Dolting v. Stokelane, (Fol. 98; Fort. 219; 1 Bott, 46); it was held by the whole Court, that by reason of the words "and many other counties in England and Wales," the act is general, and extends to other counties than those named in the act, otherwise it would not extend to one county in Wales. And in Clifton v. Churcham, 1 Nol. P. L. 10, Lee, C. J., said, "that so it was determined, upon great debate and consideration, in Dolting v. Stokelane, which case hath been ever since adhered to." (Andr. 314.)

Dividing parishes
 benefit of 43 Eliz.

The largeness of the parishes is expressly put forward as the ground on which, in particular parishes, the benefit of the statute of Elizabeth cannot be enjoyed. A parish cannot be legally divided for the relief of the poor, unless it cannot otherwise have the full benefit of that act. (Bastock v. Ridgway, 6 B. & C. 496; 9 D. & R. 585, S. C.) The question may be properly tried in a feigned issue before a jury. (Lane v. Cobham, 7 East, 1; Rex v. Watson, ib. 214; Rex v. Newell, 4 T. R. 266.) Speaking of the words in the statute of Charles, Buller, J., says, "The phrase, that a parish cannot reap the benefit of that statute, does not mean that it is absolutely impossible for them to maintain their own poor as a parish, for that would not be the case, even if the parish were 100 miles in circumference; but that it is inconvenient for them so to do." (Rex v. Leigh, 3 T. R. 748.) But the inconvenience must be real, and a mere trifling advantage which it is supposed may arise from a subdivision, will not warrant that proceeding. But where districts have maintained their poor respectively from distinct funds, even from a period subsequent to the 13 & 14 Car. II., either on account of the increase of population, or other changes having made it positively and really inconvenient to continue the union, the court of King's Bench, upon a knowledge of the facts, has directed a separation; there it is taken as decided that the parish is incapable of reaping the benefit of the 43 Eliz., and the townships or districts become entitled to separate overseers; thus

In Rex v. Newell, (4 T. R. 266,) the parish consisted of two separate districts, each of which immemorially made a separate rate, but the money when raised was blended together in one joint fund, though applied in certain proportions, and the sessions did not find it as a fact that the parish could not reap the benefit of the 43 Eliz.; it was held that the districts were not entitled to maintain their own poor separately and distinctly, though, since the year 1648, they have constantly had, in the whole, more than four overseers, and though the hamlet part has immemorially had a constable of its own. Lord Kenyon in the course of his judgment said, "The only circumstance that can bear the semblance of an argument against this decision is, that these districts have had more than four overseers; but that appeared to be the case in several other parishes, on an enquiry directed to be made by Lord Mansfield, in Rex v. Loxdale, (1 Burr. 445.) So that though it may be a very material ingredient in these cases, it is not a decisive one." (See also Rex v. Justices of Middlesex, 1 Bott, 39; Rex v. Uttoxeter, Doug. 346, Cald. 84.)

(a) The contrary had been previously held. (Skellington v. Norton, 2 Lev. 142.)

5. Overseers.

Peart v. Westgarth, 3 Burr. 1610. Upon a feigned issue, the following case was agreed on. From 43 Eliz. to 9 Geo. I., (1723), the parish of Stanhope had one joint appointment of overseers of the parish, and during all that time the poor of the parish were jointly relieved and maintained by general rates upon the whole parish. During that time, there were four churchwardens and four overseers, which four overseers were nominated one out of each of the four quarters in the parish, called Forest quarter, Newlandside quarter, Park quarter, and Stanhope quarter; and in each quarter there was one churchwarden and one overseer, who collected the poor's rates in the quarter wherein they respectively resided; but the money was levied under one entire assessment upon the whole parish, and carried to one general fund, and applied to the joint relief of all the poor of the parish. The parish is twenty miles in length, and eight miles in breadth. The Park quarter is one distinct constabulary, the Forest quarter one, and the Stanhope quarter one, and the Newlandside quarter consists of three constabularies, but these three constabularies compose one quarter only. In the 9 Geo. I., at the quarter sessions, it was ordered "that the several townships or constabularies of Stanhope, Fosterley, Newlandside, Eastgate, and Westgate, should separately maintain their own poor." From that time there have been separate appointments of overseers for each of the four quarters, and each has maintained its own poor separately, excepting that, about twelve years ago, two townships, called Bishopley and Fosterley, within Newlandside quarter, separated themselves from the rest of that quarter, and have ever since had separate overseers and maintained their own poor separately. Orders of removal had from time to time been made since 1729 to 1761, for the removal of poor persons from one of the quarters to another, and appeals made by one quarter against another.

Inability of a parish to have the benefit of 43 Eliz. the foundation of the right to a division.

Lord Mansfield said he had no doubt upon the first argument. The policy of 13 & 14 Car. II. was mistaken; it went upon a wrong principle. The divisions ought rather to be enlarged than diminished. As to the question itself, consider 1st, what was done; 2dly, upon what foundation. It ought to appear "that there was an inability in the parish to have the benefit of the act of 43 Eliz." Now here no such inability appears, but quite the contrary for a great number of years, so that there is no foundation for the division. The acquiescence under it was upon a false notion, "that the sessions had such a power," which they had not. And there is no inconvenience in setting right this wrong usage, which has obtained for forty years. In the case of Kentish Town, all the judges held "that the foundation of such a division of a parish must be an inability of having the benefit of 43 Eliz." Here the foundation is wanting.

Wilmot, J., also thought the larger the circle the better: therefore it would be more proper to enlarge than to lessen the divisions. The sessions do not seem to have had any sort of power to make such an order, therefore their order is a mere nullity. It was not made upon any appeal; but upon a motion made on behalf of some of the quarters and opposed by another. The subsequent usage for forty years cannot vary the right. For we cannot presume "that omnia ritè acta sunt;" because we see that it was founded upon this order of sessions, and it does not appear that the parish is so large that it cannot have the benefit of 43 Eliz. Therefore they ought to appoint running overseers over the whole parish.

Nor is a parish entitled to a separation, merely because its different districts lie each in different jurisdictions, or even counties. See Lane v. Cobham, infra, p. 18.

Situate in two counties.

Though it appears to be the policy of the law to discourage the division of parishes into separate districts, and even to promote their reunion, yet where the district is extra-parochial, or being part of a parish, it has maintained its own poor on a distinct account "time out of mind," or from a more modern date, if change of circumstances required the separation, it has a clear right to a distinct set of overseers.

5. Overseers.

Agreement by districts at the passing 13 & 14 Car. II. to separate, held proof that the parish could not reap full benefit of 43 Eliz.

Secus, an agreement having no reference to the benefit of the statute of Eliz.

Largeness of parish not the only criterion.

Districts separated at the time of 13 & 14 Car. II. may re-unite, though in two counties.

Of re-union of districts.

Separate appointments of overseers, with separate

Rex v. Walsall, 2 B. & A. 157. The two districts of which a parish consisted, had, from the 43 Eliz. down to the 13 & 14 Car. II., maintained their poor jointly, and, at the time of the passing of the latter act, agreed to separate in the maintenance of their poor, and that separate overseers should be appointed, upon condition that the rateable property in the parish, whether situated in the one or the other district, should be rated where the occupiers resided. In consequence of that agreement, they had ever since uniformly maintained their own poor separately, and had had separate overseers, constables, &c. The Court held, that this clearly showed that the parish, at the time of the agreement, could not reap the full benefit of the statute of Eliz., and that therefore the separation of the two districts was valid, and that an appointment of overseers for the whole parish was now bad. It was held also, that the agreement consisted of two distinct parts, and that the invalidity of the latter part, as to rating property not situated within the district rated, did not affect the question on the former part. Bayley, J., observed, that Rex v. Palmer, 8 East, 416, only decided that where a parish has, with the consent of all its districts, re-united itself, that re-union is valid in law.

In Bastock v. Ridgway, (6 B. & Cres. 494; 9 D. & R. 585, S. C.), Lord Tenterden remarked, "that in R. v. Walsall the separation took place very soon after 13 & 14 Car. II. Now there could be no legal separation between 43 Eliz. and 13 & 14 Car. II. But when we find that (as soon as an act of parliament makes a separation legal, in a case where the parish cannot have the benefit of the statute of Eliz.) such a separation actually takes place, that is abundant evidence that at and even before that time the parish could not have the benefit of the statute. But this inference by no means arises where (as in this case) the agreement was made in 1753." His lordship also observed "that he did not mean to say, because the largeness of the parish is expressly mentioned in the statute, that it is the only ground by which the benefit of the statute of Eliz. is not to be had, for that benefit might be lost by the superabundant population in a district not exceedingly large." Bayley, J., "It does not appear by that agreement that it was in consequence of the largeness of the parish that they could not receive the benefit of that statute. In 1690 the poor rate was an entire fund, and the agreement shows that the reason for separation was private disputes, and the principal one about some donations." The Court held that the townships were not legally divided.

Lane v. Cobham, 7 East, 1; and R. v. Palmer, 8 East, 416. The parish of Wokingham is situated in two counties, part called the liberty of Wilts, and part the liberty of Berks. It appeared that at the time of the 13 & 14 Car. II., and down to the year 1773, separate overseers had been appointed for each liberty, and separate rates. That in 1773, the liberties agreed to unite, and had been united ever since. Upon this evidence, the jury found that the parish could have the benefit of the statute of Eliz. And on a mandamus to review this decision, it was held that the districts might legally re-unite, and that in the exercise of their discretion they would not interfere with the management of the poor which had certainly prevailed for thirty-two years.

The re-union by agreement of districts or townships to the collective system of 43 Eliz. is equally valid, whether the townships at the date of the statute of Car. II., maintained their poor jointly, continued so united until more than a century afterwards, and then divided; or whether from the date of the statute Car. II. until their agreement to re-unite they have been constantly separate. The Court, therefore, will not disturb by appointment of separate overseers, a re-union thus effected, after a duration of thirty years. Nor probably, though much more recent. On the other hand, though there should be affidavits on behalf of one or more townships, that the parish might now, by re-union, reap the benefit of 43 Eliz., it does not seem likely that the Court would grant a mandamus against the wish of any other of the townships, to appoint overseers for the whole parish collectively. (Rex v. Leigh, 3 T. R. 746; 1 Bott, 58.)

Rex v. Sir Watts Horton, 1 T. R. 374. Where one or more, but not all, of eight several and distinct townships composing a parish, have obtained a separate appointment by mandamus, or have been accustomed to maintain their poor from separate funds, under circumstances authorising such separation, and the remaining townships have maintained their poor jointly, every one of them has a right to a separate appointment also, and the Court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus for the purpose; for the circumstances prove the inability of the parish to maintain its poor as a parish; that is, collectively out of one fund.

R. v. Salop, 3 B. & Ad. 910. The parish of H. consisted of three townships in the county of W. and certain townships and districts in the county of S. The townships in W. had always had their own overseers and relieved their own poor, but four overseers had been appointed for the division of the parish lying in S., and rates collected and applied for the relief of the poor of that division indiscriminately. On application by a township in the latter division for a mandamus to the justices of S. to appoint overseers for that township, pursuant to 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21, on the ground that the parish had not enjoyed and could not enjoy the benefit of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, facts being also stated to show the expediency of a separate appointment.

Lord Tenterden, C. J.—Looking at the parish of Hales Owen as a whole, it is clear there never, within memory, has been one set for the townships in Worcestershire and one for the part of the parish lying in Shropshire. Then the parties applying for the rule relied upon Rex v. Sir Watts Horton, which has been followed up in principle by several other cases. On the other hand, a case in Sir T. Raymond, p. 476, was referred to in the course of the argument, where a parish was situate partly in London and partly in Middlesex, each part having distinct officers, making distinct rates, and passing distinct accounts before the justices of the respective counties, and the question being as to the liability to maintain children who were left chargeable to one of the divisions, it was held that each division must be looked upon as a separate parish. We have looked into that case, and we think it is no authority to show that in every case in which a parish lies in two counties, each part may be considered as a separate parish. The case happened after the statute of Charles, and probably was no more than an application of the provisions of that statute to each part as a distinct township; at all events there is nothing in it calculated to raise any reasonable doubt on the application of Rex v. Horton to the case now before the Court. Rule absolute.

The principle of these determinations accords with the 59 Geo. III. c. 95, respecting towns corporate or franchises, which, after reciting that various towns corporate or franchises situate within one or more parish or parishes, and not co-extensive with the said parish or parishes, have heretofore and for a long time past been separately assessed from the parish or parishes in which they are situate, for the relief of the poor, and overseers of the poor for such town or franchise have been appointed distinct and apart from the overseers of the poor appointed for such parish or parishes, and whereas such separate and distinct assessments and appointments of overseers have, in many cases, been made without sufficient authority, and yet, by reason of the long continuance of the said separation, the towns corporate or franchise cannot now be re-united to the parish or parishes in which they are situate, without manifest inconvenience and hardship: enacts, "That from and after the passing of this act, all such separation of towns corporate or franchise, from the parish or parishes in which they are situate, together with the separate and distinct appointment of overseers of the poor, shall be deemed and taken to be lawful to all intents and purposes whatsoever, in the same manner as if the said separation or division had taken place under the authority of an act made in the forty-third year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled An Act for the relief of the poor: provided always nevertheless, that nothing in this act contained shall render legal or confirm any separation of a town corporate or franchise from the parish or parishes in which such town corporate or franchise is situate, in respect to the maintenance of the poor, or the appointment of overseers of the poor, in any case

Must not exceed four unless by special enactment.

2. WHAT NUMBER OF OVERSEERS MAY BE APPOINTED.

By the express words of the statute there must be four, three, or two overseers, and exclusive of the churchwardens. There must not be more than four, nor fewer than two, except where the parish is subdivided into townships, in which case each township may have four, three, or two overseers appointed. In some cases, particularly in larger towns, a greater latitude is given by some special statute; but no usage for a greater or smaller number than the 43 Eliz. prescribes will avail against the express terms of its enactment: and if more than four be appointed, the instrument is void as to every one of the persons appointed. (Rex v. Loxdale, 1 Burr. 446; Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550; Rex v. Clifton, 2 East, 168; Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143; Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 38; Rex v. Wymondham, 6 T. R. 552.)

III. s. 2, c. 111, s. 92, it was enacted that the then overseers of Woolwich should continue to be overseers for the year 1807, and until two other overseers should be appointed, in the manner and at the time by law directed, to succeed them; and within one month of Easter, in every year, two persons, being substantial householders, should be appointed, in the manner by law directed, to be overseers. By an order, on the 25th March, 1823, four persons therein named were appointed overseers of Woolwich; and the sessions confirmed that order. A rule was obtained for quashing the order. Abbott, C. J.—It is a general rule of construction, that affirmative words in a later statute do not repeal a former, unless there be something wholly inconsistent in the provisions of the two statutes. Lord C. B. Comyns, in his Digest, tit. Parliament, R. 25, lays it down that such affirmative words do not take away a former statute, unless they in sense contain a negative. Now the statute of Elizabeth directs that the overseers for parishes shall be four, three, or two substantial householders. The local act merely directs that the then overseers should continue in office to the end of the year, and until two others should be appointed, and that two others should be annually appointed. These words do not, in sense, contain a negative, nor is there any inconsistency between a provision authorizing the appointment of four, three, or two overseers, and another directing the appointment of two. The latter statute requires absolutely that two shall be appointed, but it does not say that more than two shall not be appointed. That being so, I am of opinion that the provision of the statute of Elizabeth, as to the appointment of overseers, is not repealed by the local act, and that the order of justices was right." Rex v. Poynder, 2 D. & R. 258; 1 B. & C. 178; 1 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 247. This was an indictment for refusing to take the office of overseer of St. Ann, Blackfriars, and the only question was, whether the defendant was a householder within the 43 Eliz. c. 2. The defendants, W. Hopson and Poynder the younger, were lime-merchants and co-partners, and owners of a dwelling-house and premises in St. Ann, but neither of them slept there, the defendant Poynder the younger dwelling at Clapham, and Hopson in the parish of Tottenham. One Medlicott, who managed the business for them, resided in the house. The rent, rates, and taxes, were paid by the firm.

(a) See Plowden, 112, 113; and Rex v. Burridge, 3 Peere W. 461.

Each of the partners frequented the premises daily, for the purpose of business, and the defendant had once voted at an election of a lecturer, which was a privilege belonging to resident householders. A verdict was found for the crown, and on a motion for a new trial Rex v. Hall was cited, 1 B. & C. 123; 2 D. & R. 241; 1 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 232, 259, S. C.; in which the Court of K. B. decided that one of several partners resorting daily for the purpose of business to a house rented by all, but which was inhabited by their servant, was a householder in the place where the house was situate, so as to qualify him to be a commissioner of a court of requests. The object of the statute in that case was to confer a privilege. It was also urged, that as the defendant was a householder in Clapham, he might be called upon to serve in two places at the same time, an office requiring personal attendance. Abbott, C. J.—When a similar question was under our consideration last term, we were not insensible that a distinction might be attempted to be made between those cases where the legislature intended to confer a benefit, and others where it intended to impose a burden. We were of opinion that there was no foundation for such a distinction, and that the same rule of construction ought to prevail in all cases. We have no doubt in this case that the defendant is a householder within the meaning of the statute of Eliz. It was in evidence that he had enjoyed one of the privileges of a resident householder, for he had voted for a lecturer, which was a privilege belonging to resident householders only. Bayley, J., observed, that a large number of houses in the metropolis are merely occupied by clerks or servants, but that is no reason why their owners should not be called upon to discharge those duties which fall upon other householders.—Holroyd, J., and Best, J., concurred. (a)

Donne v. Martyn, 8 B. & C. 62; 2 Man. & R. 98, S. C. On the interpretation of a local act, whereby the aldermen were authorized to appoint "some substantial inhabitant" collector of rates, Bayley, J., observed: "The word inhabitant may mean either occupier or resiant. The latter is the proper sense when it is used to denote persons, or when a personal (not a pecuniary) charge is to be imposed. R. v. Adlard. (a) Here a personal service is imposed. The duties are to be performed by personal attendance within the ward. It is more convenient that the duties should be executed by 'a resiant.' " The facts were similar to those in R. v. Poynder, but the Court held that he was not bound to perform this office.

Rex v. Weobly, 2 Str. 1261; 1 Bott, 5. The defendants were appointed overseers of Weobly by the style of principal inhabitants. It was moved to quash this appointment, because they were not described to be substantial householders. Et per Curiam.—The justices must certainly pursue the power given them, which is to appoint substantial householders, which is a much more limited description than inhabitants; for a man may be an inhabitant, and a principal inhabitant, and not be a householder; so this appointment is void.

The word "substantial" must be taken generally in its proper sense, but it is so far relative, that where there were no other persons to serve, two day-labourers with some land annexed to their cottages, of whom one only was a proprietor, and the other a farmer's servant, were held to be competent overseers, although the appointment of such men might be improper "in a place where there are a great many opulent farmers." (Rex v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 406.) And the phrase "substantial householders" has no reference to sex; although men are more proper to be appointed than women, where there are a sufficient number of men qualified; yet a woman may be appoint-

- Practising barristers and attornies, and officers of courts. 4. Practising barristers and attornies, (Gerard's case, 2 Sir W. Bl. 1123,) and officers of the superior courts, are privileged, though there be a special custom for every parishioner to serve, according to the situation of his house. (Rex v. Prouse, Cro. Car. 389; et vide 8 T. R. 379, note (a).) An officer of the Court of Exchequer, (Cawthorne v. Campbell, 1 Anst. 205, 216; 8 T. R. 376.)
- The clerk of the treasury of the Court of Common Pleas is bound to a personal attendance on his duties, and, therefore, is not compellable to serve the office. (Ex parte Jefferies, 6 Bing. 195; 3 M. & P. 450, S. C.) And these officers may be relieved by writ of privilege, (id. ibid.; 8 T. R. 377; 1 Chan. Rep. 196.)
- Physicians. 5. The president, commons, and fellows of the college of physicians, (whose exemption, however, extends no further than the city of London,) but apparently no other physicians. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 40. (See 1 Bott, 13.)
- Clergymen. 6. Clergymen, though without cure of souls, by reason of their order. (Anon., Gibs. Codex, 215; 6 Mod. 140.) (b)
- Dissenting ministers. 7. Dissenting ministers, taking the oaths and subscribing the declaration and articles pointed out by 1 W. & M. c. 18, although they be also engaged in a trade. 1 W. & M. c. 18, s. 11; 52 Geo. III. c. 155, s. 9. (Kenward v. Knowles, Willes, 463; 1 Gibs. Codex, 215.)
- Churchwardens. 8. Churchwardens during their continuance in office. (Rex v. All Saints, Derby, 13 East, 143.)
- Freemen of the surgeons in London. 9. Freemen of the company and corporation of surgeons, established by 18 Geo. II. c. 15, who have been examined and approved pursuant to the rules of the company, so long as they exercise surgery and no longer. 18 Geo. II. c. 15, s. 10.
- Apothecaries. 10. Apothecaries using their art in, or within seven miles of London, being free of the apothecaries' company (recognised by 6 & 7 W. III. c. 4),

(a) It seems to have been considered both by the bar and the bench, "that if the two offices were incompatible the consequence would be that the party would be discharged from that of overseer, as having been disqualified or exempted, and not from that of justice of peace as being vacated by the appointment of overseer." Parke, J., in giving the judgment of court in Rex v. Patterson, 4 B. & Ad. 23; 1 Nev. & M. 612, S. C.

(b) This point was not decided, for three judges being against C. J. Holt, who thought the clergymen not exempt, it was "to be stirred again." The quotation from Gibson relates to the office of churchwarden.

and having been examined and approved, and all persons using the said art in any other part of England, Wales, or Berwick-upon-Tweed, having served an apprenticeship of seven years according to the stat. 5 Eliz., so long as they exercise the art and no longer. 6 & 7 W. III. c. 4, s. 2, 3.

11. The sessions on appeal quashed the appointment of Gayer, because he was an acting justice, and a lieutenant of marines on half-pay, and there were other substantial householders. Lord Mansfield said, "it was not necessary to consider the general question of the incompatibility of the offices. The justices have a discretionary power, and although they have stated two reasons for their judgment, yet it did not follow that they considered either of these offices as an exemption or a disability." No opinion was given on the general question. (Rex v. Gayer, 1 Bott, 9; 1 Burr. 245.)

12. Officers of the customs, tide-waiters, exchequer, and all other revenue officers, both by reason, it should seem, of the incompatibility of the functions, and by reason of the exemption granted them by the king, who has power to exempt by patent, charter, or otherwise, not only from offices under the crown, but even from parochial offices. (Rex v. Warner, 8 T. R. 375; Raymond v. St. Botolph's, Aldgate, 2 Chan. Rep. 196; Cawthorne v. Campbell, 1 Anstr. 216. See also Rex v. Routledge, Doug. 531.) But these exemptions granted by the prerogative were available only where there were a sufficient number of persons to serve the office, without recourse to the individuals so exempted; (8 T. R. 379, note (a); Rex v. T. Clarke, 1 T. R. 686;) but by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, officers of customs and excise are absolutely exempt.

13. Yeomen in ordinary of the king's body guard. (Ibid.; Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 245.)

14. Serjeants, corporals, drummers, and privates of militia, from the time of their enrolment until they be regularly discharged; but there is no exemption enacted for the officers of that force. 42 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 174.

15. Captain in the guards cannot claim his privilege of attending on the king when appointed constable. (Hawk. 100.)

16. Dissenters scrupling to take the office, on account of the oaths or other matters required by law, repugnant to their peculiar religious opinions, are permitted to execute it by deputy, approved by such persons and in such manner as the principal should have been approved. 1 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 18, s. 7.

17. An immemorial custom to be exempted from all office, will exempt a person from this office, though it is an office created within legal memory. (See Littledale, J., in Farr v. Hollis, 9 B. & C. 338.)

18. Visiter of poor-house is exempt from all parochial offices, 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 10.

The exemption from parish and ward offices, given by the 10 & 11 W. III. c. 23, and 58 Geo. III. c. 70, to prosecutors of felons to conviction, no longer exists, those statutes having been repealed by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

Quære, if younger brothers of the Trinity-House are exempted. (See Charter King v. Clarke, 1 Term Rep. 679; Steer's Par. L. 331.)

Subject to these exemptions, the justices of the peace may appoint such householders as they in their discretion think meet. And they are no longer limited of necessity to householders residing in the parish or township; for the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 6, has provided, "that it shall be lawful for his majesty's justices of the peace, in their respective special sessions for the appointment of overseers of the poor, upon the nomination and at the request of the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, to appoint any person who shall be assessed to the relief of the poor thereof, and shall be a householder resident within two miles from the church or chapel of such parish, or where there shall be no church or chapel, shall be resident within one mile from the boundary of such parish, to be an overseer of the poor thereof, although the person so to be appointed shall not be a householder within the parish of which he shall be so appointed an overseer of the poor; and it shall be sufficient, in every such appointment, to describe the person ap-

appointed. (a)

4 & 5.—AT WHAT TIME AND BY WHOM TO BE APPOINTED. (a)

The 43 Eliz. provided that the overseers should be nominated early in Easter week, or within one month after Easter; but the 54 Geo. III. c. 91, provides, that the appointment of overseers of the poor shall in every year be made on the 25th day of March, or within fourteen days next after the said 25th day of March, in all and every the same manner as directed by the statute of Eliz. to be made in Easter week. As to the continuance in office till successor appointed, (b) post, 28.

An appointment on a Sunday is improper.

Any other day is more proper than Sunday to appoint overseers; though the circumstances of the officers being required by the 43 Eliz. to meet once a month on a Sunday, raises a doubt whether an appointment made on a Sunday may not be valid. Unless it be shown to have been made fairly, the fact of its having been made on a Sunday will incline the Court of K. B. against it, as affording a presumption that it was clandestine. (Rex v. Clerkenwell, Fol. 4; Rex v. Butler and others, 1 Bla. Rep. 649; Rex v. Overseers of Bridgewater, Cowp. 139.)

It has been repeatedly decided, that although ministerial acts may be performed on a Sunday, judicial acts done on that day are void: and the appointing overseers is clearly a judicial act. (Waite v. Stokes, God. 280; Swan v. Broome, affirmed on a writ of error in parliament, 3 Burr. 1595; Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 78. See 1 Chitty's Col. Stat. tit. Sunday.)

more appointments are made on the same day,
the first is valid.

Rex v. Serle, 1 Bott, 24. There were in this case two sets of overseers certified on the same day. It was objected that both of the appointments were for this reason void: as where two informations on a penal statute are made on the same day, both are void. (Hob. 209.) Sed non allocatur; for although in some judicial proceedings the law considers the day as entire, and knows no fraction; yet in a bond and release, and many other things, that fiction does not hold, and these niceties should not be allowed to overthrow such orders; and in R. v. Great Marlow it was held that the appointment which is prior in time is good, and the second void. The magistrates having made their appointment, their jurisdiction in that respect is at an end. (Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244.)

seded, except on
quarter sessions.

And the second appointment is invalid, though made only in consequence of a reasonable claim of exemption by the first appointees; unless where the first appointees are regularly discharged by the sessions on appeal, in which event it seems that the magistrates may constitute others in the place of those so discharged: for it then stands as if the full number had not been appointed at first, in which case the justices have jurisdiction to make a supplementary appointment, and the lapse of the fourteen days after the 25th of March does not, it is conceived, take away that jurisdiction. (Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244. See Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.)

(a) The 43 Eliz. c. 2, terms the investing a person with authority as overseer, a "nomination;" the 54 Geo. III. c. 91, calls it an "appointment." The magistrates alone can by law make the nomination or appointment, and no usage can entitle the parishioners to elect them. (3 T. R. 138, post, 26.) However it is usual for the magistrates to appoint the overseers out of a list selected by the parishioners assembled in vestry and to take those placed at the head; and under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 6 and 7 (post, 32, 33), the inhabitants are to select non-resident and assistant overseers, and whom the justices must appoint.—N. B. The acting as overseer is prima facie evidence that the party has been legally appointed. (Governor of Bristol v. Wait, 6 Car. & P. 595.)

(b) Whether the overseer virtually continues in office until successors have been appointed, and can make rates, see post, 28.

Rex v. Sparrow, 2 Sess. Ca. 140; 2 Str. 1123; 1 Bott, 34. The mandamus, in obedience to which the justices had appointed overseers, was issued after the month after Easter was expired, and it therefore appeared that the appointment was not within the month after Easter. Lee, C. J., (who delivered the opinion of the Court,) "As the justices are punishable by the act for not doing their duty, it would be a very hard construction to make the appointment itself void, for it would subject the parish to very great inconveniences for a thing which it is not in their power to prevent. To interpret an act of parliament, we must consider the mischief to be remedied, the remedy provided, and the true reason of that remedy. In this case, the defect is, the want of a proper officer to take care of the poor. The remedy is, that the justices shall appoint overseers, and that within such a time. Now the justices have neglected their duty, in not appointing overseers within the proper time, and by the act have forfeited 5*l.*, but that doth not make such appointment void. Were it the express direction of the act, that they should appoint in that and no other time, it would be otherwise; but here the statute^(a) is only directory, and a penalty inflicted on the justices for not following such directions."

5. Overseers.
4 & 5 When and by whom to be appointed.

If the appointment be made after the time limited it is not therefore void, the act being merely directory.

The appointment is to be made under the hand and seal of two or more justices, that is, out of quarter sessions; for the quarter sessions have no power to make it, as they have the determination of appeals against the appointment. (Rex v. Flag and Chilmerton, 1 Sess. Ca. 260; Fol. 7; 1 Bott, 21.)

Sessions cannot appoint overseers, because appeal is given.

If a parish is partly within a corporate jurisdiction and partly without, though all the overseers, when appointed, may act indiscriminately for the whole parish, yet the original appointment should be made by four justices, two for the part within the county at large, and two for the part within the corporate jurisdiction. (1 Nol. P. L. 45.)

Where the parish is part within and part without a corporation.

The overseers may be appointed by different instruments. (R. v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.)

Rex v. Houlditch, 1 Bott, 4. Two justices of Surrey had made an appointment of overseers for the parish of W., but it was not stated that the parish of W. was in the county of Surrey (according to the fact), or in any other county, and the Court held the order bad for this reason.

Must show the county.

In some of the ancient statutes, not now in force, as particularly the 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12, the justices were required to divide themselves, for the better execution of the regulations concerning the poor. And thence came the clause in the subsequent statute, that the justices of the division were to do such and such things. But as there is no law at present which requires them to divide for the aforesaid purposes, there is properly no division in the sense which the statutes intended; and consequently it cannot be necessary to set forth now that the justices are in or near the division.

Origin of term "Division."

In Rex v. Great Marlow, (2 East, 244,) it is said that the justices should be together when the appointment is made.

6. PENALTY ON JUSTICES FOR NOT APPOINTING OVERSEERS, &c.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 10, if in any place there shall be no such nomination of overseers as is before appointed, every justice of the division shall forfeit 5*l.* to the poor of such place, to be levied by the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, by distress by warrant from the sessions.

6. Penalty on Justices, &c.

As the penalty is required to be levied by the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, there should be a mandamus to make the appointment, and the penalty attaches for the omission to appoint at the time required.

The forfeiture being imposed upon every justice of the division, proceeds (it is said) upon the supposition of the justices being obliged to divide; (see supra;) for in that case the appointment was to be by the justices in or near the division, and not otherwise; but now the justices at large are all equally concerned: and therefore it seemeth, that this penalty cannot now be levied on the justice of any particular district, but the more reasonable construction is, that all are liable. The language of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, is plainly to this effect; see Rex v. Price, Cald. 305; Rex v. Skinn, and Rex v. Baker, 1 Bott, 527, 528; Rex v. Grose, Comb. 289; Rex v. Woodsterton, 1 Bott, 464; St. John v. St. John, Hob. 78.

7. Mode and

7. MODE AND FORMS OF APPOINTMENT.

In considering the mode of appointing, and the form and execution of the instrument by which such appointment is authenticated, it may be observed that the churchwardens require no specific appointment by the justices in order to give them the authority of overseers; for they become so by 43 Eliz. in virtue of their office of churchwarden. But the other overseers become so by specific appointment of the justices; and no usage, however ancient, will entitle the parishioners to elect them. (Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 138.)

With a view to the selection of proper persons for the office, two justices ought to issue a precept to the high constable, directing him to require the petty constables to enjoin all the overseers within their respective constablewicks to deliver in a list of qualified inhabitants within a certain time. The form of precept of warrant and proceedings thereon will be found in the Appendix.

The appointment must be in writing under the seals of the justices. (Rex v. Arnold, 1 Str. 101.) See the form of appointment in Appendix.

Parts of appoint-

County.

The name of the county or other smaller jurisdiction for which the justices act should be set forth in some part of the order, that the parish or township for which the appointment is made may appear to be within their jurisdiction; for those who act under a jurisdiction given by act of parliament must show that jurisdiction, since, in a matter of jurisdiction, the Court will intend nothing. (Rex v. Holbeck in Leeds, Burr. Sett. C. 198; Rex v. Stepney, Burr. Sett. C. 23; Rex v. Chilvers Coton, 8 T. R. 178; Rex v. Houl-ditch, ante, 25.)

tices.

The act requires that the appointment shall be by two justices at least: the number, therefore, must be shown, that the appointment may appear to have been made by a competent authority: however, if there be more than one signature, the omission of the number in the body of the order would not vitiate an appointment thus prima facie made by more than one justice.

Must show they are justices.

But it would be insufficient for them to say, We do hereby nominate, without describing themselves as justices; for then there would be no jurisdiction apparent. And this defect will not be cured even after confirmation of the original instrument on appeal, by calling them justices in the order of sessions: as they might have been justices at the time of making the order of sessions, and yet not at the time of making the original instrument. (Walton v. Chesterfield, 5 Mod. 322; Rex v. Woodford, 1 Bott, 434.)

Of the peace.

It seems also insufficient to say merely justices of the county, without stating them to be of the peace, though the words "of our lord the king" may be omitted without prejudice. (Haw. P. C. B. 2, c. 8, s. 32; title Justices of the Peace, Vol. III.) And where the appointment is by magistrates acting for a limited jurisdiction, the justices should show precisely on the face of the order to what liberty they belong. (Rex v. Dobbyn, 2 Salk. 474.) But they need not describe themselves as dwelling in or near the parish or division. (Rex v. Sparrow, 2 Sess. Ca. 140.) Nor is it now strictly necessary that it should be stated that one of them is of the quorum; but it is still requisite that one of them in fact be of the quorum, except where there is but one justice of the quorum in the whole jurisdiction, in which case the acts of two justices are valid, though neither be of the quorum. (See 26 Geo. III. c. 27; 7 Geo. III. c. 21; and 4 Geo. IV. c. 27. See the term quorum explained, ante, Vol. II. title "Justices.")

Appointments may be by separate instruments.

Though not indispensable, the most eligible way is to appoint all the overseers by the same instrument; and this is the customary mode of proceeding. However, although there must be more than one overseer appointed for a district, there is no law that says there shall be an appointment of two or more overseers by one instrument. (Rex v. Besland, 1 Bott, 26; Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550; Rex v. Clifton, 2 East, 168.) If more than four be appointed, the instrument is invalid as to every one of the appointees. (Rex v. Wymondham, 6 T. R. 553.)

5. Overseers.
7. Mode and forms of appointment.

The old form describes the appointees as being substantial householders of and in the parish (or township,) and it is proper to pursue this form where they are in fact resident within the parish or township, and their description as being substantial must be inserted in the body of the instrument, for so to describe them at the foot merely will not suffice. (Rex v. Weobly, 2 Str. 1261.) But if any one of the overseers appointed is not such a householder, but is a householder resident out of the parish or township, (59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 6 & 35, ante, 23,) it is sufficient to describe the person appointed by his name and residence. In the appointment, "principal inhabitants," instead of substantial householders, is an insufficient description. (Rex v. Weobly, Stra. 1261.) It is proper too to say, householders in the parish of E., or if the name of the parish, and of that parish only, have occurred before in the same instrument, then at least to say householders there. (Rex v. Weobly, supra.) A parish must be called a parish, and a township must be called a township, or a village, those being the terms used by the statute; or, which is in common acceptation synonymous, a hamlet or vill. (Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.) These descriptions cannot be supplied by intendment, and are so strictly required, that the order will be void if the parish or township be designated as such only under an alias, as the precinct of the Tower, otherwise called the parish of St. Peter ad vincula. (Rex v. Severn and Arnold, Say, 278.) Where the appointment is for a township, it is not sufficient that the overseer appointed be a householder in the parish of which that township is a district; he must also (a) be a householder in that particular township: but if he be described in the appointment merely as a householder in the parish, he shall be intended a householder in the vill for which he is appointed. (Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550; 1 Bott, 6.)

Substantial householders of the district.

Of parish, &c.

As the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 6 & 35, provides that no out-dweller shall be appointed, unless he shall have consented to such appointment, it seems proper to add, after naming and describing him, "who has consented to this appointment," by way of showing the jurisdiction.

If an out dweller.

The persons are to be described as "Overseers," and where persons were appointed to set the poor to work, &c., mentioning the several duties in the act, but were not in express terms appointed overseers, the appointment was quashed. (Rex v. St. George, Fort. 320; 1 Bott, 2.)

Must be styled "overseers."

It is usual to state that they are appointed together with the Churchwardens thereof. These words, however, are not essential; for "when overseers are once legally appointed, they are by operation of law joined with the churchwardens of the parish for which they are appointed." (Rex v. Searle, 1 Bott, 1.)

Together with churchwardens.

If the whole number has not been appointed by the first instrument, the justices may, it seems, add the rest by one or more supplementary appointments. (Rex v. Besland, 1 Bott, 21; Rex v. Morris, 4 T. R. 550.)

Supplementary appointment.

The words "For the present year," are proper at whatever period the appointment is made, the form in this respect being construed to signify, from the present time till the next season allowed by law for the appointment of overseers; and this is so, though "at this present time" the proper period has gone by; for the year here means the overseers' year. (Rex v. Sparrow, 1 Bott, 34; Rex v. Helling, 3 Burr. 1905.) The following forms have, on the same construction, been sustained by the Court: "for this present year, 1766." (Rex v. Helling, ibid.) "For a whole year." (Rex v. Great Marlow, Fol. 5; Rex v. Jones, 1 Bott, 35.) "For one year next ensuing."

For what time.

(a) This was before 59 Geo. III. c. 12.

5. Overseers.
8. Mode and

pointment.

Justices must meet and concur.

It has been considered requisite, that the signing and sealing of the justices should be in each other's presence; for the function is not merely ministerial, like the allowance of a rate, but judicial; and the magistrates ought therefore to confer, and the result of their conference should be the ground of their determination, according to the general rule, that where a statute requires the concurrence of two magistrates, they should both act together. (Rex v. Arnold, 1 Str. 101; Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244.) But from the analogy of a more recent case, upon a warrant signed by commissioners of bankrupts, it may be inferred that the rule is satisfied if the magistrates have in fact duly conferred together and agreed what shall be done, leaving the acts of signing and sealing to be performed by them asunder at a subsequent time. (Battye v. Gresley and others, 8 East, 327.)

8. APPOINTMENT OF FRESH OVERSEER IN CASE OF DEATH, REMOVAL, OR INSOLVENCY, AND OF THE DURATION OF OVERSEERS' OFFICE.

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3, enacts, "That if any such overseer shall die, or remove from the place for which he is appointed, or become insolvent, before the expiration of his office, on oath thereof made, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace to appoint another overseer in his stead, who shall continue in office until new overseers are appointed: and if any overseer shall remove as aforesaid, he shall before such removal deliver over to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place, his accounts verified as aforesaid, with all rates, assessments, books, papers, sums of money, and other things concerning his office, under the like penalties as are inflicted by this act on an overseer refusing to do the same after the expiration of his office; and if any overseer shall die as aforesaid, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after his decease, deliver over all things concerning his office to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place; and shall pay out of the assets left by such overseer, all sums of money remaining due, which he received by virtue of his said office, before any of his other debts are paid and satisfied."

Overseers, who continue solvent and resident, remain in office until the arrival of the period limited for the appointment of their successors. (Rex v. Sparrow, 1 Bott, 34.) But not longer, even though no successors be appointed; nor, as it seems, does the authority even of the churchwardens, as overseers, continue beyond the expiration of the overseers' term, though "liable to be revived by the appointment of new overseers, if the churchwardens continue in office beyond the overseers' regular year." (Vide 1 Nol. P. L. p 59.)

pointment.

9. MEANS TO OBTAIN AND TO ENFORCE OR AVOID AN APPOINTMENT, AND OF APPEALS.

If the magistrates will not make an appointment within the proper time, a mandamus may be obtained from the Court of King's Bench to compel them.

If however the justices have made a valid appointment, and the parties refuse to take the office upon them, it may be enforced against them by indictment. (a)

(a) The person is overseer completely by the appointment under the hand and seal of the magistrates, until upon appeal the sessions have allowed his excuse, or the court of King's Bench have pronounced his appointment void; but its invalidity seems a good answer to an indictment, and may be taken advantage of by demurrer, where its insufficiency appears on the face of the indictment

The district of Borough Fen is extra-parochial. It contains a considerable population; and it had been for some time the practice for the inhabitants to support the poor requiring relief, who were resident among them, by rates, &c. Overseers had been in several instances appointed, who discharged the ordinary duties of that office. But the liability of the inhabitants within the district to pay rates for this purpose being at length disputed, the magistrates appointed overseers, and a motion was now made in full Court for a certiorari to bring up such appointment, for the purpose of moving that it be confirmed, and thus obtaining the decision of the Court, whether, under all the circumstances, overseers could be legally appointed for the district. Both parties were anxious for, and ready to abide by, the judgment of the Court; and a note in 4 Burn's Justice, 26, was relied upon, which says, "The law has likewise permitted a confirmation of the appointment by the Court of King's Bench, on a motion to that effect, when it is brought up by certiorari;" and Rex v. Standard Hill, 4 M. & S. 382, was also referred to. The Court, however, said that they were not aware of any instance in which such an application had been granted with a view to confirm the appointment, though there were many cases in which an appointment of overseers had been moved into this Court for the purpose of quashing it, as was done in Rex v. Standard Hill, to which reference had been made; the rule was therefore refused. (Rex v. Justices of the liberty of Peterborough, Trin. K. B. 1830; Steer's Par. L. 623.)

5. Overseers.
9. Means to obtain an Appointment, &c.

K. B. will not confirm an appointment.

When the appointment is void, the objection to it may be taken on an indictment for refusal to take the office, or in an action for distraining under a rate made by such officers. The appointment may be directly impeached by appeal either by the overseers themselves, or by any of the parishioners. (Hinton v. Pawle, Cro. Car. 92; Lane v. Cobham, 7 East, 1; Rudd v. Foster, 4 Mod. 157; Tracy v. Talbot, 2 Salk. 532.)

Resisting appointment.

An appeal was given against the appointment itself, by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, which provides, that if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any act done by the said justices, he may appeal to the general quarter sessions, whose order therein shall bind all parties. (Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244.)

Appeal against appointment.

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38 s. 4, gives an appeal to the party grieved by any rate, or by overseer's accounts, or by an act done by the overseers, or by any justices, and in two cases relating to a poor rate, and one to the accounts of overseers, it has been decided that in those cases this provision of Elizabeth was repealed; and the appeal must in all cases be to the next quarter sessions after the party is aggrieved. (Rex v. Coode, 1 Bott, 290; Rex v. Micklefield, 1 Bott, 291; Rex v. Worcester, 5 M. & S. 457.) It may be doubtful if this applies to the appointment of overseers.

The appeal may be by any parishioner. (Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. 38.)

By the words, the "next sessions," (a) the next "possible sessions" are intended. (See Rex v. Justices of Sussex, 15 East, 207; Rex v. Justices of Essex, 1 B. & Ald. 210.) It is advisable for the appellant to serve each of the justices who have made the appointment, and each of the other parish officers with whom he is nominated to act, with a copy of the notice of appeal, containing the grounds of his appealing, which must be done on or before the last day allowed for notices of appeal, by the practice of the sessions for the county where the case is to be heard. If the appointment were made by persons who were not justices, no appeal is necessary, for that is a nullity; but if the party do appeal in such case, and call the persons in question in his notice by the title of justices, he concludes himself, and cannot be heard to urge that itself. (Rex v. Pardy, 1 Bott, 380; Rex v. Burder, 4 T. R. 778.) It would probably be necessary on such an indictment to prove that he had received notice of his appointment: for such notice is requisite even to warrant a conviction before two justices in penalties under 43 Eliz. for neglect of his office, where notice seems the less important, inasmuch as such a conviction must allege the defendant to have accepted the office, which implies that he must have had notice. (Rex v. Harman, 1 Bott, 376.)

(b) See Vol. I. title "Appeal," as to what are "next" sessions, and post.

5. Overseers.

9. Means to obtain an Appointment, &c.

On appeal against order of removal the appointment for an extra-parochial place may be questioned.

Certiorari.

An appointment of overseer removed into the court of B. R. by certiorari.

Question, whether a township or vill, without appealing to the quarter sessions.

Mandamus to appoint.

they are not so; though an appointment by persons not justices is void ipso facto, without appeal, yet, where the effect of jurisdiction is merely that neither of the justices is of the quorum, the proper way to obtain the avoidance of the appointment is by appealing. (Rex v. Fisher, and Rex v. Towill, Cald. 135; 1 Bott, 72; Albrighton v. Skipton, 1 Str. 300.)

If the appointment is void, it may be questioned collaterally in an appeal against an order of removal, made to an extra-parochial place having no officers, or to a township or other minor district, when it ought to have been made to the parish at large; or, probably, to a parish at large when it ought to have been to one of the townships in that parish. (Rex v. Denham, Burr. S. C. 35; Dolting v. Stokelane, Fort. 219; Rex v. Tamworth, Cald. 28; 1 Bott, 156; Rex v. Swalcliffe, Cald. 248; 2 Bott, 896.) Another mode, the converse of the last, is an appeal against an order of removal made from a wrong district. (Forest of Dean v. Parish of Linton, 2 Salk. 487.)

The validity of the appointment of overseers for a parish or vill may be tried in a distress for a poor rate made by them, as in Lane v. Cobham, (7 East, 1.) But by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 8, the distress is not unlawful for any defect of form in the warrant of appointment. The appointment may be removed into K. B. by certiorari, at any time before the expiration of the year for which it was made; but it seems not afterwards. Upon which the Court will go into the consideration, not only of prima facie defects, but of extrinsic objections appearing by affidavit. (Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244. See Rex v. Butler, 1 Bla. Rep. 649.) And this may be done without appealing against it to the sessions; and the Court will go into the question upon affidavit, whether the place for which the appointment is made be a township or vill, and if it appear by the affidavits that it is not, and be not stated to be such, or that it is reputed to be such, the Court will quash the appointment. (See facts of Rex v. Standard Hill, ante, 14, 4 M. & S. 244.) It will also happen in some cases, that a motion for a mandamus, to be directed to two justices of the neighbourhood, commanding them to appoint overseers for the proper district, will be the proper method of disputing the propriety of an appointment. But according to Mr. Nolan, (1 Nol. P. L. 37, note (4),) it is not applicable to improper appointments for extra-parochial places. The custody of the instrument of appointment belongs to the overseers. (Rex v. Stoke Golding, 1 B & Ald. 173.)

10. THE POWERS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF OVERSEERS.

10. Powers, Duties, and Liabilities of Overseers.

The nature of the powers and duties of an overseer depends altogether upon the circumstance whether his parish is,

First, Without a select vestry, or guardians; or,

Secondly, Whether it is under a select vestry; or,

Thirdly, Whether it is under guardians; and each of these deserve a separate consideration.

First, Where there is not any select vestry or guardians, the overseers were directed by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1 & 2, to take order from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more such justices of peace as is aforesaid, for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not, by the said churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, be thought able to keep and maintain their children: and also for setting to work all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by: and also to raise, weekly or otherwise, (by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish, in such competent sum and sums of money as they shall think fit) a convenient stock of flax, hemp, wool, thread, iron, and other necessary ware and stuff, to set the poor on work: and also competent sums of money for and towards the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor, and not able to work, and also for the putting out of such children to be apprentices, to be gathered out of the same parish, according to the ability of the same parish, and to do and execute all other things, as well for the disposing of the said stock, as otherwise concerning the premises as to them shall seem convenient:"

Who shall be taxed towards the relief of the poor.

A convenient stock shall be provided to set the poor on work.

"II. Which said churchwardens and overseers so to be nominated, or such of them as shall not be let by sickness or other just excuse, to be allowed by two such justices of the peace or more as is aforesaid, shall meet together at the least once every month in the church of the said parish, upon the Sunday, in the afternoon after divine service, there to consider of some good course to be taken, and of some meet order to be set down in the premises; upon pain that every one of them absenting themselves without lawful cause as aforesaid, from such monthly meeting for the purpose aforesaid, or being negligent in their office, or in the execution of the orders aforesaid, being made by and with the assent of the said justices of peace, or any two of them before mentioned, to forfeit for every such default of absence or negligence twenty shillings."

The power of the overseers extends over the whole parish, but there may be a subdivison of the parish by the overseers themselves as a matter of arrangement. In such cases, the accounts form only an entire parochial account. (Malkin v. Vickerstaff, 3 B. & A. 189; and see 1 Bar. & Adol. 1; 3 Bar & Adol. 941; 3 Maule & Selw. 471; Eaden v. Tilchmarsh, 1 Adol. & Ell. 691.) But where there is such a subdivison, the overseers are responsible for the malversation of each other. (Rex v. Justices of Essex, 3 B. & Adol. 941.) And, indeed, an overseer, as an inhabitant, may appeal against his co-overseer's accounts. (Rex v. Justices of Gloucestershire, 1 B. & Adol. 1.) Under the statute of Eliz. it was the duty of the overseers to obtain and give employment, at reasonable wages, for able-bodied persons who are unable to obtain employment for themselves (Rex v. Collett, 2 Bar. & Cres. 324; 3 D. & R. 582, S. C. post); and to give pecuniary relief only to the sick and impotent. The general care and management of the poor was vested in them, subject only to some controul from the justices of the peace.

An overseer is not bound to take precautionary measures against the small pox, by causing the poor to be vaccinated. And even if the overseer has, by the direction of the vestry, agreed that the poor shall be vaccinated at the expense of the parish, and refuses to fulfil that agreement, the Court will not grant a criminal information against him: although in consequence of his conduct the infection of the small-pox has spread, and many of the poor have died. (Anon., 5 Nev. & Man. 12; Trinity Term, 1835.)

Where, however, a select vestry has been constituted under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, the overseers were to give no relief, but such as should be ordered by the vestry.

Wherever a parish, or united parishes, adopted the provisions of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and appointed guardians, that statute expressly enacts, that "neither the churchwardens or overseers shall interfere or intermeddle in the care and management of the poor, but shall continue to have the same powers of making and collecting rates, as they had at that time." (See ante, Vol. II. title "Guardians," and as to relief in cases of emergency, see title, "Relief," post.)

These words do not, however, transfer the power of binding out apprentices from the overseers to the guardians, for where a parish had adopted the provisions of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and the overseer had executed the indenture, and not the guardian, C. J. Abbot said, "I am of opinion that this binding was valid. The 7th section of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, is calculated to raise a doubt upon the point, for it excludes the interference of the churchwardens and overseers in the care and management of the poor, where guardians are appointed. If there was nothing else in the act to guide us, it might be difficult to say that they could interfere in binding parish apprentices. But in subsequent parts of the statute various powers are expressly given to guardians of the poor; and by the 30th section they are authorized to provide for poor children until they arrive at a proper age to be placed out, when they are to be bound out according to the laws then existing; one of these laws was the 43 Eliz. c. 2, directing that parish apprentices should be bound out by the churchwardens and overseers. And it is better that a binding should take place by several churchwardens and overseers than by one guardian." (R. v. Lutterworth, 3 B. & C. 487; 5 D. & R. 343.)

And now, where guardians are appointed under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, we have seen that the statute has transferred to them the general care of the poor. Still the overseers in every union shall make, assess, and collect all rates for the necessary relief of the poor, and for defraying all other charges and expences chargeable on the same; and they are to pay to the common fund such sums as the guardians shall direct. They are to provide a rate-book in the form prescribed by the rules.

By the 54th section they are empowered, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, to give temporary relief in articles of necessity, but not in money; and the rules require that they should endeavour to procure the relieving officer to give it; and in all cases the same must be reported to the relieving officer. Should the overseer refuse relief in cases of necessity, a justice of the peace may order it; and the overseer is liable to a penalty.

In the event of a vacancy in the office of relieving officer, or delay in the appointment of a substitute during sickness, and until the first relieving officer is appointed, all the duties belonging to the office are to be performed by the overseer of the parish. R. 16.

6. Appointment of Officers with Salaries.

The overseers and guardians having a duty imposed on them by law, are not entitled to any remuneration for their services, but it has been found expedient to provide for the payment of a salary to assistant overseers. And by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, to nominate and elect any discreet person or persons to be assistant overseer or overseers of the poor of such parish, and to determine and specify the duties to be by* or them executed and performed, and to fix such yearly salary for the execution of the said office as shall by such inhabitants in vestry be thought fit; and it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace, and they are hereby empowered, by warrant under their hands and seals, to appoint any person or persons who shall be so nominated and elected to be assistant overseer or overseers of the poor, for such purposes, and with such salary, as shall have been fixed by the inhabitants in vestry; and such salary shall be paid out of the money raised for the relief of the poor, at such times and in such manner as shall have been agreed upon between the inhabitants in vestry and the respective persons so to be appointed; and every person to be so appointed assistant overseer shall be and he is hereby authorised and empowered to execute all such of the duties of the office of overseer of the poor as shall in the warrant for his appointment be expressed in like manner and as fully, to all intents and purposes, as the same may be executed by any ordinary overseer of the poor; and every person or persons so appointed shall continue to be an assistant overseer of the poor until he or they shall resign such office, or until his or their appointment shall be revoked by the inhabitants of the parish in vestry assembled, and no longer; and it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish, upon the nomination and election by them of an assistant overseer or overseers, to require and take security for the faithful execution of his or their office, by bond, with or without a surety or sureties, and in such penalty as they shall think fit; and every such bond shall be made to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and may, on any breach of the condition thereof, be put in suit by and in the names of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, by the direction of the vestry or select vestry, for the benefit of the parish, in the manner hereinafter provided."

Sect. 35. The same provision as to the election of an assistant overseer is extended to all townships, vills, and places having separate overseers, and maintaining their poor separately.

By the Stamp Act (55 Geo. III. c. 184, tit. "Grant,") any appointment in writing to an office or employment, where the yearly salary does not amount to 50*l.* a-year, must be stamped; an appointment to the office of assistant overseer, at a salary of 10*l.*, is therefore within the very words of the act, and requires a 2*l.* stamp. Security may be taken.

Appointment must be stamped.

PAID OFFICERS, UNDER 4 & 5 WILL. IV. c. 76, s. 46.

The appointment of paid officers will for the future be almost, if not altogether, regulated by the 46th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, which enacts, that the commissioners may direct the overseers or guardians to appoint paid officers with such qualifications as the commissioners shall think necessary for superintending or assisting in the administration of the relief and employment of the poor, and for auditing the accounts, and otherwise carrying the act into execution; and the commissioners are empowered to define the duties of such officers, their continuance in office, and the security to be given, and to regulate the salaries of such officers, and such salaries shall be payable out of the poor rates.

Commissioners may direct overseers and guardians to appoint paid officers for parishes or unions; and fix their duties, and the mode of appointment and dismissal, and the security; and regulate their salaries.

In pursuance of the authority here given to the commissioners, they have directed that in each union, at the first meeting of the guardians, or within one month after the same, the guardians shall appoint a fit and proper person to be clerk to the board of guardians, and a fit and proper person to be treasurer to the said union, and shall take such security for the proper discharge of the said office of treasurer as shall seem to them necessary and fitting; and shall also appoint such and so many competent person or persons as the said board of guardians shall think fit, to be relieving officer or relieving officers of the said union, and shall likewise determine the parishes or places for which each such relieving officer shall act; and in case and so often as any person so appointed shall die, or resign, or be removed, the said board of guardians shall, as soon as conveniently may be after such death, resignation, or removal, proceed in like manner to a new appointment; and the salaries of such clerk, treasurer, or relieving officers, shall be such as the said poor law commissioners shall from time to time direct.—R. 14.

Appointment of clerk, treasurer, relieving officer.

Salary.

The 15th and 16th sections provide for the discharge of the duties of clerk and relieving officer, in cases of vacancy or sickness; and by R. 17, no person shall be chosen as such relieving officer unless he will undertake to reside in one of the parishes for which he may be appointed to act, and to devote his whole time to the employment, not following any other trade or profession whatsoever, nor unless he can read and write and keep accounts.

7. Of Select Vestries under authority of 59 Geo. III. c. 12.

Parishes enabled to establish select vestries for concerns of the poor.

The care and management of the poor may be placed under the direction of a SPECIAL VESTRY, for the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 1, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish, in vestry assembled, and they are hereby empowered, to establish a select vestry for the concerns of the poor of such parish; and to that end to nominate and elect, in the same or any subsequent vestry, or any adjournment thereof respectively, such and so many substantial householders or occupiers within such parish, not exceeding the number of twenty nor less than five, as shall in any such vestry be thought fit to be members of the select vestry; and the rector, vicar, or other minister of the parish, and in his absence the curate thereof, (such curate being resident in and charged to the poor's rates of such parish,) and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, together with the inhabitants who shall be nominated and elected as aforesaid, (such inhabitants being first thereto appointed by writing under the hand and seal of one of his Majesty's justices of the peace, which appointment he is hereby authorized and required to make,) shall be and constitute a select vestry for the care and management of the concerns of the poor of such parish; and any three of them (two of whom shall neither be churchwardens nor overseers of the poor) shall be a quorum; and when any inhabitant elected and appointed to serve in any such select vestry shall, before the expiration of his office, die or remove from the parish, or shall become incapable of serving, or shall refuse or neglect to serve therein, the vacancy which shall be thereby occasioned shall, as soon as conveniently may be, be filled up by the election and appointment, in manner aforesaid, of some other substantial householder or occupier of such parish, and so from time to time as often as any such vacancy shall occur; and every such select vestry shall continue and be empowered to act from the time of the appointment thereof until fourteen days after the next annual appointment of overseers of the poor of the parish shall take place, and may be from year to year, and in any future year, renewed in the manner hereinbefore directed; and every such select vestry shall meet once in every fourteen days, and oftener if it shall be found necessary, in the parish church, or in some other convenient place within the parish; and at every such meeting a chairman shall be appointed by the majority of the members present, who shall preside therein; and in all cases of equality of votes upon any question there arising, the chairman shall have the casting-vote; and every such select vestry is hereby empowered and required to examine into the state and condition of the poor of the parish, and to inquire into and determine upon the proper objects of relief, and the nature and amount of the relief to be given; and in each case shall take into consideration the character and conduct of the poor person to be relieved, and shall be at liberty to distinguish, in the relief to be granted, between the deserving and the idle, extravagant, or profligate poor; and such select vestry shall make orders in writing for such relief as they shall think requisite, and shall inquire into and superintend the collection and administration of all money to be raised by the poor's rates, and of all other funds and money raised or applied by the parish to the relief of the poor; and where any such select vestry shall be established, the overseers of the poor are required, in the execution of their office, to conform to the directions of the select vestry, and shall not (except in cases of sudden emergency or urgent necessity, and to the extent only of such temporary relief as each case shall require, and except by order of justices, in the cases hereinafter provided for,) give any further or other relief or allowance to the poor, than such as shall be ordered by the select vestry."

Rex v. Woodman, 4 B. & A. 507. The parish of Morpeth, beyond the period of living memory, has been managed by a select vestry, consisting of twenty-four persons. The inhabitants constituting the select vestry have generally continued in office for life, unless they happened to leave the parish or declined to serve. None of the inhabitants, besides the twenty-four, and the rector or curate, ever attended these vestry meetings. A notice was duly given that a meeting of the twenty-four gentlemen would be held for the establishing of a select vestry, and a meeting was accordingly held; at which meeting the defendant and nineteen other substantial householders or occupiers within the township were nominated and elected to be members of such select vestry, and an order of a magistrate was subsequently made, by which such twenty persons were appointed to act as a select vestry for the care and management of the poor. Abbott, C. J. "I am clearly of opinion, that the

A select vestry for the management of the parish affairs existing by ancient custom, cannot elect another select vestry for the management of the poor within the 59 G. 3, c. 12.

(a) There must, it seems, be a majority of select vestrymen present to constitute a valid meeting, as it is a general rule, that where a public trust is to be executed by a definite number of persons, it must be executed at a meeting where a majority of that number is present, unless there be a usage or custom to the contrary; and where by certain statutes the commissioners for enlarging churches appointed twenty-six persons to be a select vestry, for the care and management of the church, it was held, that to constitute a good assembly of such vestry, a majority (viz. fourteen) must be present. Blacket v. Blizzard, 9 B. & C. 851. The words of these statutes resemble those of the above statute. A Common-law vestry consists of an indefinite number; and therefore this rule does not apply to them.

By the 38th sect. of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, it is provided, that "no act of any such meeting (i. e. of the guardians of the union) shall be valid, unless three members shall be present and concur therein."

sixteen persons who constituted the ancient select vestry for the township of Morpeth, cannot be considered the inhabitants of the parish in vestry assembled, within the meaning of the 59 Geo. III. c. 12. The power to appoint a select vestry is expressly given to the inhabitants in vestry assembled; and here it was exercised, not by the inhabitants in vestry assembled, but by certain persons possessing some of the powers of the inhabitants in vestry assembled. It is not necessary in this case to decide what the inhabitants may do, but I have no difficulty in saying that in my opinion the inhabitants at large may assemble and appoint a select vestry for the care and management of the poor, not interfering with any of the rights of the ancient select vestry. The rule for quashing the order must therefore be made absolute."

Clarke v. King, 2 Younge & J. 525. Wherever a select vestry is appointed, the right of the common-law vestry has always, in practice, been considered as de facto superseded; and the language of this act of parliament appears to confer upon that body the authority relative to the care and management of the poor, which the parishioners at large were before in the habit of exercising. It is optional with the parishioners, whether they will or will not proceed upon the old law, or upon the provisions of the statute, by the appointment of a select vestry; but if they pursue the latter course, they delegate their authority to that body. It follows that the consent of a select vestry, constituted under this act, is sufficient to render valid a contract under 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, for the lodging, keeping, and maintaining the poor of a parish.

Sect. 2. "That when any complaint shall be made to any justice of the peace, of the want of adequate relief, by or on the behalf of any poor inhabitant of any parish for which a select vestry shall be established by virtue of this act, or in which the relief of the poor is or shall be under the management of guardians, governors, or directors, appointed by virtue of special or local acts, such justice shall not proceed therein, or take cognizance thereof, unless it shall be proved on oath before him that application for such relief hath been first made to, and refused by, the select vestry, or by such guardians, governors, or directors; and in such case, the justice, to whom the complaint shall be made, may summon the overseers of the poor, or any of them, to appear before any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace, to answer the complaint; and if, upon the hearing thereof, it shall be proved on oath, to the satisfaction of the justices who shall hear the same, that the party complaining, or on whose behalf the complaint shall be made, is in need of relief, and that adequate relief hath been refused by the select vestry, or by such guardians, governors, or directors, or that such select vestry shall not have assembled as by this act directed, it shall be lawful for such justices to make an order, under their hands and seals, for such relief as they, in their just and proper discretion, shall think necessary, (reference being also had by such justices to the character and conduct of the applicant); provided, that in every such order the special cause of granting the relief thereby directed shall be expressly stated, and that no such order shall be given for, or extend to, any longer time than one month from the date thereof: provided that it shall be lawful for any justice to make an order for relief in any case of urgent necessity, to be specified in such order, so as such order shall remain in force only until the assembling of the select vestry of the parish, or of such guardians, governors, or directors as aforesaid, to which such case shall relate."

Sect. 3. "Every select vestry, to be established by the authority of this act, shall cause minutes to be fairly entered in books, to be for that purpose provided, of all their meetings, proceedings, resolutions, orders, and transactions, and of all sums received, applied, and expended by their direction, and such minutes shall from time to time be signed by the chairman; and shall, together with a summary or report of the accounts and transactions of the select vestry, be laid before the inhabitants of the parish in general vestry assembled, twice in every year, that is to say, in the month of March and the month of October, and at such other times as the select vestry shall think fit; and the minutes, proceedings, accounts, and reports of every select vestry shall belong to the parish, and be preserved with the other books, documents, accounts, and public papers thereof."

Sect. 4 provides, "that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall cause ten days' notice, at the least, to be publicly given in the usual manner, of every vestry to be holden for the purpose of establishing any select vestry, or of nominating and electing the members, or any member thereof, and of every vestry to be holden for the purpose of receiving the report of the select vestry; and every notice of any such vestry shall state the special purpose thereof."

Sect. 35. "All powers and authorities by this act given to and vested in justices of the peace shall be exercised and executed by such justices within the limits of their respective commissions and jurisdictions, and not elsewhere; and that all provisions, clauses, authorities, and directions in this act contained in relation to parishes, shall extend and be construed to extend to all townships, vills, and places, having separate overseers of the poor, and maintaining their poor separately; and that all acts and duties required and authorized by this act to be done and executed by churchwardens and overseers of the poor, may in every parish be performed, exercised, and executed by the major part of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor thereof; and that in townships, vills and places which have no churchwarden, the same may be performed, exercised and executed by the overseers of the poor thereof, or the major part of them; and that all the powers, provisions, and clauses in this act contained, which relate to vestries, or to the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, shall be construed to extend to all meetings of the inhabitants of any township, vill, or place, having separate overseers of the poor, and maintaining its poor separately, to be held after due and legal notice for carrying into execution the laws for the relief of the poor, as fully as if in every such provision and clause they were severally and respectively named and repeated."

Sect. 36 provides, "that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to take away, abridge, alter, prejudice, or affect, further than is hereby expressly enacted, any of the powers, directions, provisions, or regulations contained in the said act passed in the twenty-second year of his present Majesty's reign, for the better relief and employment of the poor, in or with respect to such parishes, townships and places as have adopted, or as shall adopt and become subject to the provisions of that act; nor to take away, abridge, alter, prejudice or affect any of the powers or provisions of any special or local act or or acts, for the maintenance, relief, or regulation of the poor in any city, town, hundred, district, parish or place, so nevertheless, that in every city, town, hundred, district, parish or place, such of the clauses, directions and powers in this act contained, as are not repugnant to, nor incompatible with, the provisions of the said act of the twenty-second year of his Majesty's reign, or of such respective special or local acts, shall have the like force and effect, and may be adopted and applied in like manner, as in other parishes and places: provided also, that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to alter, affect or disturb any select vestry which in any parish has been established and acted upon by virtue of any ancient usage or custom."

Sect. 37. "That this act shall extend only to that part of the United Kingdom called England."

Rex v. The Churchwardens and Overseers of St. Martin in the Fields, 3 Bar. & Adol. 907. Where an ancient select vestry existed in a parish having and exercising certain powers in the management and care of the poor, but not all the powers required by the statute 59 Geo. III. c. 12, to be exercised by select vestries, the Court granted a mandamus calling on the parish officers to convene a meeting, pursuant to the act, for the purpose of establishing a new select vestry to perform those functions under the act which the former vestry could not discharge, but not otherwise to interfere with it.

The exception as to local acts does not apply where the vestry is not specially constituted.

The appointment by the justice is a ministerial act.

59 Geo. III. c. 12, a return was made stating that there was by custom an ancient vestry in the parish which had from time immemorial consulted and deliberated on parochial matters, and acted as a select vestry for the concerns of the poor, and that they had immemorially been accustomed to perform the duties imposed on select vestries by the statute: held, that the return was bad, since the statute imposes some duties, as the management of money raised by poor rates, and making orders for the government of overseers, which could not have existed before the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. Parke, J., observed, "The ancient vestry may have had from time immemorial the power of managing and applying the funds raised for the relief of the poor, otherwise than by compulsory rates. There is no reason they should not continue to enjoy that authority, if existing. But it is also clear that the inhabitants are not precluded from exercising the power of appointing a select vestry to discharge those functions, and very important ones they are, which arise out of the poor law first established by the statute of Elizabeth." And this decision will agree with the opinion expressed by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Woodman, ante, 35.

Rex v. Churchwardens of St. James's, Clerkenwell, 1 Adol. & Ell. 317; 3 Nev. & Man. 411, S. C. A local act passed before the stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 69, for the regulation of parish vestries created the office of guardians of the poor for a particular parish, and enacted that vacancies should be annually filled up by the rated inhabitants assembled in the vestry room, who should elect persons in the room of those going out: held, that after the passing of stat. 58 Geo. III. c. 69, the inhabitants must be allowed in such election the number of votes in proportion to their respective assessments defined in the latter act, for that the local act did not give this vestry such a peculiar constitution as to bring it within sect. 8 of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, which preserves to vestries, holden under any special act, the powers and rights of voting which they previously enjoyed. The intention of the act was to change the method of determining the majority in all cases where no special constitution existed before.

Where a select vestry has been established, notice of an unusual meeting must be served on every select vestryman, otherwise the meeting is not duly convened, and cannot justify the expulsion of a person who was not one of the select vestry. (Dobson v. Fussy, 7 Bing. 305.)

Rex v. Adams, 2 Adol. & Ell. 409; 4 Nev. & M. 299. In the parish of Tenterden, the inhabitants elected twenty select vestrymen, and the justice omitted two in his appointment, because they were ex officio members, one as a justice and the other as an overseer. The Court granted a mandamus to compel him to insert the names, although it was sworn that injury had resulted from the union of the offices of select vestryman and justice. Lord Denman, "The magistrates have nothing to do, except to appoint the persons already chosen by the inhabitants. The word 'elect' is a very strong one. The word 'appoint' is certainly an unlucky expression, if the meaning of the legislature be that they are only to register the acts of others: but it is clear to me that this was the only meaning. That being so, whatever consequences may follow, we have merely to give effect to the act." The rest of the Court concurred.

8. Incorporation of Parishes.

Under the previous title of "Guardians prior to the 4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76," will be found the several enactments for the incorporation of parishes under Gilbert's act. The principal object of such incorporation, as well as of the modern unions, is, to provide a common workhouse for the whole district, and we propose therefore to defer the other legislative provisions relating to the old incorporation until we treat of workhouses.

9. Unions.

The incorporation of parishes mentioned in the last chapter, for the care and management of the poor, was voluntary; but now, by the 4 & 5 W. IV.

Parishes may be united by the commissioners.

c. 76, s. 26, (a) the commissioners "may declare any parishes, which they think fit, to be united for the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, and such parish shall thereupon be deemed a union." And the workhouses of such parish shall be for the common use, and the poor of each parish shall be maintained and employed therein; but each parish shall be separately chargeable with the expense of its own poor, whether relieved in or out of the workhouse.

In estimating the proportion which each parish is to contribute to the common fund, both for providing a workhouse and employing the poor, the commissioners are required to ascertain the expense incurred for the relief of the poor in each parish for the three years preceding the inquiry; and upon the application of the guardians, or overseers of any parish, the inquiry may be from time to time repeated, and a new proportion determined, s. 28. The returns made to parliament of the sums expended for the relief of the poor, shall be taken as the ground on which the averages shall be calculated, s. 30. No union can now take place without the consent of the commissioners, s. 37. The commissioners may dissolve any union (except unions for the purpose of settlement or rating) or separate any parish, or add any to it, provided two thirds of the guardians of such union concur therein. In such cases rules are to be adapted to its altered state, and the proportionate value to every parish of the common property, and the liabilities of each parish, are to be ascertained and the sums due to be secured, s. 32.

If all the guardians agree and the commissioners approve, all the parishes of a union may become one parish for the purpose of settlement. The agreement must be signed by all the guardians, and deposited with the clerk of the peace; from which time a settlement of any person in any one parish of the union, shall be considered a settlement in the union; and the expense of his maintenance, as well as that of ascertaining and litigating his settlement, shall be paid out of the common fund, s. 33.

The guardians may in the same way agree that, for the purpose of rating, the parishes of any such union shall be considered one parish; but in such cases all the parishes of the union must be situate within the same county, and under the jurisdiction of the same justices of the peace; and this agreement, when deposited with the clerk of the peace, cannot be revoked or annulled, s. 34. In such cases the guardians shall assess the value of the property in each parish; and all rates grounded on such assessment may be recovered, allowed, and appealed against, in the same manner as ordinary rates, s. 35. After the making of the common rate, the proportions fixed by sect. 32, shall cease, and there shall be a common expenditure; if any parish at the time of such assessment is not represented by a guardian, it will not bind such parish unless a majority of the owners of property and rate payers assent in a prescribed form, s. 36.

One of the principal objects in the formation of unions is to provide "a well managed workhouse, which should be the common workhouse of the incorporated district, to assign to those workhouses separate classes of poor, though composed of the poor of distinct parishes, each distinct parish paying to the support of the payments of the permanent workhouse establishment." (b) By the 23d sect. of 4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76, the commissioners are empowered, with the consent of a majority of the guardians of any union, or the majority of rate-payers and owners of property in any parish, to order the overseers or guardians of any parish or union not having a workhouse to build a workhouse, and to purchase or hire land or any building for that purpose; and, with the like consent, to order the overseers or guardians of any parish or union having a workhouse, or any buildings capable of being converted into a workhouse, to enlarge or alter the same, or to provide an additional workhouse of such size, description and plan as the commissioners shall deem proper; and the overseers and guardians are authorized to raise such sums of money as may be necessary for the purpose, by such means as are now by law given to overseers or guardians for purchasing or hiring land, or for building, hiring, and maintaining workhouses, (a) or to borrow money for such purposes under this or any other act.

By sect. 25, it is enacted, that the commissioners may, without requiring any consent, order the overseers or guardians of any parish or union having a workhouse, or any building capable of being converted into a workhouse, to enlarge or alter the same: provided, that the sums to be raised for such purposes, and charged upon any parish, shall not exceed fifty pounds, nor one tenth of the average annual amount of the poor rates.

WORKHOUSES BEFORE 4 & 5 WILL. IV. c. 76.

9 G. I. c. 7, s. 4, where two or more places may join, when one too small.

In the preceding chapter we have seen that the guardians and overseers are authorized to provide a workhouse, to exercise all the powers which by law had then been given for similar purposes. By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, a parish was enabled to purchase or hire a house for the maintenance and employment of the poor therein; and it also enacted, that "where any parish, town, or township shall be too small to purchase or hire such house or houses, it shall be lawful for two or more such parishes, &c. with the consent of the major part of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, and with the approbation of a justice of peace, to unite in purchasing, hiring, or taking such house, for the lodging, keeping, and maintaining of the poor of the several parishes, townships, or places so uniting, and there to keep, maintain, and employ the poor of the respective parishes so uniting, and to take and have the benefit of the work, labour, or service of any poor there kept and maintained, for the better maintenance and relief of the poor there kept, maintained, and employed."

Houses to be provided.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 17, "the guardians of the poor of the several parishes, townships, and places, which shall adopt the provisions of this act, shall provide a suitable and convenient house or houses, with proper buildings and accommodations thereto, when wanted, either by erecting new ones on land to be purchased or rented by them for that purpose, altering old ones, or hiring buildings for the purpose; and shall fit up and dispose the same, with the advice and approbation of the visitor, if any, in such manner as shall be most conducive to the general purposes of this act, at the expense of such parish or township, or parishes, townships, and places, respectively, in the proportions herein-after mentioned; and shall provide such utensils and materials as they shall think necessary for their employment, according to the true intent and meaning of this act."

Houses where to be situated.

Sect. 18. "That the several poor houses or workhouses to be built or provided under the authority of the act, shall be situate within the parish or township for which they shall be used, if single parishes or townships, and if several parishes or townships shall be united for the purposes of this act, they shall be built or provided within one of the parishes or townships so to be united, and not in any other parish, township, or place, without the consent of three-fourth parts, in number and value as aforesaid, of such owners or occupiers of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, within the same, first had and obtained, qualified as herein-before mentioned, who shall be assembled at a public meeting to be holden in the manner and upon the like notice herein-before directed for public meetings."

On what condition to be rented, and how taxed and rated.

Sect. 19. "That all the houses, buildings, and lands, to be hired or rented under the authority of this act, shall be hired or rented in such manner, for such term or terms, and on such conditions, as are specified in the form of agreement contained in the said schedule, No. IV.; and all such houses, buildings, and lands, shall be free from all parochial and parliamentary taxes, except such taxes, and to such amount, as they were assessed at the time they were first taken and applied for the purposes of this act."

(a) As to these means, see "Workhouses" and "Poor Rates," and the sections of this statute in the Appendix.

Sect. 27. "That in order to encourage the salutary and benevolent purposes of this act, and to afford better accommodations for the poor at such poorhouses, it shall and may be lawful for the guardians of the poor, where any such poorhouse shall be provided, purchased, or agreed to be erected, to inclose from any waste or common land or ground lying near or adjoining thereto, with the consent and approbation of the Lord of the Manor, and the major part in value of the freeholders or persons having right of common thereupon, signified under their hands and seals, any part or portion of such waste or common land, not exceeding ten acres, for the purpose of building upon, or occupying, cultivating, and improving the same, for the use and benefit of such poorhouse, and the poor persons within the parish, township, or place, where the same shall be, or within the parishes, townships, or places, which shall be united therewith for the purposes of this act."

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 8, enacts, "that in any parish not having a workhouse for the poor thereof, or where the workhouse shall be found insufficient or inconvenient, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, by the direction of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, to erect and build in such parish a suitable workhouse, or to alter and enlarge any messuage or tenement belonging to such parish for that purpose, and to purchase or take on lease any ground within the parish for the purpose of such building, or for enlarging any such other messuage or tenement belonging to such parish for that purpose; or such churchwardens and overseers may and they are hereby authorized to add to and enlarge any such insufficient workhouse, as the inhabitants of the parish in vestry shall think fit and direct."

Sect. 10. "And whereas there may be parishes in which no sufficient poorhouse or workhouse can be procured for the accommodation of the poor thereof; be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every such parish, by the direction of the inhabitants thereof in vestry assembled, to purchase or hire any suitable and convenient house or houses, building or buildings, for that purpose, in any adjoining parish, with the consent of two or more justices, such consent to be written upon or annexed to the agreement for purchasing or hiring such house or houses, building or buildings; provided always that no such house or building shall be situate more than three miles from the parish for which the same shall be purchased or hired."

Rex v. St. Peter and St. Paul, in Bath, Cald. 213; 1 Bott. 483. W. Hill was removed from Lyncombe and Widcombe to St. Peter and St. Paul. Order confirmed. Case:—The parishioners of St. Peter and St. Paul, with the parishioners of St. James, in Bath, purchased a piece of ground in the parish of Lyncombe and Widcombe, and built thereon a house for the reception of their poor. W. Hill, with the paupers belonging to St. Peter and St. Paul, removed to this house, where they have been maintained, without any charge to the parish of Lyncombe and Widcombe. Hill and all the other paupers carried with them regular certificates, which were delivered to one of the officers of Lyncombe and Widcombe. Notwithstanding his certificate the pauper was removed from Lyncombe and Widcombe, though he had not been chargeable to that parish. The sessions were of opinion that the pauper was not an object of the certificate act, and consequently not protected by it. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "To be sure it was a radical defect in the system of the poor laws, more especially in a commercial and manufacturing country, that the poor should be all confined to their respective parishes. Possessed of industry, vigour, and skill, a man, who could not find work at home, was prohibited from seeking it abroad. The legislature endeavoured to cure this evil by introducing certificates, under which the pauper is at liberty to go and reside wherever he pleases. And the true principle is to extend this protection to the utmost latitude. There should be no clog, no restraint. But then the act did not compel the granting of them. The want of workhouses was, however, soon felt as an inconvenience; they were, not long after, introduced by the legislature; and, if well regulated, a most desirable mode of relief they are; they supply comfort and accommodation for those who cannot work, and employment for those who can. In many instances which have chanced to fall within my knowledge, particularly on the Midland circuit, they have reduced the annual amount of the poor rates one-half. But this benefit could not within itself be received by every separate district: for where parishes were small, the expense of the necessary buildings was too heavy for them. This obstacle was foreseen by the legislature, and provided against accordingly. Though single parishes could only contract for these buildings within their own limits, yet where two unite, no restrictions were imposed, the power is general. It is obvious that the workhouse of a single parish must be most conveniently situated in that parish. Upon a similar principle, where many parishes were jointly concerned, the legislature did not require that the building should be raised in either of the confederate parishes; because in such case, a spot might be found in some other parish more central and better accommodated to their general convenience, than any part of their united district. The act, therefore, authorizes the purchase anywhere: and when once the joint purchase is made, wherever it be, it becomes a part of the local system of each contracting parish; and if the poor will not go there, they are not entitled to relief. The same narrow spirit that has impeded the progress of this beneficial plan, now starts up again to limit this power, and almost to overthrow the act itself; which was calculated ultimately to reduce expense, as well as promote industry and encourage manufactures, by employing all the poor under the eye of one master. But the objection is not warranted by the certificate act. Whatever might be the leading motive in passing that act, that statute authorizes the whole body of the poor, of whatever denomination and with whatever object, to leave their own and remove into any other parish, provided they can obtain the protection of a certificate. Contrary to the spirit and policy of the act, and not obliged by the letter, the Court will not make an exception of a case, which the act itself has not excepted. The true policy is certainly to enlarge and not to narrow the district, within which the poor are to be maintained. As to the objection of its being an injury to property, the introduction of a numerous inhabitancy, by increasing the consumption of provisions, must unavoidably add to the value of that land, the produce of which is by such a demand consumed. As to the possibility of a few illegitimate children acquiring by birth a settlement in the parish, within which the workhouse stands, it is impossible to foresee every inconvenience; and all that can be said is, that de minimis non curat lex.—Buller, J. “As to the last difficulty raised, I doubt whether the poorhouse so occupied, and become in this manner the perpetual property of the united parishes, is not, to this purpose, rather to be considered as part of those parishes to which it so belongs, than of the parish in which it is locally situated; upon the same principle, as that of many resolutions in the case of such children born in gaols.”—Willes and Ashurst. Js. concurring, both orders were quashed. Premises taken for the purposes of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, are to be deemed within the local jurisdiction, though situate in a part of the parish out of the liberties.—S. 44.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 20, “when any such buildings shall be agreed to be erected, repaired, or fitted up, at the expense of the parish, township, or place, or parishes, townships, or places, which shall adopt the provisions of this act as aforesaid, the expenses thereof, and of the purchase of the land necessary to be used for that purpose, shall be paid by the guardians of the poor of such parish, township, or place, or of the parishes, townships, and places, where they shall unite for those purposes, in the proportions to be settled and adjusted by the persons, and in the manner, directed by the agreement to be made as aforesaid; and that it shall and may be lawful for the visitor and guardian of the poor of any such parish, township, or place, when such expenses, or their proportion thereof, shall amount to one hundred pounds or upwards, to borrow the same at interest, and secure such money by a charge upon the poor's rates of such parish, township, or place, in sums not exceeding fifty pounds each, for the greater ease in discharging the same, in the form contained in the said schedule, No. XI., or to that or the like effect; which charge shall continue upon the said rates until the money so borrowed, and all interest for the same, shall be fully paid and satisfied: and the said guardians and their successors shall, and they are hereby required duly to pay and keep down the interest of such money so to be borrowed for the use of their respective parishes or townships, as the same shall become due; and that when the principal shall be called for, they may borrow it from some other person or persons; and the same shall be secured to the person advancing the same, by an assignment of such security indorsed on the back thereof, in the form contained in the said schedule, No. XIV., or to that or the like effect: and that the said visitor and guardian, in order to expedite such payments, shall, as soon as the savings in the poor's accounts shall amount to a sum sufficient to pay off and discharge one of the sums which shall have been borrowed, pay off and discharge such sum, and in like manner as to all succeeding savings, until the whole debt so contracted and secured shall be discharged."

By a clause in this section the assessments were to continue at the same rate as they were when the poor house was established; but this was repealed by the 43 Geo. III. c. 110, which after reciting that doubts had been entertained as to the efficiency of the 42 Geo. III. c. 74, which had enabled the overseer to pay off one twentieth every year, it is enacted by sect. 2. "that such assessments shall and may from time to time be diminished to such amount as shall be deemed proper and necessary: provided always, that the guardians of the poor, from the time being, of every such parish, shall yearly and every year, pay off or provide for a twentieth part at least of any monies which shall have been borrowed for the purpose aforesaid, under the powers of the said act of the twenty-second year of his present Majesty's reign, and also shall duly keep down the interest of all monies which shall be so borrowed; any thing in the said recited acts of the twenty-second and forty-second years of his present Majesty's reign, or either of them, contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 14, provides, "that no sum exceeding the amount of a rate or assessment at one shilling in the pound upon the annual value of the property in any parish assessable to the rates for the relief of the poor, shall be raised, expended, or applied, in any one year, in purchasing, building, and repairing any buildings, or land, by this act authorized to be purchased, taken, built, or repaired, and in fitting up, preparing, and furnishing such buildings, and in stocking such land, or for any one or more of such purposes or objects, unless the major part of the inhabitants and occupiers assessed to the relief of the poor, in vestry assembled, shall consent thereto, nor until two-third parts in value of all the inhabitants and occupiers so assessed as aforesaid (whether present in vestry or not) shall have also signed their consent thereto in the vestry or parish book."

Limiting the amount to be raised for buildings, and the purchase of lands, &c.

Sect. 15 enacts, "that in every case where the inhabitants of any parish shall in manner aforesaid consent that the greater sum than the amount of a rate or assessment of one shilling in the pound will raise, shall be expended in one year for all or any of such purposes and objects, it shall be lawful for Power to raise further sums by loans, or by the sale of annuities.

(a) The 36 Geo. III. c. 10, s. 1, after reciting that certain local acts had limited the annual sum to be raised for the poor rates, and that the high price of wheat rendered such sum insufficient, enabled overseers to raise more according to the price of wheat, so that the rate did not exceed double the amount of the then rate. This latter clause was however repealed by the 52 Geo. III. c. 73.

the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, with the consent of such majority as aforesaid of the inhabitants and occupiers thereof, to be given and signed in the manner herein-before directed (after the rate or rates at or amounting to one shilling in the pound shall have been actually levied and applied for such purposes or some of them), to raise any additional sum or sums, by loan, or by sale of an annuity or of annuities on any life or lives, not being under the age of fifty years respectively, or for any certain term not exceeding fifteen years, so as the whole sum to be raised for all or any of such purposes by loan, and by the sale of annuities, or by either of such means, shall not be more than five shillings in the pound of or upon the true annual value of the property which shall in such parish be assessed to the poor's rates (every proposal for any such annuity being first stated to and approved by the inhabitants and occupiers of such parish in vestry assembled); and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall and they are hereby authorized, in the names and on the behalf of the inhabitants of the parish, to sign and execute securities for the money which shall be so borrowed, and for the annuities to be so granted; and by every such security to charge the produce of the future rates to be made for the relief of the poor of every such parish with the repayment of the principal sum which shall have been so borrowed, and the interest thereof, or with the payment of the annuity thereby granted (as the case may be), at and upon the days and times, and in such manner and proportions, as in and by the security for every such loan and annuity respectively shall be appointed and expressed for the payment thereof; and the money to be raised by such future rates shall be subject and liable to the payment of every such loan, and the interest thereof, and of every such annuity accordingly."

Sect. 16 provides, "that no greater sum in the whole than the amount of a rate or assessment at one shilling in the pound shall in any parish be charged upon the future rates thereof, unless two-third parts in value of the proprietors of messuages, land, and tenements within such parish (whether for estates of freehold or copyhold, or by virtue of leases for terms of not less than fifteen years absolute or determinable upon a life or lives,) shall have consented to raise the money for which the charge or security shall purport to be made; such consents to be given by writing under the hands of all persons and corporations sole, and the consent of every corporation aggregate under the hand of the president, head, or chief member thereof for the time being, and the consents of femes covert, minors, insane persons, and persons out of the kingdom, by and under the hands of their respective husbands, guardians, committees, trustees, attornies or agents, who are respectively authorized to give such consents, and the consent of the major part of the trustees for any charitable or other purpose shall be sufficient in respect of the trust estates."(a)

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 63. The money requisite for providing a work-house or promoting emigration may be borrowed from the commissioners of exchequer bills.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 21, for the purpose of taking lands, &c. the guardians were incorporated; but a more comprehensive statute on this subject has been recently passed, and which will be found in the Appendix, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69.

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, enacts, "that all buildings, lands, and hereditaments, which shall be purchased, hired, or taken on lease, by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, by the authority and for any of the purposes of this act, shall be conveyed, demised, and assured to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every such parish respectively, and their successors, in trust for the parish; and such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and their successors, shall and may, and they are hereby empowered, to accept, take, and hold, in the nature of a body corporate, for

(a) By the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 22, 23, and by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 18, a power of sale was given to corporate bodies and persons labouring under disabilities; but a more comprehensive provision on this subject has been made by 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, s. 1 and 2. See Appendix.

and on behalf of the parish, all such buildings, lands, and hereditaments, and also all other buildings, lands, and hereditaments belonging to such parish; and in all actions, suits, indictments, and other proceedings, for or in relation to any such buildings, lands, or hereditaments, or the rent thereof, or for or in relation to any other buildings, lands, or hereditaments belonging to such parish, or the rent thereof; and in all actions and proceedings upon, or in relation to, any bond to be given for the faithful execution of the office of an assistant overseer, it shall be sufficient to name the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, describing them as the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish for which they shall act, and naming such parish; and no action or suit, indictment or other proceeding, shall cease, abate, or be discontinued, quashed, defeated, or impeded, by the death of the churchwardens and overseers named in such proceeding, or the deaths or death of any of them, or by their removal or the removal of any of them from, or the expiration of, their respective offices."

Woodcock v. Gibson, 4 B. & C. 462; 6 D. & R. 524; 3 D. & R. M. Ca. 277. In order to constitute the body corporate intended by this act, there must be two overseers and a churchwarden or churchwardens; and that where there were two overseers appointed, one of whom was afterwards appointed (by custom) sole churchwarden, the act did not vest parish property in them, so as to support a plea stating that the freehold was in them.

Phillips v. Pearce, 5 B. & C. 433; 8 D. & R. 43, S. C. Land belonging to a parish was occupied by A., and he paid rent to the churchwardens. They executed a lease of the same land for a term of years to B., and gave A. notice of the lease. In an action for use and occupation by B. against A. : held, that A. was not estopped by having paid rent to the churchwardens, from disputing B.'s title, and that the latter could not derive a valid title from the churchwardens.—Abbott, C. J. "The legislature has provided for the inconveniences experienced in consequence of lands belonging to parishioners, who are not by law a corporation, in certain cases, by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, which enacts, that the churchwardens and overseers shall take and hold, in the nature of a body corporate, for and on behalf of the parish, all buildings, lands, and tenements, belonging to the parish. That statute does not extend to this case. I think, therefore, that the churchwardens alone had no title to the land, or the rent which issues from it." And see Rogers v. Pitcher, 6 Taunt. 202, 1 Marsh. 541, S. P.

22 G. III. c. 83, s. 43. "That it shall and may be lawful for the guardians of the poor of any parish, township, or place, which shall adopt the provisions of this act, with the approbation of the persons within such parish, township, or place, qualified as hereinbefore mentioned, obtained at a public meeting, held for that purpose, to sell or dispose of any house, cottage, or building, which shall have been erected or purchased for the use of any poor person or persons, at the expense of such parish, township, or place, and apply the money arising therefrom for the purposes of this act; and also to remove, by order from a justice or justices of the peace, the person or persons who shall inhabit the same, or any other house or dwelling rented or provided at the expense of such parish, township, or place, if he, she, or they refuse to quit, after receiving fourteen days' notice for that purpose."

By 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, s. 3, (a) in order to insure the due application of the property of parishes and unions, it is enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the guardians of any parish or union, and for the overseers of any parish not under the management of a board of guardians, and for the guardians or trustees, guardian or trustee of any dissolved union, or the person or persons who were the guardians or trustees, guardian or trustee, of any dissolved union at the time of its dissolution, or a majority of such guardians or trustees, or persons, if more than one, with the approbation, and subject to the rules, orders, and regulations of the poor law commissioners, to sell, exchange, let, or otherwise to dispose of any workhouses, tenements, buildings, land, III. c. 83, is provided in case of nonpayment by the guardians of the poor."

4 & 5 W. IV. c. 76, s. 42, authorizes the commissioners to make rules and regulations to be observed at every workhouse already established, or hereafter to be established, for the government thereof, and the nature and amount of the relief to be given to and the labour to be exacted from the persons relieved, and the preservation therein of good order, and from time to time to alter the same, and make new; and to alter, at their discretion, any of the rules and regulations contained in the schedule to the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and also to alter or rescind any rules and regulations heretofore made in pursuance of the said act, or any local act relating to workhouses or the relief of the poor; and all rules made by the commissioners shall be binding, as if the same were specifically embodied in this act. If any such rule shall be, at the time of issuing the same, directed to and affect more than one union, the same shall be considered as a general rule. (a)

And sect. 43 empowers justices to inspect and examine such workhouse, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the rules or bye-laws have been duly observed, as well as for such other purposes as justices are now authorised to visit workhouses under 30 Geo. III. c. 49; and if such rules or bye-laws have not been duly observed, such justice may summon the party offending before any two justices to answer the complaint, and upon conviction the party so offending shall be liable to such penalties and punishments as are hereinafter prescribed against parties wilfully neglecting or disobeying the rules of the commissioners. Where no rules or bye-laws shall have been directed by the commissioners to be observed in the workhouse, nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any justice, physician, surgeon, or apothecary, or the officiating clergyman of any parish, from visiting such workhouse, and examining and certifying the condition of the same and of the poor therein, in such manner as any of them are authorized to do by the 30 Geo. III. c. 49.

Rules, &c. affecting more than one union to be deemed general rules.

The power given to justices, &c. to visit workhouses reserved where commissioners' rules, &c. are not in force.

JUSTICES AND OTHERS VISITING WORKHOUSES.

By 30 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, "it shall and may be lawful to and for any of his Majesty's justices of the peace, or any physician, surgeon, or apothecary, for that purpose authorised by warrant under the hand and seal of any such justice or justices, or for the officiating clergyman (b) of the parish or place, duly authorised as aforesaid, at all times, in the day time, to visit any parish workhouse, or house kept or provided for the maintenance of the poor of any parish or place, within the county, riding, liberty, or division, wherein such justice or justices shall be resident and shall have jurisdiction, to examine into the state and condition of the poor people therein, and the food, clothing, and bedding of such poor people, and the state and condition of such house or houses; and if upon any such visitation, the said justice or justices, or persons duly authorised as aforesaid, shall find any cause or occasion of complaint, that then and in such case such justice or justices, or persons duly authorised as aforesaid, shall, and they are hereby authorised and empowered, if he or they shall think fit, to certify the state and condition of such workhouse or poorhouse, and the state of the poor therein, and of their food, clothing, and bedding, to the next quarter sessions of the peace to be held for such county, riding, liberty, or division, wherein such workhouse or poorhouse shall be situate, under his or their hands and seals respectively; and such justice or justices, or other persons duly authorised as aforesaid, shall cause the overseers of the poor, or master or governor of the said workhouse mate, to visit such workhouse, for the purpose of affording religious assistance to such inmate, and also for the purpose of instructing his child or children in the principles of their religion. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 19.

"Provided, that in case any justice or justices of the peace, or persons duly authorised by warrant as aforesaid, shall, upon any such visitation, find any of the poor in any parish workhouse or poorhouse afflicted with any contagious or infectious disease, or in want of immediate medical or other assistance, or of sufficient and proper food, or requiring separation or removal from the other poor in the said house, then and in such case or cases, if such visitation shall be made by a justice of the peace, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justice, and he is hereby directed and required to apply to one or more other justice or justices of the peace, in the county, riding, liberty, or division, and certify to him or them the state and condition of the poor in such parish workhouse or poorhouse; or if such visitation shall be made by the persons duly authorised as aforesaid, then and in such case or cases it shall and may be lawful to and for such persons, and they are hereby directed and required to apply to two or more justices of the peace in such county, riding, liberty, or division; and thereupon the said justices shall and may, and they are hereby authorised to make such order for the immediate procuring medical or other assistance, or of sufficient and proper food, or for the separation or removal of such poor as shall be afflicted with any contagious or infectious disease, in such manner as they the said justices, under their hands and seals, shall think proper to direct, until the next quarter sessions of the peace to be held in and for the said county, riding, liberty, or division, wherein such workhouse or poorhouse shall be situate; at which quarter sessions of the peace the said two justices are to certify the same, under their hands and seals respectively, to the justices assembled at such quarter sessions, who are hereby authorised and required to make such order for the further relief of the poor in such parish workhouse or poorhouse, as to the justices assembled at such quarter sessions shall seem meet and proper; and the charges and expenses of relieving such poor shall be, and are hereby directed to be paid out of the poor's rate of such parish, in such manner as the said justices assembled at such quarter sessions shall direct."

Sect. 3. "Provided, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any poorhouse or workhouse in any district or districts which have been, or may be hereafter, incorporated or regulated by any special act or acts of parliament."

We have seen that the justices may enforce the rules of the commissioners and bye-laws in the workhouse, p. 51.

III. c. 129, enacts, "that all enactments and provisions contained in any act or acts of parliament since the commencement of the reign of his late Majesty King George the First, whereby any poor person or persons, other than such as shall actually apply for and receive parochial relief, are compelled or made compellable to go or remain in any house of industry or workhouse; or whereby any poor person or persons may be detained or kept in any house of industry or workhouse; at the discretion of the governors or directors thereof, or of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, after such persons are capable of maintaining themselves; or whereby any poor person or persons may be compelled to remain in any house of industry or workhouse, until the charges and expences to which any district, parish, township, or hamlet may have been put or become liable or chargeable for the maintenance or support of such poor person or persons, or any of his or her family, shall be repaid or reimbursed or satisfied by the earnings or labour of such poor person or persons; or whereby any poor child or children whomsoever is or are rendered liable to be apprenticed to any governor, director, or master of any such house of industry or workhouse; or whereby any parish, township, or hamlet, at a greater distance than ten miles from such house of industry or workhouse, shall hereafter be empowered or authorised to become contributors to, or to take the benefit of such house of industry or workhouse; or whereby any directors, governors, guardians, or masters of any such house of industry or workhouse, are authorised or empowered to hire out any poor person or persons of full age, or to contract or agree with any person or persons to have and take the profit of the labour of such poor person or persons; shall be wholly and severally, and the same are hereby wholly and severally repealed.

Rex v. Carlisle, (cited in Rex v. Haigh, 3 T. R. 637,) 2 Nol. P. L. 357. The defendant was indicted for disobeying an order of sessions. Jane Carr, the pauper, having been delivered of two bastard children, was taken into the poorhouse of the parish of St. Mary's in Carlisle, which had been there established according to the 9 Geo. I. c. 7. There she and her children were maintained for a year and a half. Then the parish officers agreed to allow her 1s. a week towards the maintenance of herself and children. After six months they refused to continue the payment, but offered to take her and her children again into the poorhouse. She prayed them to take one child, and said she would take care of the other. That being refused, she offered to take 6d. a week. But the parish officers persisted in giving her no relief, unless she would come again into the poorhouse. Whereupon she applied to the quarter sessions, who made an order on the overseers to pay her 1s. a week towards the maintenance of herself and her two bastard children, until further order. The defendant, one of the overseers, refused, but at the same time offered (as he had done several times before) to take her and her children into the poorhouse. The question reserved at the assizes for the opinion of the judges was, "whether, under these circumstances, the defendant was by law empowered to refuse payment of such weekly allowance?" And the case being laid before the judges, they were all of opinion, upon considering the words of the statute, that, under the circumstances of this case, the defendant was by law empowered to refuse payment of such weekly allowance.

Rex v. Haigh, 3 T. R. 637. The defendants were indicted for disobeying an order of a justice, for the payment of a weekly sum to Mary Gray for the maintenance of her bastard child. It appeared that the mother applied for relief for her child only; and the question was, "whether the defendants were bound to obey the order, as the mother of the child refused to go into the workhouse?" For the prosecutor, Rex v. North Shields, Cald. 68, was relied upon; and for the defendants, Rex v. Carlisle, (supra.) Lord Kenyon, C. J., "the only question is, for whom was the relief asked? for such person only is, according to the terms of this act of parliament, to be sent to the workhouse. It is stated that the child only wanted relief: the application indeed was made by the mother, but it was not on her own account, but for her child only, who was of too tender an age to apply herself. This is, therefore, very distinguishable from Rex v. Carlisle, where the relief was asked both for the parent and the child. It would be extremely hard, and contrary to the spirit and words of this act of parliament, if, when all the children of a family, except one, were capable of supporting themselves, and that one was unable to maintain itself, and was under the necessity of receiving relief, the whole family were to be sent to the workhouse."

Rex v. North Shields, Doug. 331; Cald. 68. By order of a justice the overseers of North Shields were directed to pay to Ann, wife of Thomas Irwin, 2s. 6d. weekly, until such time as they should be otherwise ordered, for the support of her three children by her said husband; one aged six years, one three, and one fourteen months. The overseers appealed. Order confirmed.

or rendering them liable to be apprenticed to governor, &c.; or that distinct parishes shall not unite; or contracting for their labour;

Paupers wanting relief, and refusing to go into the parish workhouse, the parish officer may refuse giving weekly allowance.

When a mother asks for relief for her child only, and not for herself, the parish officers cannot compel her to go into the workhouse; and if she refuse, they cannot refuse the allowance to the child.

Whether a mother asking relief for her children be compellable to go with them to the poorhouse?

*Refusal of

Case:—There was, at the time of making the order, within the township, a poorhouse, established according to the 9 Geo. I. c. 7, into which the parish officers were willing to receive the pauper, with her three children, and offered so to do; but she refused to go into the house with them. She had another child of eight years of age, for whom she did not seek relief; neither did she seek relief for herself. Her husband was a mariner, and prisoner in France, and the order stated her inability to provide for the said three children. These children, being nurse-children, the opinion of the sessions was, that they ought not to be separated from their mother, and that the mother, not seeking relief herself, was not compellable to go into the workhouse. It was urged that in Rex v. Carlisle, the relief asked, and granted by the order, was partly personal, and therefore it was distinguishable from this case, and within the statute.—Willes, J., said, this was a humane order, and he wished to support it. He did not think the words of the act in the way, and inclined to adopt the distinction made by the counsel between this case and that of Rex v. Carlisle.—Ashurst, J., thought the act extended to the present case: that maintenance for the children was relief to the mother. There might be great inconvenience if the Court were to adopt the other construction. One object of the statute was to encourage industry, by holding out the disgrace of going into a workhouse; and if parents could obtain a maintenance for their children without being compellable to go to the workhouse, idleness would be thereby promoted among artificers and manufacturers.—Buller, J., on the contrary, thought the distinction between this case and that of Rex v. Carlisle to be clear. The act was meant in case of parishes; but the effect would be quite the reverse, if, when one of a numerous family wants relief, the whole must go to the parish workhouse; and, on the other hand, that the parish is not entitled to the labour of a whole family, because one of them might want relief.—The case stood over for further argument.

ADMISSION OF PAUPERS INTO WORKHOUSE.

Occasional relief ordered by the justices, upon refusal of guardian to relieve. (a)

22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 35, 37. “That it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace, on complaint made upon oath, by or on the behalf of any poor person belonging to any parish, township, or place, that the guardian, upon application made to him, hath refused such poor person proper relief, and after enquiring into the condition and circumstance of such poor person upon oath, either to order him or her, by writing under the hand of such justice, some weekly or other relief, or direct such guardian to send such poor person to the poorhouse, in case he or she shall appear a fit object to be kept and provided for there, according to the true intent and construction of this act; which order shall be complied with, or sufficient cause shown to the contrary, before such justice, by such guardian, within two days after he shall receive the same; and if any guardian shall, upon due notice of any such order, refuse or neglect to obey the same, he shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit the sum of five pounds. And be it further enacted, that out of the penalty hereby inflicted upon the guardian, for disobeying the order of a justice of the peace for the relief and maintenance of any poor person, so much thereof as the justices of the peace who shall convict such offender shall direct to be paid to such poor person to whom such relief was ordered, shall be paid to him or her accordingly, and the remainder applied in such manner as the other penalties are hereby directed to be disposed of.”

behalf such complaint is made, is an idle or disorderly person, and has not used proper means to get employment, it shall and may be lawful for the justice, after examining such person, and hearing the whole circumstances of the case, to commit such person to the house of correction for any time not exceeding three calendar months, nor less than one calendar month; or if it shall appear to such justice upon inquiry as aforesaid, that the husband or father of such person making complaint, or on whose behalf complaint shall be so made, for want of relief, is an idle or disorderly person, able to work, but by his neglect of work, or for want of seeking employment, or by spending the money he earns in alehouses, or places of bad repute, does not maintain his wife or children, and suffers them to be reduced to want, it shall and may be lawful for such justice of the peace, in like manner, to commit the husband of such poor woman, or the father of such poor child or children, to the house of correction, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, nor less than one calendar month."

justice may commit him to the house of correction.

Sect. 36. "Provided, that when any complaint or application shall be made to a justice of the peace, for the relief of any poor person, within any parish, township, or place, for which a visitor shall be appointed, such justice shall not summon the guardian to appear before him, unless application shall have been first made, by the person so complaining, to the guardian, and if he refuses redress, to the visitor, (it being part of his duty to adjust matters of that sort,) who shall order relief if he thinks it necessary, either within or out of the poorhouse as he shall judge right; but if sufficient relief shall not be so given or ordered, the poor person complaining, or on whose behalf such complaint shall be made, shall be redressed by such justice in the manner herein-before directed." But 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 27, enacts "that if it shall be made to appear to any justice to whom any such complaint or application for relief shall be made, that the visitor of the parish or united parishes from which relief shall be sought is absent from home, or is resident more than six miles from the place of abode of the complainant, and that application for relief hath been made to the guardian, and hath been refused, it shall be lawful for such justice to summon the guardian to appear before him to answer such complaint, and to proceed thereon, and make such order therein, as the case shall require, in like manner as in cases where application hath been made to the visitor, in the manner by the said act directed."

Application to be made first to guardian, then to the visitor, before a justice makes any order.

Rex v. Laughton, 2 M. & Sel. 324. The defendant having been convicted by two justices at the special sessions, and fined 30s. for disobeying an order of a justice, under 33 Geo. III. c. 55, for the payment of 4s. for the relief of Mary Lewis and her children, appealed to the sessions. The conviction was confirmed. Case:—The parish of West Walton is incorporated under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, for the maintenance of its poor; and has a poorhouse fitted up for the reception of the poor. Application for relief being made by M. Lewis for herself and her two children, the guardian and the visitor directed them to be received into the poorhouse; whereupon the justice made the above order, directing a pecuniary relief out of the poorhouse. On the appeal, the question stated for the opinion of the Court was, "whether the magistrate had power and authority, under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, to make the said order for the pecuniary relief of the paupers out of the poorhouse?"—After hearing counsel, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, The justice does not affect to determine upon the ground of its being a qualified refusal of relief. If proper relief has not been refused, the justice has not any jurisdiction. The visitor, to whom it is referred by law, as a part of his duty, to say whether the relief shall be given in or out of the poorhouse, has decided that question, and has determined it to be proper relief. If it depended on the choice of the pauper, the poorhouse would be useless. The visitor having adjusted it, the matter was at an end, and not within the cognizance of the magistrate, and therefore the infliction of this penalty was not warranted.—Le Blanc, J., The 7th section of the statute, which has been relied on in argument as putting the guardian on the footing of an overseer, must be taken with reference to the general policy of the act in which it is contained, and when the 36th section of the same act directs that application shall be made both to the guardian and visitor, before any application is made to a justice, and when it adds that it is the duty of the visitor to adjust matters of that sort, that is, whether it is most proper to relieve in or out of the poorhouse, the liability of the guardian as overseer, imposed by the 7th section, must be controlled by the subsequent clause. The visitor must always determine whether the party is to be relieved in or out of the poorhouse, otherwise the whole policy of the act would be avoided.—Bayley and Dampier, Js., concurred. Order of sessions quashed. See Rex v. Keer, 5 T. R. 159.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 28, "that every person or persons, to be sent to any house or houses to be provided under the authority of this act, shall, at the time of his or her entering such house, deliver, or cause to be delivered, to the governor thereof, or to his assistant, if any, an order, signed by one of the guardians of the poor of the parish, township, or place, from which such person shall come, for the admission of such person or persons, in the form or to the effect contained in the said schedule, No. XII.; which order shall be carefully kept by the governor, and entered by him in a book to be provided for that purpose."

By s. 29, "that no person shall be sent to such poor house or houses, except such as are become indigent by old age, sickness, or infirmities, and are unable to acquire a maintenance by their labour; and except such orphan children as shall be sent thither by order of the guardian or guardians of the poor, with the approbation of the visitor; and except such children as shall necessarily go with their mothers thither for sustenance."

Sect. 30. "That all infant children of tender years, and who, from accident or misfortune, shall become chargeable to the parish or place to which they belong, may either be sent to such poorhouse as aforesaid, or be placed by the guardian or guardians of the poor, with the approbation of the visitor, with some reputable person or persons in or near the parish, township, or place, to which they belong, at such weekly allowance as shall be agreed upon between the parish officers and such person or persons with the approbation of the visitor, until such child or children shall be of sufficient age to be put into service, or bound apprentice to husbandry, or some trade or occupation; and a list of the names of every child so placed out, and by whom and where kept, shall be given to the visitor; who shall see that they are properly treated, or cause them to be removed, and placed under the care of some other person or persons, if he finds just cause so to do; and when every such child shall attain such age, he or she shall be so placed out, at the expense of the parish, township, or place, to which he or she shall belong, according to the laws in being: provided nevertheless, that if the parents or relations of any poor child sent to such house, or so placed out as aforesaid, or any other responsible person, shall desire to receive and provide for any such poor child or children, and signify the same to the guardians at their monthly meeting, the guardians shall, and are hereby required to dismiss, or cause to be dismissed, such child or children from the poor house, or from the care of such person or persons as aforesaid, and deliver him, her, or them, to the parent, relation, or other person so applying as aforesaid: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall give any power to separate any child or children, under the age of seven years, from his, her, or their parent or parents, without the consent of such parent or parents."

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 45, enacts "that nothing in this act contained shall authorise the detention in any workhouse of any dangerous lunatic, insane person, or idiot, for any longer period than fourteen days; and every person wilfully detaining in any workhouse any such lunatic, insane person, or idiot, for more than fourteen days, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any place duly licensed for the reception of lunatics and other insane persons, or to any workhouse being also a county lunatic asylum."

22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 31, "that all idle or disorderly persons, who are able, but unwilling, to work or maintain themselves and their families, shall be prosecuted by the guardians of the poor of the several parishes, townships, and places, wherein they reside, and punished in such manner as idle and disorderly persons are directed to be by the statute made in the seventeenth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Second; and if any guardian shall neglect to make complaint thereof, against every such person or persons, to some neighbouring justices of the peace, within ten days after it shall come to his knowledge, he shall, for every such neglect, forfeit a sum not exceeding five pounds, nor less than twenty shillings, one moiety whereof, when recovered, shall be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to be disposed of as the other forfeitures are hereinafter directed to be applied."

Admission of Pauper into the Work-house.

Sect. 32. "That where there shall be, in any parish, township, or place, any poor persons who shall be able and willing to work, but who cannot get employment, it shall and may be lawful for the guardian of the poor of such parish, township, or place, and he is hereby required, on application made to him by or on behalf of such poor person, to agree for the labour of such poor person or persons, at any work or employment suited to his or her strength and capacity, in any parish, township, or place, near the place of his or her residence, and to maintain, or cause such person or persons to be properly maintained, lodged, and provided for, until such employment shall be procured, and during the time of such work, and to receive the money to be earned by such work or labour, and apply it in such maintenance, as far as the same will go, and make up the deficiency, if any; and if the same shall happen to exceed the money expended in such maintenance, to account for the surplus, which shall afterwards, within one calendar month, be given to such poor person or persons who shall have earned such money, if no further expenses shall be then incurred on his or her account to exhaust the same. And in case such poor person or persons shall refuse to work, or run away from such work or employment, complaint shall be made thereof by the guardian to some justice or justices of the peace in or near the said parish, township, or place; who shall enquire into the same upon oath, and on conviction punish such offender or offenders, by committing him, her, or them to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months, nor less than one calendar month."

Persons not able to get employment, may be provided therewith by guardians.

Sect. 33. "That the guardian of the poor for any parish, township, or place, adopting the provisions of this act as aforesaid, shall provide, at the expense of such parish, township, or place, suitable and necessary clothing for the persons sent by him to such poorhouse as aforesaid; and in case of his neglect so to do, the governor or one of the guardians of every such house shall make complaint thereof to some neighbouring justice of the peace, who shall summon the guardian so making neglect to appear before him to answer the same complaint, and direct him to provide such clothing as shall to such justice appear necessary; and if such guardian shall make default in providing such clothing, within ten days after such direction, it shall and may be lawful for such justice of the peace to direct the governor of such poorhouse, or the guardian so making such complaint, to provide the same, and to demand from such guardian so making neglect, the charges and expences of such clothing; and in default of payment thereof, upon demand made, it shall and may be lawful for such justice or justices of the peace to levy the same, and the costs and charges attending the recovery thereof, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of every such guardian so making default."

Clothing suitable to be provided by guardians.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 24, "that the poor persons who shall be sent to every such house, by virtue and under the authority of this act, shall be maintained therein at the general expense of the respective parishes, townships, and places, so adopting the provisions of this act as aforesaid, according to the terms, and in the proportions, directed and prescribed by this act. And that the treasurer, with the assistance of the governor of every such house, to be appointed as aforesaid, shall provide all fit and necessary provisions for the maintenance of such poor, and keep an account thereof."

And 56 Geo. III. c. 129, s. 2, enacts "that it shall not be lawful for any governor, director, guardian, or master of any house of industry or workhouse, on any pretence, to chain, or confine by chains or manacles, any poor person of sane mind."

and by the laws in being no sufficient punishment is provided for such offences; it is therefore enacted, that in case any person or persons maintained in any public workhouse or workhouses established for the relief, maintenance, and employment of the poor, shall refuse to work at any work, occupation, or employment suited to his, her, or their age, strength, and capacity, or shall be guilty of drunkenness or other misbehaviour, every such person or persons being thereof lawfully convicted before any justice or justices of the peace, shall thereupon by such justice or justices of the peace be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, for any period of time not exceeding twenty-one days, and during such time to be kept to hard labour."

4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 92, enacts "that if any person shall bring or attempt to bring into any workhouse any spirituous or fermented liquor, without the order in writing of the master, it shall be lawful for the master or any officer of the same, acting under his direction, to apprehend such offender, and to carry him before a justice, who is empowered to determine such offence in a summary way; and upon conviction the party offending shall forfeit not exceeding ten pounds; and in default of payment, such justice is required to commit such offender to the common gaol for not exceeding two calendar months, unless such penalty shall be sooner paid."

Sect. 93 enacts "that if any master of a workhouse shall order any spirituous or fermented liquor to be brought into any workhouse, except for the domestic use of himself or of any officer of the workhouse, or their families, or except under the written authority of the surgeon, or of any justice visiting the same, or of the guardians, or in conformity with any orders of the commissioners; or if any master or other officer of any workhouse shall bring into such workhouse, or knowingly permit to be brought or sold, used, lent, or given away therein, any spirituous or fermented liquor, contrary to the orders of the commissioners; or shall punish with any corporal punishment any adult person in such workhouse, or confine any such person for misbehaviour longer than twenty-four hours, or such further time as may be necessary to have such person carried before a justice; or shall in any way abuse or ill-treat, or misconduct himself towards or with respect to any poor person in such workhouse; every master or officer of a workhouse shall for every such offence, upon the complaint of the overseers or guardians of the parish or union, or of any such poor person, and upon conviction before any two justices, forfeit not more than twenty pounds, as such justices may direct; and in default of payment such justices are required to commit such offender to the common gaol for not exceeding six calendar months, unless such penalty shall be sooner paid: provided that if at the time when any master or officer shall be so convicted there shall be due to him any money in respect of his employment, or upon any balance of account from the overseers or guardians, it shall be lawful for such justices, upon the application of such overseers or guardians, to direct that such money or balance shall be retained in payment of such penalty; and such order shall be a good discharge for so much money against the claim of the master or officer."

Sect. 9. 11. Relief of the Poor out of the Workhouse.

The authority of the commissioners in regulating the relief of the poor is now so general, that the present state of the law deserves consideration before entering on the former law on this subject. The power of the commissioners is general, but they are by the 15th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, prevented from interfering in any individual case for the purpose of giving relief. Subject to their control, the 54th section of that statute (a) enacts, that the ordering, giving, and directing of all relief to the poor of any parish which, according to the provisions of any of the said recited acts, (b) or of the 1 & 2 Will. Sect. 27. "That in any union which may be formed under this act it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace usually acting for the district wherein such union may be situated, at their just and proper discretion, to direct by order under their hands and seals, that relief shall be given to any adult person who shall from old age or infirmity of body be wholly unable to work, without requiring that such person shall reside in any workhouse: provided always, that one of such justices shall certify in such order of his own knowledge, that such person is wholly unable to work, as aforesaid; and provided further, that such person shall be lawfully entitled to relief in such union, and shall desire to receive the same out of a workhouse."

Sect. 52 recites, that a practice had obtained of giving relief to persons or their families who, at the time, were in the employment of individuals, and the relief of the able-bodied and their families is in many places administered in modes productive of evil in other respects: and whereas difficulty may arise in case any immediate and universal remedy is attempted to be applied in the matters aforesaid; and enacts, that it shall be lawful for the commissioners to order (a) to what extent and for what period the relief to be given

(a) The following orders have been issued by the commissioners to most of the unions.

By the 21st rule (see Appendix,) no relief shall be given in money (except in sickness or accident) to any able-bodied male pauper who is in employment, (the same not being parish work,) and in the receipt of earnings; nor to any part of his family who shall be dependent on him, or for whose relief and maintenance he shall be liable.

If any able-bodied male pauper shall apply to be set to work by the parish, one-half at least of the relief which may be afforded to him or to his family shall be in kind.

One-half at least of the relief which may be afforded to widows or single women, not being aged or infirm, shall be in kind.

No relief shall be given to any able-bodied male pauper by payment on account of the rent for house or lodging for any part of his family who shall be dependent upon him, and for whose relief and maintenance he shall be liable, or by allowance towards such rent.

Except in case of accident, sickness, or other urgent necessity, no relief shall be afforded from the poor-rates to any pauper between the ages of sixteen and sixty, belonging to any parish or place comprised in the union, who shall not be resident therein: provided always, that this regulation shall not extend to any person not being an able-bodied male pauper between the ages of sixteen and sixty, who shall, on the day herein appointed for the first meeting of the guardians, be in the receipt of relief from any parish or place comprised in the said

If commissioners disapprove of delay, they may fix a day from which all such relief shall be disallowed.

RELIEF BY LOAN.

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 58, it is enacted, that any relief, or the cost price thereof, which shall be given to or on account of any poor person above the age of twenty-one, or to his wife, or any part of his family under the age of sixteen, and which the commissioners shall direct, (a) to be considered as given by way of loan, and whether any receipt or engagement to repay the same shall have been given or not, is hereby declared to be a loan to such poor person.

Such relief as commissioners may direct to be considered as loan.

Sect. 59 enacts, that where any relief shall be given by way of loan, it shall be lawful for any justice, upon the application of the overseers or guardians providing such relief, and upon proof of the same having been given and still remaining due, to issue a summons, requiring such person, as well as his master or employer, to appear before any two justices, to show cause why any wages due, or which may become due, should not be paid over to such overseers or guardians, and if no sufficient cause be shown, or if such person, or some one on his behalf, shall not appear, then the justices shall direct the master or employer to pay, either in one sum or by instalments, as the justices shall think fit, taking into consideration the circumstances of such poor person and his family, out of such wages, to such overseers or guardians, the amount of such relief, and the receipt of any such overseer or

RELIEF OF THE POOR NOT IN WORKHOUSE, AND BEFORE 4 & 5 WILL. IV. c. 76.

The intention of the legislature in passing the 43 Eliz. was to provide work for the able-bodied poor out of employment, and money for the sick and impotent; (a) and for a long period this humane and just policy was the guide in the administration of relief. In modern times a different system prevailed, and constant relief was given to the able-bodied poor, though in full employment, whenever the number of children rendered the wages of the parents insufficient for their maintenance, a practice clearly sanctioned by the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 32. This system became so general and was considered so pernicious, that the immediate object of the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, was to put an end to such practice, either at once or by degrees; and in a former section the regulations of the commissioners for this purpose has been considered. (b) The administration of the relief of the poor was originally entrusted to the overseers, and even now, where there are no guardians, select vestry, or local act, the duty still belongs to such overseers.

DUTY OF PARISH OFFICERS TO PROCURE EMPLOYMENT.

The enactment of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, as to mode of relief, &c.

43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, provides that the overseers shall take order for setting to work the children of all such whose parents shall not be thought able to maintain their children, and all such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and using no ordinary and daily trade; and for the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them being poor, and not able to work.

Under the statute of Eliz. overseers must endeavour to find work for able-bodied poor who are out of employment.

Rex v. Collett, 3 D. & R. 582; 2 B. & C. 324. This was an appeal against the allowance of the accounts of the overseers. Case: The appellant is the proprietor of an estate in the parish of K., a part of which is in his own occupation. In consequence of the depression in the price of agricultural produce, the farmers have been rendered unable to make any improve-

(a) In Strype's Annals of Church and State, under Queen Eliz., b. 2, p. 90, there is a letter, which was addressed to Lord Treasurer Burghley, by a justice of peace for the county of Somerset, which shows that the great evils arising from habits of idleness amongst the poor began then to be understood, and strengthens the idea that one great object of the legislative provisions for the poor made about that time, was to prevent able-bodied men from being unemployed. After observing upon the great increase of crime, and the number of wandering, idle vagabonds then committing depredations in that part of the country, the writer proceeds, "and when these lewd people are committed to the gaol, the poor country that is robbed by them are forced to feed them, which they grieve at. And this year there hath been disbursed to the relief of the prisoners in the gaol 73*l.*, and yet they allowed but 6*d.* a man weekly. And if they were not delivered at every quarter sessions, so much more would not serve, nor two such gaols would hold them. But if this money might be employed to build some houses adjoining to the gaol for them to work in, and every prisoner, committed for any cause and not able to relieve himself, compelled to work, as many of them as are delivered upon their trials, either by the acquittal of the grand jury, or petty jury, burning in the hand or whipping, presently transferred thence to the houses of correction to be kept in work, except some present will take any into service; I dare presume to say the tenth felony will not be committed that now is." This letter also shows that at that time prisoners committed for trial, although they could not be compelled, and were not willing to work, were in point of fact in some places supported at the expense of the public. It seems, however, that they could not legally claim to be so maintained. See the case of The Justices of the North Riding of Yorkshire, 2 B. & C. 286; S. C., 3 D. & R. 510. Vol. II. tit. "Gaols," &c.

(b) Ante, p. 62, note.

ments on their lands, and consequently have employed few labourers, by which means a considerable part of the labouring population has been totally unemployed; and during this period, all poor persons belonging to the parish, who had been unable to obtain employment, have received sums of money for their maintenance from the parish officers in proportion to the number of their respective families, for which no labour has been required from them. The respondents admitted that the persons to whom the sums objected to in the account were paid, were in fact both able and willing to work, but that no employment could be obtained for them. No evidence was adduced to prove that the overseers could have employed the labourers. None of the sums objected to were paid under any order from a magistrate. The parishioners met once a week, at which meetings all applications for relief were received, and where all labourers belonging to the parish, who had not in the preceding week been in constant employment, attended to give an account of their earnings, and received such sums as, with the earnings, should amount to a sum deemed competent to their maintenance in proportion to the number of their children. In several cases able-bodied men with four or five children, having had no employment in the preceding week, received from 7s. to 8s. 6d. for the week; having been employed three days, 3s. 6d. to 4s. per week; two days, 5s. per week; and so in proportion to the number of their children and the amount of their week's earnings. This relief was afforded to these persons, solely on the ground of their having been out of employment, without inquiry as to any means they might have for the supply of their immediate wants by sale or pledge of their household effects; and that in many instances the weekly relief was afforded to various able-bodied labourers for many weeks in succession." Abbott, C. J. "It does not appear upon the case before us, that the overseers of the poor considered themselves bound to provide work for the unemployed poor, if that were practicable, nor whether they in any way endeavoured to attain that object. Before we determine whether the overseers were or were not justified in giving pecuniary relief to the unemployed poor, the case must go down to the sessions again, that we may be informed whether any, and, if any, what endeavours were made to procure employment for them. All that the court can now say is, that undoubtedly it is the primary duty of the overseers to find employment for the poor if possible. And I express that opinion now for the sake of the poor themselves, to whom no greater kindness can be done than by enabling them to earn their own living by labour, instead of suffering them to eat the bread of idleness, by which their habits and morals must soon be corrupted." Bayley, J., suggested, "That it was the bounden duty of the overseers to obtain work for the poor if they could, either in or out of their own parish, and it was only in case of inability to procure work, that they would be justified in giving relief in money. Probably this very discussion would rouse overseers of the poor to a sense of their duty in endeavouring to find work for unemployed poor persons. There were several useful modes of employing poor persons, advantageous to the public, such as levelling hills, and improving roads. Within the last few years a great deal had been done in improving the public highways by this mode of employing poor labourers." The case was sent back to the sessions to be amended.

Parishes not availing themselves of the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, are not compellable to erect workhouses, but may maintain and employ their poor at their own homes. Rex v. Wetherill, Cald. 432.

By 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 59, s. 1, the overseer may inclose from any forest or waste lands belonging to the crown, lying in or near the parish, with the consent of the lord treasurer or the commissioners of the treasury, not exceeding fifty acres, for the purpose of cultivating and improving the same for the use and benefit of such parish, and the poor persons within the same. By the 2 Will. IV. c. 42, allotments made for the poor in parishes inclosed under an act of parliament, may, with the consent of the trustees of the allotment and the overseers, be let to industrious cottagers. Each portion to be not less than one quarter of an acre, and not exceeding one acre. The statute makes provision about the mode and time of letting, and the recovery of the rent or possession of the land, and prohibits the erection of habitations, and it directs that the rent shall be applied in the purchase of fuel, to be distributed in the winter season among the poor parishioners legally settled and resident in or near the parish. There is a further power for the vestry to exchange such allotments for land more favourably situated. All these powers are now subjected to the rules of the commissioners. See Appendix, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 69, s. 4.

By 3 Car. I. c. 4, s. 22, the churchwardens and overseers may, by the consent of two justices within their respective limits, wherein shall be more justices than one, and where no more shall be than one, with the assent of and overseers of the poor of any parish, with the consent of the inhabitants thereof in vestry assembled, to take into their hands any land or ground which shall belong to such parish, or to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, or to the poor thereof, or to purchase, or to hire and take on lease for and on account of the parish, any suitable portion or portions of land within or near to such parish, not exceeding twenty acres in the whole;* and to employ and set to work in the cultivation of such land, on account of the parish, any such persons as by law they are directed to set to work, and to pay to such of the poor persons so employed as shall not be supported by the parish, reasonable wages for their work; and the poor persons so employed shall have such and the like remedies for the recovery of their wages, and shall be subject to such and the like punishment for misbehaviour in their employment, as other labourers in husbandry are by law entitled and subject to."

Sect. 13 enacts, "that for the promotion of industry amongst the poor, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, with the consent of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, to let any portion and portions of such parish land as aforesaid, or of the land to be so purchased or taken on account of the parish, to any poor and industrious inhabitant of the parish, to be by him or her occupied and cultivated on his or her own account, and for his or her own benefit, at such reasonable rent and for such term as shall by the inhabitants in vestry be fixed and determined."

(a) In 1832 a temporary act was passed for the better employment of the agricultural labourers, by which agreements made in vestry by a majority of three-fourths of the rate payers, and approved by the justices at the petty sessions, were to be binding on the parish; and it was enacted, that the overseers should not expend any money raised for the relief of the poor in the employment of any person in any work whatever. The statute continued in force till the 25th day of March, 1834.

that one justice, set up and use any trade, mystery, or occupation, only for the setting on work and better relief of the poor.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 5, the churchwardens and overseers, or the greater part of them, by the leave of the lord of the manor, whereof any waste or common within the parish is parcel, and on agreement with him made in writing, under his hand and seal, or otherwise, according to any order to be set down by the justices in sessions, by like leave and agreement of the lord in writing under his hand and seal, may build in fit and convenient places of habitation in such waste or common, at the charge of the parish, or otherwise of the hundred or county as aforesaid, to be rated and gathered in manner before expressed, convenient houses of dwelling for the said impotent poor.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 4, the overseers, with the consent of vestry,^(a) might contract with any person for the employing the poor in their respective parishes, or in the united parishes, and take the benefit of the work, labour, and service of such poor persons.

22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 1. So much of stat. 9 Geo. I. "as respects the maintaining or hiring out the labour of the poor by contract, within any parish adopting the provisions of this act, is repealed; and sect. 2 provides, that it shall and may be lawful for the visitor and guardian, or visitors and guardians, appointed as hereafter mentioned, of any parish, township, or place, or parishes, townships, and places, which shall have adopted the provisions and complied with the requisites of this act, and shall have a visitor appointed, from time to time to make agreements with any person or persons for the diet or clothing of such poor persons who shall be sent to the house or houses to be provided under the authority of this act, and for the work and labour of such poor persons, so that no such agreement shall be made for any longer time than twelve months, and so that the same shall be, and every such agreement is hereby declared to be, under the strictest inspection and controul of the visitor, guardian, and governor of such poorhouse, and also of the justices of the peace for the limit where such poorhouse shall be; two of which justices, upon proof of any abuse, shall have power to dissolve such contract."

By 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 7, it is enacted, "that when and so often as any contract or contracts shall be made or entered into for the providing, furnishing, or supplying any articles, materials, or things for the use of the poor in the workhouse or workhouses of or belonging to any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, or for the erecting of any building or buildings, the expense whereof is to be defrayed out of any rate or rates, or other monies applicable to the relief of the poor, the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or other person or persons having the management, control, or direction of the poor in such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, shall cause notice of their intention to enter into such contract or contracts, and of the time and place, when and where they shall assemble and meet for such purpose, and of the security which will be required for the performance of such contract or contracts, to be affixed in a conspicuous manner on the outer door of the church, or respective churches, to which such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, shall belong, or to be inserted in one or more of the public newspapers most generally circulated in the neighbourhood, seven days at the least previous to such meeting, in order and to the intent that any person or persons willing to undertake the supplying or furnishing the same, may make proposals for that purpose to such churchwardens and overseers, or other person or persons as aforesaid, at the time and place mentioned in such notice."

The 43 Geo. III. c. 54, enacted, that the contractors should reside in the parish, and give security, to the satisfaction of two justices, in a penalty not less than one-half of the amount of the poor rate; but this statute is repealed by 4 & 5 Will. Rex v. Beeston, 3 T. R. 592. On an application for a mandamus against one of the overseers of Drayton, for refusing to pay his proportion of parish money in his hands to the person who had contracted to maintain the poor: the question was, whether it was necessary that all the churchwardens and overseers should concur in making the contract, or the majority of them would bind the rest? It appeared that three churchwardens and two overseers only agreed to the contract, and one overseer refused to join. Lord Kenyon, "The foundation of my opinion is, that the stat. of 43 Eliz. c. 2, has directed that the general acts to be done by the churchwardens and overseers respecting the poor shall be done by a majority of them; and I think that the spirit of that statute pervades all the subsequent acts respecting the government of the poor. I consider the statute as engrafted in the 43 Eliz. qualifying the particular act, but referring for the execution of it to the manner pointed out by that statute. Besides, a common understanding what is required to be done by the churchwardens and overseers, is satisfied by being done by a majority." The rest of the court concurred—and the rule was made absolute to compel the overseer to pay his proportion to the contractor.

RELIEF OF SICK AND PENSIONERS AND THEIR FAMILIES.

*Relief of the Sick
and their Families.*

Pensions for service in the navy, army, &c. may be assigned in certain cases for the indemnity of parishes.

The aged and sick were relieved by money payments, and where the applicant was entitled to a pension, the overseers are authorized to require an assignment of it.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 30, "when any person entitled to or in receipt of any pension, superannuation, or other allowance, in respect of his service in the navy, royal marines, army, or ordnance, shall apply to any parish for relief, for himself, or for his wife or family, it shall be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor to require the pensioner or other person applying for relief, before the same shall be granted, to assign to them the next quarterly or other payment or allowance which shall become payable to him, to the intent that they may receive the same, and retain for the use of the parish so much thereof as shall have been by them advanced for the relief of such pensioner or other person, or of his wife or family residing with him in such parish; and it shall also be lawful for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, at the request of any person who shall be entitled to or in the receipt of any such pension, superannuation, or other allowance, to advance for his support, or the support of his family, any weekly sum not exceeding the rate of his pension or allowance, to be repaid by and out of the next quarterly or other payment of such pension or allowance, and to take an assignment thereof by way of security for the money so to be advanced, any thing in any act or acts to the contrary notwithstanding; and every assignment to be made of any such pension, superannuation, or allowance, for the purposes of this act, shall be exempt from stamp duty, and shall be in the form or to the effect following; that is to say—

*Form of assign-

RELIEF TO PRISONERS CONFINED UNDER MESNE PROCESS FOR DEBT, IN GAOLS WHICH ARE NOT COUNTY GAOLS.

52 Geo. III. c. 160. After reciting that "great distress is suffered by poor persons confined under mesne process for debt in such gaols as are not county gaols, in consequence of their not receiving any allowance whereon to subsist during the time of such confinement," it is enacted, s. 1, "that it shall be lawful for any one justice of the peace acting for the county, riding, or division, wherein any gaol which is not a county gaol is situated, to order the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein any such gaol (which is not a county gaol) shall be situated, to relieve any poor person who shall be confined in such gaol under mesne process for debt, and who shall appear to such justice to be unable to support himself or herself, and who shall have applied for relief to such overseers as aforesaid."

Sect. 4. "That a copy of the order of removal, and of the order for suspending the execution of the same as aforesaid, shall, as soon as may be after the making thereof respectively, be served upon the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place in which such poor person shall by such order of removal, be adjudged to be legally settled."

Sect. 5. "That although such poor person shall not have been actually removed in pursuance of such order of removal as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to direct the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place in which such pauper is adjudged to be settled, to repay to the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein such gaol shall be situated, all the charges proved upon oath of any such overseers of the parish, township, or place where the gaol is situated, to have been incurred in granting relief to such pauper during the time of his confinement and the suspension of such order, not exceeding 6d. per diem; and if the overseers of the parish, township, or place to which such order of removal shall be made, or any or either of them, shall refuse or neglect to pay any such sum so advanced as aforesaid within twenty-one days after demand thereof, and shall not within the same time give notice of appeal as hereinafter mentioned, it shall be lawful for one justice of the peace, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause the money so directed to be paid as aforesaid, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so refusing or neglecting to pay the same, and also such costs attending the same, not exceeding 40s., as such justice shall direct; and if the parish, township, or place to which the removal was ordered to be made, be without the jurisdiction of the justice of peace issuing the warrant, then such warrant shall be transmitted to any justice of the peace having jurisdiction within such parish, township, or place as aforesaid, who upon receipt thereof is hereby authorized and required to indorse the same for execution: provided nevertheless, that if the sum so ordered to be paid on account of such costs and charges exceed the sum of 5l., the party or parties aggrieved by such order may appeal to the next general quarter sessions for the county, riding, or division in which such gaol is situated, against the same, as they may do against an order for the removal of poor persons by any law now in being; and if the court of quarter sessions shall be of opinion that the sum so awarded be more than of right ought to have been directed to be paid, such court may and is hereby directed to strike out the sum contained in the said order, and insert the sum which, in the judgment of the said court, ought to be paid, and in every such case the said court of quarter sessions shall direct that the said order so amended shall be carried into execution by the said justices by whom the order was originally made, or either of them, or by such other justice or justices as the said court shall direct."

Sect. 6. "That it shall be lawful for the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein such poor person shall, by such order of removal, be adjudged to be legally settled, to appeal against such order to the next general quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division in which such gaol is situated, holden after the service of the copy of such order of removal, in case such copy shall have been served upon such overseers twenty-one days before the holding of such quarter sessions, but in case the same shall not be served twenty-one days before the holding of such next general quarter sessions, then the appeal may be to the next succeeding general quarter sessions holden for the said county, riding, or division, and upon such appeal the like proceedings may be had as are observed in other cases of appeals against orders of removal of poor persons by any law now in being: provided always, that in case such order of removal and suspension is not appealed against in manner aforesaid, or if upon appeal such order shall be confirmed, such poor person shall be deemed and taken to be legally settled in the parish, township, or place in which he shall by such order of removal be adjudged to be legally settled."

Relief to Prisoners for Debt.

Sect. 7. "That in case any poor person applying for relief under the provisions of this act shall, upon his examination as to his last legal settlement, be found not to be legally settled in any parish, township, or place within England and Wales, it shall be lawful for any one justice of the peace to order the overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place wherein the gaol is situated, (in which such poor person shall be confined under mesne process for debt,) to relieve such poor persons with a sum not exceeding 6d. per diem out of the funds in their hands applicable to the relief of the poor, which sum shall be reimbursed to the overseers of the poor of the said parish, township, or place, for the use of such funds, out of the county rate, by the treasurer of the county, riding, or division in which such parish, township, or place shall be situated, at the expiration of the confinement of such poor person upon such mesne process as aforesaid."

If pauper has no settlement in England or Wales, the allowance is to be paid out of county rate.

MEDICAL RELIEF.

Medical assistance is within the meaning of relief, as understood and used in the poor laws, and an overseer is bound to supply such relief to a pauper labouring under a dangerous illness, though out of the workhouse, and not having previously had relief. Per Holroyd, J., Rex v. Warren, Worcester Lent Ass. 1820. See Casual Poor, post, 88 to 96; and see 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 54.

Relief by Medical assistance.

A stranger, and, a fortiori, a deputy overseer, directing a surgeon to attend a pauper, is liable, in respect of his retainer, to pay the surgeon's bill. But a deputy overseer is not liable unless he has expressly retained the surgeon. Watling v. Walters, 1 Car. & P. 132.

RELIEF BY LOAN. (b)

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 29, after reciting, that it is expedient to discourage that reliance upon the poor's rates which frequently induces artisans, labourers, and others, to squander away earnings which would, with suitable care, have afforded sufficient means for the support of their families, enacts, "that whenever it shall appear to the justices, or to the general or select vestry, or to such guardians, governors, or directors as aforesaid, or to the overseers of the poor, to whom application shall be made for relief for any poor person, that he might, but for his extravagance, neglect, or wilful misconduct, have been able to maintain himself, or to support his family (as the case may be), it shall be lawful for the overseers of the poor (by the direction of the justices, or of the general or select vestry, or of such guardians, governors or directors, where application shall have been made to them respectively,) to advance money weekly, or otherwise, as may be requisite, to the person so applying, by way of loan only, and to take his receipt for, and engagement to repay every sum

Relief by Loan.

Overseers empowered, in certain cases, by direction of justices, &c., to give relief by way of loan only. (a)

(a) It is stated in the Report, p. 333. "From nearly every district complaints were received that large classes of persons who obtained, during particular seasons, such wages as would enable them to maintain themselves and families until the return of their season of work, and provide by insurance against sickness and other casualties, spend the whole of their earnings as fast as they receive them, and when out of work throw themselves and their families on the parish, and remain chargeable until the period of high wages returns. The alternation of dissipation and privation, to which such persons have become habituated, render it probable, that, even under an improved system of administration, many of them would endure the most rigid workhouse discipline during the winter, to gain freedom from self-restraint in spring, summer and autumn."

to be so advanced (for which no stamp duty shall be required); and it shall be lawful for any two justices, upon the application (within one year after any such loan or loans) of one or more of the overseers of the poor for the time being of the parish, to summon the person to whom any money shall have been so advanced; and if upon examination by such justices into his circumstances, it shall appear to them that such person is able, by weekly instalments or otherwise, to repay the whole or any part of the money so advanced to him, and for which he shall have given any such receipt and engagement, it shall be lawful for such justices to make an order under their hands and seals for the repayment of the whole or of any part of such money, at such time and times, and in such proportions and manner as they shall see fit; and upon every default of payment, by their warrant to commit such person to the common gaol or house of correction, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless the sum and sums which shall be due and payable by virtue of such order shall be sooner paid."

Similar provisions under the Poor Law Amendment Act have been already noticed, p. 64. See 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 58.

ORDER OF JUSTICES.

Cases.*

The order must express that the person is impotent as well as poor.

On an order for relief weekly, the money is due the beginning of the week.

Sessions have no power to order surgeon's bills to be paid;

nor the justices.

Rex v. Highworth, 1 Str. 10; 1 Bott, 460. An order to pay 3s. weekly to a poor person was quashed, because it did not appear that the person relieved was poor and impotent. Parker, C. J., "I favour these orders as much as I can, because nobody takes care to draw them up for the poor. But it must be quashed." (Rex v. Stoke Ursey, 1 Str. 10; S. P. Rex v. Tipper, 1 Bott, 460.)

Rex v. Fearnley, 1 T. R. 316. This was a demurrer to an indictment against the overseer of Checkheaton, for disobeying an order of two justices, for the payment of 1s. 6d. a week to Sarah Firth, for the maintenance of herself and her bastard child. It was objected, that as the money was ordered to be paid weekly, the defendant could not be guilty of any disobedience before the expiration of the first week. But the Court were of opinion that the sum which was ordered to be paid weekly was due at the beginning of the week. Judgment was given for the defendant on another point.

Rex v. Colbitch, 1 Barnard. 46. An order of sessions was made upon the overseers of this parish, that they should pay a surgeon his bill for curing certain poor under their care. The Court said that the sessions have no power to make such orders, and so quashed it.

Rex v. Woodsterton, 2 Barnard. 207, 247; 1 Bott, 464. An order by two justices for paying 5l. upon account of a poor inhabitant when he was in gaol, and likewise for paying a surgeon's bill that was due upon his account, was confirmed at the sessions. It was moved to quash these orders. It was urged that the justices have only power to order parish officers to relieve a poor inhabitant where it is fit he ought to be relieved. But in the present case the parish officers have actually given the party relief. They employed a surgeon and a nurse to take care of him. The surgeon and nurse have a proper remedy by way of action against the officers; and the justices have no pretence to interfere in this manner. And the Court were of opinion that these orders should be quashed. See Casual Poor, post, 88 to 100.

WHERE TO BE RELIEVED.

*Where to be Re-

Poor to be maintained in the parish where they are;

By the several statutes, the poor were to resort or be sent to their own parishes to be relieved; and in Clypton v. Ravistock, Sett. & Rem. 49; 2 Nol. P. L. 369; an order recited that J. S. was last settled in Clypton; then ordering the overseers of Clypton to repair to the parish of Ravistock, and to relieve him, being so sick that he cannot be removed. By the Court: "The justices have no authority to send for officers out of another parish, but the parish where the poor reside are bound to maintain them as long as they continue with them." In Darlington v. Hemlington, (Doug. 9, n. 2, Cald. 6,) where two bastard children, settled at Darlington, resided with their mother as nurse-children in the parish of Hemlington, where the mother was settled, it was determined that the parish where the children's settlement was, should maintain those children in that other parish.

excepting in the case of bastards, being nurse children.

As a parish is not bound to maintain the poor, who are settled, but not resident therein, relief given to a pauper inhabiting another parish affords evidence that the pauper is settled in the relieving parish. Rex v. Wakefield, post.

12. Of the Regulations of Parish Vestries under stats.

[See ante, Vol. I. tit. Churchwardens.]

The 58 Geo. III. c. 69, intituled An act for the regulation of parish vestries, enacts, s. 1, that "no vestry or meeting of the inhabitants in vestry of or for any parish shall be holden until public notice shall have been given of such vestry, and of the place and hour of holding the same, and the special purpose thereof, three days at the least before the day to be appointed for holding such vestry, by the publication of such notice in the parish church or chapel on some Sunday during or immediately after divine service, and by affixing the same, fairly written or printed, on the principal door of such church or chapel."

12. Regulation of Parish Vestries.

Three days' notice to be given of vestries; by publication in the church and affixing on the church door.

Sect. 2. "And for the more orderly conduct of vestries, be it further enacted, that in case the rector or vicar, or perpetual curate, shall not be present, the persons so assembled in pursuance of such notice, shall forthwith nominate and appoint by plurality of votes, to be ascertained as hereinafter is directed, one of the inhabitants of such parish to be the chairman of and preside in every such vestry; and in all cases of equality of votes upon any question arising therein, the chairman shall (in addition to such vote or votes as he may by virtue of this act be entitled to give in right of his assessment) have the casting vote; and minutes of the proceedings and resolutions of every vestry shall be fairly and distinctly entered in a book, (to be provided for that purpose by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor,) and shall be signed by the chairman, and by such other of the inhabitants present as shall think proper to sign the same."

Chairman of vestries appointed.

Chairman to have the casting vote.

Minutes to be entered and signed.

Sect. 3. "In all such vestries every inhabitant present, who shall, by the last rate which shall have been made for the relief of the poor, have been assessed and charged upon or in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value not amounting to 50*l.*, shall have and be entitled to give one vote and no more; and every inhabitant there present, who shall in such last rate have been assessed or charged upon or in respect of any annual rent or rents, profit or value, amounting to 50*l.* or upwards, (whether in one or more than one sum or charge,) shall have and be entitled to give one vote for every 25*l.* of annual rent, profit, and value upon or in respect of which he shall have been assessed or charged in such last rate, so, nevertheless, that no inhabitant shall be entitled to give more than six votes: and in cases where two or more of the inhabitants present shall be jointly rated, each of them shall be entitled to vote according to the proportion and amount which shall be borne by him of the joint charge; and where one only of the persons jointly rated shall attend, he shall be entitled to vote according to and in respect of the whole of the joint charge." (b)

Manner of voting in vestries. (a)

(a) Where guardians are elected under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the right of voting is regulated by that statute, as regards the occupier, but the number of votes which the owner may give is to be governed by this law.

(b) Where a right of nominating a perpetual curate was given to the parishioners, the bye-law or resolution of a parish vestry cannot exclude those who have not paid their church rates. Faulkner v. Elgar, 4 B. & C. 449; 6 D.

12. Regulations of Parish Vestries.

Persons rated to the poor, though not resident, may vote in vestry.

Clerk or agent of corporations, &c., may vote in vestry according to the value of the premises rated.

Inhabitants coming into parish since the last rate may vote.

Inhabitants refusing to pay poor rates, to be excluded from vestries.

Mistake rectified.

59 Geo. III. c. 85, reciting 58 Geo. III. c. 69, which gives a power in certain cases to rate payers, enacts, s. 1, "that any person who shall be assessed and rated for the relief of the poor in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value, arising from any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, situate in any parish, in which any vestry shall be holden under the said recited act, although such person shall not reside in or be an inhabitant of such parish, shall and may lawfully be present at such vestry; and such person shall have, and be entitled to give, such and so many vote or votes at such vestry, in respect of the amount of such rent, profit, or value, as, by the said act, any inhabitant of such parish present at such vestry might or ought to have and be entitled to give, in respect of such amount, and to all intents and purposes, as if such person were an inhabitant of such parish; any thing in the said recited act to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."

Sect. 2. "That in all cases, where any corporation or body politic or corporate, or company, shall be charged to the rate for the relief of the poor of such parish, either in the name of such corporation, or of any officer of the said corporation, it shall and may be lawful for the clerk, secretary, steward, or other agent, duly authorized for that purpose, of such corporation, or body politic or corporate, or company, to be present at any vestry to be holden in the said parish under the said recited act; and such clerk, secretary, steward, or agent, shall be entitled to give such and so many vote or votes at such vestry, in respect of the amount of the rent, profit, or value of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as by the said act any inhabitant assessed to such rate, present at such vestry, might or ought to have and be entitled to in respect of such amount; any thing in the said recited act to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 4. "That when any person shall have become an inhabitant of any parish, or become liable to be rated therein, since the making of the last rate for the relief of the poor thereof, he shall be entitled to vote for and in respect of the lands, tenements, and property for which he shall have become liable to be rated, and shall consent to be rated, in like manner as if he should have been actually rated for the same."

Sect. 5. "That no person who shall have refused or neglected to pay any rate for the relief of the poor, which shall be due from and shall have been demanded of him,* and shall be entitled to vote or to be present in any vestry of the parish for which such rate shall have been made, until he shall have paid the same."

The word "and" was inserted in the above statute by mistake, to rectify which, it was enacted by 59 Geo. III. c. 85, s. 3, "that no person who shall have refused or neglected to pay any rate for the relief of the poor, which shall be due from and shall have been demanded of him, shall be entitled & R. 517. But in Edenborough v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 2 Russ. 93, Lord Eldon held, that where the advowson of a parish was vested in trustees for the benefit of the parishioners, the right of voting at the election may by long usage be limited to parishioners who pay church and poor's rates; and an election by such was confirmed. In this case the same eminent judge determined that a vote by ballot on such occasions was illegal, and an election so made void.

Attorney-General v. Wilkinson, 7 Moore, 187; S. C. 3 B. & B. 266. Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 B. & C. 313; 3 D. & R. 549. Case for a false return to a mandamus. The office of sexton for the parish of Saint Mary, Whitechapel, in the county of Middlesex, is an ancient office, and the right of election is in the inhabitants paying church and poor's rates, in vestry assembled. The office became vacant, and there were two candidates, the plaintiff and J. W. Several inhabitants of the parish claimed a right to give more than one vote under the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3: and the only question in the case is, whether, under the circumstances hereinafter stated, a plurality of votes was admissible at the said election. The poor rates are not, and never have been, assessed upon all the inhabitants uniformly, according to an equal pound-rate: but the rate purports to be made, and, according to ancient custom, always has been made, by the discretion of the vestry without respect to value, but according to the ability of the party charged, such ability being estimated with reference to property, whether in the parish or out of it. In some instances the property is stated in respect of which the party is charged; but in a great majority of cases the property is not stated, and where it is stated, the rate is not in proportion to the rent of the property. Abbott, C. J. "I give no opinion as to the validity of the rates in question. My opinion is founded entirely on the third section of the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, which provides for a plurality of votes. Looking at this rate, I am clearly of opinion, that no person in this parish 'is rated upon or in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value.' If the rate were so made, it must be proportioned to the amount of the rent, profit, or value, in respect of which it is imposed. It is not so proportioned; and it therefore appears not to have been imposed in respect of the property mentioned in the act, but in respect of some ability to contribute to the relief of the poor, measured by some other standard. I am therefore of opinion that the provisions of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, respecting a plurality of votes, do not apply to the parish in question; the plaintiff, consequently, was not duly elected to the office of sexton, and a nonsuit must be entered." Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that this parish is not within the operation of 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3. The general rule is, that there shall be an equal pound-rate upon the property in the parish; therefore all persons having an estate equal in value contribute the same sum. The value of their property is the criterion of the rate. It was the intention of the legislature, by the statute referred to, to increase the power which each inhabitant would have at the vestry meetings, in proportion to the burthen borne by him. This parish cannot have the benefit of that act, for the custom (which may be legal) to make the rate in a particular mode, prevents the property of any individual in the parish being the criterion of the burthen borne by him. We cannot, then, say that the rate is imposed in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value; and unless that be so, the provision for a plurality of votes does not apply." Holroyd, J. "The rate stated in this case is not such as to bring the parish within the third section of 58 Geo. III. c. 69. To be within that, the parties must be assessed upon some annual rent, profit, or value: the rate does not show that they have been so assessed. Certain rents are stated, but the inequality of the rate shows that it is not imposed in respect of those rents; nor does it appear to have been imposed in respect of any profit or value, much less annual profit or value. It is left uncertain in respect of what it is assessed, and therefore is quite insufficient to make the 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 3, applicable to their vestry meetings." Best, J. "If the inhabitants of Saint Mary, Whitechapel, are anxious to avail themselves of the provisions in the vestry act, they must

In the parish of W., the poor rates, according to ancient custom, had always been made without respect to the value of property in the parish, but according to the supposed ability of the party charged: Held, that persons so rated were not rated in respect of any annual rent, profit, or value, within the meaning of the 58 Geo. alter their mode of rating. By that act it is not sufficient that the parties should be rated at 50*l.* or upwards; to have more than one vote, they must be rated in respect of annual rents, profit, or value. Now it is stated in the case, that each inhabitant is rated according to the discretion of the vestry, and the rate itself shows that the amount of it is not regulated by the amount of the property in the parish. If so, it cannot be made according to the principle laid down in the act; and therefore no person can, by virtue of that act, be entitled to a plurality of votes."

58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 6. "That as well as the books hereby directed to be provided and kept for the entry of the proceedings of vestries, as all former vestry-books, and all rates and assessments, accounts and vouchers of the churchwardens, overseers of the poor, and surveyors of the highways, and other parish officers, and all certificates, orders of courts and of justices, and other parish books, documents, writings, and public papers of every parish, except the registry of marriages, baptisms, and burials, shall be kept by such person and persons, and deposited in such place and manner, as the inhabitants in vestry assembled shall direct; and if any person in whose hands or custody any such book, rate, assessment, account, voucher, certificate, order, document, writing, or paper shall be, shall wilfully or negligently destroy, obliterate, or injure the same, or suffer the same to be destroyed, obliterated, or injured, or shall, after reasonable notice and demand, refuse or neglect to deliver the same to such person or persons, or to deposit the same in such place as shall, by the order of such vestry, be directed, every person so offending, and being lawfully convicted thereof on his own confession, or on the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, by and before two of his majesty's justices of the peace, upon complaint thereof to them made, shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding 50*l.* nor less than 40*s.*, as shall by such justices be adjudged and determined; and the same shall be recovered and levied by warrant of such justices in such manner and by such ways and means as poor's rates in arrear are by law to be recovered and levied, and shall be paid to the overseers of the poor of the parish against which the offence shall be committed, or to some of them, and be applied for and towards the relief of the poor thereof: provided nevertheless, that every person who shall unlawfully retain in his custody, or shall refuse to deliver to any person or persons authorized to receive the same, or who shall obliterate, destroy, or injure, or suffer to be obliterated, destroyed or injured any book, rate, assessment, account, voucher, certificate, order, document, writing, or paper belonging to any parish, or to the churchwardens, overseers of the poor, or surveyors of the highways thereof, may in every such case be proceeded against in any of his majesty's courts, civilly or criminally, in like manner as if this act had not been made."

Sect. 7. "That all provisions, authorities, and directions, in this act contained, in relation to parishes, shall extend, and be construed to extend, to all townships, vills, and places having separate overseers of the poor, and maintaining their poor separately, and that all the directions and regulations herein contained, in regard to vestries, shall extend and be applied to all meetings which may by law be holden of the inhabitants of any parish, township, vill, or place, for any of the purposes in this act expressed; and that the notices by this act required to be given of every vestry, may, in places in which there is or shall be no parish church or chapel, or where there shall not be divine service in such church or chapel, be given and published in such manner as notices of the like nature shall have been there usually given and published, or as shall be most effectual for communicating the same to the inhabitants of every such parish, township, vill, or place, respectively."

Sect. 8. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to alter the time of holding any vestry, parish, or town meeting which is, by the authority of any act, required to be holden on any certain day, or within any certain time, in such act prescribed and directed; nor shall any thing in this act contained extend to take away, lessen, prejudice, or affect the powers of any vestry or meeting holden in any parish, township, or place, by virtue of any special act or acts of any ancient and special usage or custom, or to change or affect the right or manner of voting in any vestry or meeting so holden."

Sect. 9 and 10. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend to any parish in the city of London, or borough of Southwark."

Sect. 11. "That this act shall extend only to England and Wales."

May v. Gwynne, 4 B. & A. 301. A rule had been obtained, calling on the plaintiff in this case to produce and permit the defendant to inspect and take copies of certain papers, belonging to the parish of Hammersmith, which were in his possession. It appeared that the defendant had, by the authority of the vestry, made a report, in writing, respecting the conduct of the plaintiff, founded, as was stated, on the inspection of certain documents then in the parish-chest, but now in the possession of the plaintiff. This report having been published, an action was brought by the plaintiff for a libel, which the defendant wished to justify, and these documents were necessary for that purpose; and the defendant contended, that he, being an inhabitant of the parish, was entitled to see and take copies of them. It was doubtful in the affidavits whether the plaintiff or another person was legally the vestry-clerk of the parish. Cause having been shown, Abbott, C. J., said "This is a motion of the first impression; and I am of opinion that the court ought not to order a plaintiff to furnish evidence against himself. If the plaintiff be legally the vestry-clerk, then he has a right to the custody of these documents; and if he be not, then the person really entitled to the office may by mandamus obtain possession of them. But the defendant has no such right; and I think that we ought not, in this case, which is for a libel, to grant the defendant's application. If the papers had been wanted for the purpose of advancing any parochial right, the case would have been different."—Rule discharged with costs.

Wilson, D. D. v. M'Math, 3 B. & A. 241. The ecclesiastical court has jurisdiction, ratione loci, over the order and proceedings of vestry meetings held in a church, and therefore, where a rector had libelled in that court a parishioner, for preventing him from presiding as chairman at such meeting, a prohibition was refused.

In sound legal principle the rector is the head and præses of the meeting. The vestry act, 59 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 2, provides "that in case the rector, vicar, or perpetual curate, shall not be present, the persons so assembled shall forthwith nominate, by plurality of votes, one of the inhabitants to be chairman," which is nearly tantamount to a declaration, or by necessary implication declares, that if the rector, vicar, or curate, be present, he shall preside; and the legislature must evidently have considered that by law and usage he was entitled to preside. (3 Phill. Ec. Ca. 87.)

The acts of one vestry are not binding on a succeeding vestry, and may be confirmed or rescinded by such succeeding vestry; but the confirmation of the succeeding vestry is not necessary to make the acts of the preceding one valid. (Mawley v. Barbet, 2 Esp. 687.) As to power of a vestry see Rex v. Gwyer, post.

Vestrymen who signed a resolution, ordering the parish surveyor to take steps for defending an indictment for not repairing a road, were held not personally responsible for the payment of the attorney employed by the surveyor. The statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, compelling the relief of poor persons by their parents or children.

Justices in petty sessions empowered to order relief by parents, &c.

The statute of Eliz. extends only to natural relations. (a)

Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 7, enacts, "that the father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children of every poor, old, blind, lame, and impotent person, or other poor person not able to work, being of a sufficient ability, shall, at their own charges, relieve and maintain every such poor person in that manner, and according to that rate, as by the justices of peace of that county where such sufficient persons dwell, or the greater number of them, at their general quarter sessions, shall be assessed; upon pain that every one of them shall forfeit twenty shillings for every month which they shall fail therein." [See also 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 56, 57.]

Sect. 11. "Which penalty shall go and be employed to the use of the poor of the same parish, and towards a stock and habitation for them, and other necessary uses and relief, as before in this act are mentioned and expressed; and shall be levied by the said churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, by warrant from any two such justices of the peace, or mayor, alderman, or head officer of city, town, or place corporate, respectively, within their several limits, by distress and sale thereof as aforesaid; or in defect thereof, it shall be lawful for any two such justices of peace, and the said aldermen and head officers, within their several limits, to commit the offender to the said prison, there to remain without bail or mainprize till the said forfeitures shall be satisfied and paid."

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 26, after reciting the 40 Eliz., and whereas it is expedient to extend the power by the said act given to justices in their quarter sessions to justices in petty sessions, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, for the county or other jurisdiction in which any such sufficient person shall dwell, and they are hereby empowered, in any petty session, to make such assessment and order for the relief of every poor, old, blind, lame, impotent, or other poor person not able to work, upon and by the father, grandfather, mother, grandmother, or child, (being of sufficient ability) of every such poor person, as may by virtue of the said act be made by the justices in their general quarter sessions; and that every such assessment and order of two or more justices in any petty sessions shall have the like force and effect as if the same were made by the justices in their general quarter sessions; and the disobedience thereof shall be punishable in like manner."

And 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 78, gives the same powers for recovering these sums as are given for the levying of penalties under that act.

Rex v. Munday, 1 Str. 190. Order reciting that Munday had a good fortune with his wife, and that her mother was poor, therefore he is ordered to provide for her. By Pratt, C. J. "The cases which have hitherto been, no legal obligation on a parent to maintain his child, or on a child to relieve his parent; and therefore a third person, who may afford such relief, even from absolute want, cannot sue the parent for a reasonable remuneration, unless he expressly or impliedly contracted to pay. See per Le Blanc, J., 4 East, 84; Sir T. Raym. 260, margin; Palmer, 559; 2 Stark. 521. Whereas, as we have seen in the case of husband and wife, the former may, in some cases, be sued for necessaries provided for the latter, even in defiance of the husband's injunctions not to supply them. The common law considered moral duties of this nature, like others of imperfect obligation, as better left in their performance to the impulse of nature. However a parent may, under circumstances, be indicted at common law for not supplying an infant child with necessaries. Russell & R. C. C.

20, 2 Camp. 650; and very slight circumstances will suffice to justify a jury in finding a contract on the part of the father.

(a) Before this case a different doctrine prevailed. Reg. v. Clentham, Fol. 39. By the whole Court: "The husband ought to provide for the daughter-in-law during the wife's life, in the right of his wife; but when the wife dies, the relation is dissolved, and he is not by any means obliged to provide for the daughter-in-law after her mother's death." In this case the wife was dead.

Reg. v. St. Botolph's, Aldgate, Fol. 42. The question was, whether the husband shall be chargeable to maintain his wife's children by a former husband? And it was resolved he was during the wife's life, in her right, but not after.

There was an order upon the mother, who was married to a second husband, were either where the judges were divided, or the matter came not directly in question, or was only a case at the judge's chamber. It never came judicially before the whole court till now. And as it is res integra, on consideration we are all of opinion that the son-in-law is not bound, either within the words or intent of the statute, which provides only for natural parents. By the law of nature, a man was bound to take care of his own father and mother. But there being no temporal obligation to enforce that law of nature, it was found necessary to establish it by act of parliament, and that can be extended no farther than the law of nature went before; and the law of nature doth not reach this case."

Tubb v. Harrison, 4 T. R. 118. This was an action of covenant, in which the defendants, who were father and son, (after reciting that differences had arisen between the son and his wife, and that they had agreed to live separate,) covenanted inter alia to pay all the debts contracted by her, which her husband was by law liable to pay. One of the breaches assigned was, that they had refused to repay money laid out for board, lodging, and other necessities for her infant son by a former husband. Lord Kenyon, C. J. on the authority of Rex v. Munday, 1 Str. 190, ante, p. 78, in which an order of maintenance was reversed by the court, because the stat. of Eliz. extends only to natural relations, was of opinion that the husband was not liable to pay the expenses of maintaining the wife's child by a former husband, although the wife were then living, and ordered those articles in the account to be disallowed.

One who marries a widow, having children by her former husband, was not bound under the statute of Eliz. to maintain such children, though they were maintained by the widow before her second marriage, when her second husband acquired her former means. Therefore, if the second husband maintain such children, it was holden a good consideration for a promise by them when they come of age to repay the expense of their maintenance respectively: especially where the second husband was a man of small substance, and the children had a competent provision to receive when they came of age, which was to accumulate for them in the meantime, and he made no application to Chancery for an allowance out of the fund, as he might have done. Cooper v. Martin, 4 East, 76.

But now by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 57, every man who after the passing of the act (14 Aug. 1834,) shall marry a woman having children legitimate or illegitimate, shall maintain them as part of his family; this statute gives the justices no express power to make any order; but the 78th section empowers justices to enforce the payment of orders under 43 Eliz. or that act, as penalties may be

Rex v. Kempson, 2 Str. 955. An order was made upon the father to pay a sum to his son's wife, his son having run away from her. A divorce a mensâ et thoro for adultery was afterwards obtained against the wife. Two exceptions were taken: first, that it appears the son's wife was an adulteress; and therefore the husband himself would not have been bound to maintain her, much more the husband's father could not. To this it was answered, and allowed by the court, that whatever effect this act of the wife might have upon the husband, it could not have any upon the parish. Secondly, it was objected, that the statute extends only to natural relations, and for this purpose was cited the case of Rex v. Munday, and the court were of opinion that this objection was fatal, and that the act doth not extend to relations in law. 2 Barnard. 329, 364.

Reg. v. Dunn, 2 Nol. P. L. 263. An order was made that the defendant should maintain his son's widow. An objection was taken that by the death of the son the relation which she bore to the father ceased; and although the order was quashed, because it was not set forth that the father was of sufficient ability, yet the court seemed to allow the exception good.

Nor daughter-in-law.

An order on a grandfather need not state that the father is unable.

Rex v. Benoire, 1 Bott, 449; 2 Nol. P. L. 263. An order for the maintenance of a daughter-in-law was quashed because there was no relation in blood, nor obligation by nature.

The instances are not numerous in the books in which this question has been discussed. Affection will, in most instances, induce the discharge of this obligation with more efficacy than an act of parliament; and even where that motive is wanting, a sense of shame will supersede the necessity of resorting to the statute, where the party is of sufficient ability to render this assistance to relatives, even more distant in degree than is expressed in the enactment.

In Rex v. Cornish, 2 B. & Adol. 498, 166(b). "There is nothing in the statute of Eliz. to show that the obligation of the grandfather is absolute only in the event of the father being unable, and that being so the justices who make the order are not bound to assign on the face of it any reason why they made it on the grandfather:" Lord Tenterden. "The statute gives the justices a discretionary power; if the grandfather be a rich man, and the father a poor man, they may in the exercise of their discretion make an order on the grandfather to maintain his grandchildren:" Littledale, J. Order confirmed.

Though the father be living, yet, if he be unable, the grandfather, being of ability, may be compelled to keep the grandchild, and also to pay so much money as the justices shall think reasonable for the time past. Reg. v. Joyce, 16 Viner, 423.

OF THE ORDER OF MAINTENANCE.

The order must set forth that the person is poor, &c. and not able to work.

Of every Poor, Old, Blind, Lame, and Impotent Person, or other poor person not able to work.] St. Andrew's Undershaft v. Mendez de Breta, 1 Ld. Raym. 669. The defendant, being a Jew, had an only daughter, who was converted from Judaism, and embraced Christianity, whereupon the defendant turned her out of doors, and refused to allow her any maintenance. On complaint to the sessions, they, reciting that she was the daughter of the defendant, and that he was a man able to maintain her, made an order that the defendant (being very rich) should allow her 20s. a month. But because they did not allege that she was poor, or likely to become chargeable, the order was quashed.

Poor.] At Chelsea petty sessions, before Flood and France, the county magistrates, H. P. Dixon, Esq. a gentleman of landed property, appeared to a summons issued by the bench, to show cause why he refused to assist in maintenance of his aged mother Mrs. Dixon; but it appearing that she had an income of 13*l.* per annum, being the interest of 290*l.* in the 4 per cents. the magistrates regretted that it was not in their power to grant the applicant's request, in consequence of being possessed of such trifling property.

Rex v. Gulley, Fol. 47; 1 Bott, 366; 2 Nol. P. L. 264. The order set out, that Mary Gulley was in a poor destitute condition, and that her father was able to maintain her, and therefore they made an order upon him to allow her 2*s.* 6*d.* a week till further order. Objected, it did not appear that she was lame, blind, or unable to work; so that, though she was in a destitute condition, it might be because she would not work: and upon this exception the court quashed the order.

And that the person on whom the order is made is of sufficient ability.

Being of sufficient ability.] Q. v. Halifax, Sett. & Rem. 52; 1 Bott, 431; 2 Nol. P. L. 264. Order for the father-in-law to pay so much a week to his daughter-in-law was quashed, because it was not said that he was of sufficient ability.

An order to pay indefinitely as to time, is good.

In that Manner, and according to that Rate, as by the Justices of that County where such sufficient Persons dwell, in their sessions, shall be assessed.] Jenkin's case, 2 Salk. 534. An order of sessions was made, that the defendant shall pay 2*s.* a week towards the support of his father, till that Court shall order the contrary. Which was held good because it was indefinite, and no set time limited; and if an estate happened to fall to him, they might apply to the justices, otherwise if a time was limited.

By the Justices of that County where such sufficient persons dwell.] Therefore if a child lives in the county of Middlesex, and be maintained by the parish there, and the grandfather lives in the county of Suffolk, the justices of Middlesex can make no order therein, but the justices of the county of Suffolk must make the order. (2 Bulstr. 344.)

In their Sessions shall be Assessed.] Vide 59 Geo. III. c 12, s. 20. Reg. v. Jones, Fol. 41; 1 Bott, 425. There was an order for the grandmother to take care of her grandchildren, and by the order they send the grandchildren to the grandmother. By the whole Court: "They cannot send the grandchildren to the grandmother; but the justices ought to have made a rate upon the grandmother of so much a week."

And it is said, that in the order of sessions it ought to appear that the party to be relieved is become chargeable to the parish; for unless he be so, the parish has no ground of complaint. (16. Vin. Abr. 424; Rex v. Tripping, 1 Bott, 430; 2 Nol. P. L. 264; Ld. Raym. 699.)

And an order may be that the grandfather shall pay so much (a) for the time past, while the grandchild was chargeable, as well as for the time to come, the father being living but unable to do it. (Reg. v. Joice, 16 Vin. Abr. 423.) The inability of the father need not appear in the order. (Rex v. Cornish, ante, 80.)

On pain of 20s. a month — to be levied by distress.] Mr. Christian has supposed (1 Bla. Com. 448, note 1,) that the relations mentioned in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, can only be compelled to allow each other 20s. a month, or 13l. a year; but he has not distinguished between the power to award a sufficient maintenance and the punishment for the breach of the order. The amount of maintenance is in the discretion of the magistrates, and they may order much more than 20s. a month. And if the party disobey the order by not paying that sum, though exceeding 20s. a month, he may be indicted. (2 Burr. 799.)

Rex v. Robinson, (b) 2 Burr. 799. The defendant was indicted for refusing to obey an order of sessions for maintaining his two infant grandchildren. In arrest of judgment it was urged that this is a new offence: and where a statute creates a new offence, and gives a particular penalty, and a specific method of recovering the same, that course ought to be pursued, and the party shall not be punished by indictment. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The rule is certain, that where a statute creates a new offence by prohibiting and making unlawful any thing that was lawful before, and appoints a specific remedy against such new offence by a particular sanction and particular method of proceeding, that method must be pursued, and no other; but where the offence was antecedently punishable by a common law proceeding, and a statute prescribes a particular remedy by a summary proceeding, there either method may be pursued, and the prosecutor is at liberty to proceed either at common law, or in the method prescribed by the statute; because there the sanction is cumulative, and doth not exclude the common law punishment. In the present case a remedy existed before the statute of the 43 Eliz.; for disobedience to an order of sessions is an offence indictable at common law. So that there are two remedies: one, to proceed by way of indictment for disobeying the order, where the weekly payment is neglected or refused to be made: the other, to distrain for the 20s. penalty after neglect Penalty of 20s. a month for disobedience, but the order of maintenance to a larger extent may be enforced by indictment.

Indictment will lie for refusing to obey the order of sessions.

(a) Retrospective order on a parish is bad, Rex v. Maulden, 2 Man. & R. 146; 8 B. & C. 80, post.

(b) In this case Lord Mansfield placed some reliance on the full statement, that the defendant did not reside within the county, therefore there was no power to levy the penalty. This was not however averred in the indictment.

13. Liability of Relations to maintain each other.

of payment for a month. The former method has been taken in the present case; and there is no doubt but that an indictment will lie for disobeying an order of sessions." And the Court were unanimously of opinion that the judgment ought not to be arrested.

An order of maintenance must be positive, not by recommendation; it must observe the words of the statute, and state how long the maintenance is to continue. (Rex v. Pennoyer, 1 Bott, 433.) Under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, the party against whom the order has been made may appeal against it to the justices at general quarter sessions, who, upon evidence and consideration of the circumstances and ability of the party, may reduce the allowance or discharge the order.

Since disobeying an order of justices is an offence at common law, (vide Rex v. Balme, Vol. III. tit. Indictment, s. 2,) the law of the above case also applies to orders made by two or more justices in petty sessions, under stat. 59 Geo. III. c. 12. s. 26, ante, 78; 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 31.

The order must be served and obedience formally demanded, to complete the offence. (4 Dougl. Rep. 333, 388.)

Of appealing against the order.

No appeal lies from an order of maintenance.

No appeal lies to the quarter sessions against an order for relief; but the overseer must, if he can, obtain a fresh order of removal into the proper parish.

Appeal.

In Rex v. North Shields, Dougl. 331 (see ante, 54,) Willes, J., on delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "We think it unnecessary to give an opinion on the question which has been argued in this case, because I and my two brothers are satisfied that no appeal lies from an order of maintenance. The 3 W. III. c. 11, s. 11, gives a concurrent jurisdiction, in the making orders for the relief of the poor, in or out of sessions, and doth not authorize an appeal. The 9 Geo. I. c. 7, makes no alteration in this respect. The reason for not giving an appeal is, that the pauper might starve while the cause was in suspense. We have spoken to several gentlemen very conversant in sessions law, and none of them ever heard of such an appeal." And the order of sessions was quashed, because they had no jurisdiction, and the original order affirmed.

Rex v. Justices of Devon, 4 M. & S. 421. On a rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices at sessions to hear an appeal against an order for the relief of a pauper, which appeal the justices had determined at the last sessions, conceiving that they had not any jurisdiction; and the counsel cited a note from Burn, vol. iv. p. 117, 21st edit. (a) Per Curiam. "If, in every case of an order for relief, an

(a) Note of Dr. Burn, in the 21st edit. of this work. It has been observed by Mr. Douglas, (Dougl. 333), that the words of 3 W. III. c. 11, are, "by authority under the hand of one justice residing within the parish, or (if none be there dwelling) in the parts near or next adjoining, or by order of the justice in sessions." This, he says, it should seem, must mean by order of the court of quarter sessions, not of justices as individuals, when they happen to meet at the quarter sessions. Therefore he makes a query concerning the case of Rex v. Winship, post, 83, this note, where the Court is stated to have held, that the sessions could not make an original order of maintenance. (See 36 Geo. III. c. 23, post.)

Unto which it may be added, with respect to this last case of North Shields, that the great fundamental statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, enacts, that "if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any thing done by the churchwardens and overseers, or by the justices, in relation to the relief of the poor, he may appeal to the general quarter sessions, whose order therein shall be final:" which, by the rule that acts in pari materia are to be taken together and considered as one entire act, may seem to include this case concerning the order of maintenance. The Carlisle case above-mentioned was upon an original order at sessions, in which the jurisdiction was not objected to, but the cause was determined on the real merits. The case of Rex v. Winship, post, 83, in note, also was upon an original order of sessions, which order the report says was quashed, because the court was of opinion that the sessions had no power to make such order. This present case of North Shields was an appeal against an order of a justice out of sessions, and in this case of appeal likewise the Court was of opinion that the sessions had no jurisdiction. From which two last cases it seems to follow that an order of maintenance by a private justice out of sessions is absolutely conclusive, which imports a power in this respect not usual in other like cases; especially as such appeal will lie, this will divert the funds of the poor into other channels. This order is not in perpetuum, it is to pay until further order; and why cannot the overseers go back to the quarter where it was made, and point out that the pauper's residence is in another parish, and obtain a fresh order?" Rule refused.

14. Of Persons Deserting, or Absent from their Families, and Smugglers.

5 Geo. I. c. 8; 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 31 & 32; 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, and 11 Geo. IV. c. 10, s. 2.

The 5 Geo. I. c. 8, recites that divers persons run or go away from their places of abode into other counties or places, and sometimes out of the kingdom, some men leaving their wives, a child or children; and some mothers run or go away, leaving a child or children, upon the charge of the parish or place where such child or children was or were born, or last legally settled, although such persons have some estates, which should ease the parish of their charge in whole or in part, and then enacts "that it shall and may be lawful for the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of such parish or place where any such wife, or child or children shall be so left, upon application to, and by warrant or order from any two justices of the peace, to take and seize so much of the goods and chattels, and receive so much of the annual rents and profits of the lands and tenements of such husband, father or mother, as such two justices of the peace as aforesaid shall order or direct, for or towards the discharge of the parish or place where such wife, child or children are left, for the bringing up and providing for such wife, child or children; which warrant or order being confirmed at the next quarter sessions, it shall be lawful for the justices of such quarter sessions to make an order for the churchwardens or overseers for the poor of such parish or place to dispose of such goods and chattels by sale or otherwise, or so much of them for the purpose aforesaid as the court shall think fit, and to receive the rents and profits, or so much of them as shall be ordered by the sessions as aforesaid, of his or her lands and tenements for the purpose aforesaid."

By s. 2, the churchwardens and overseers aforesaid shall be accountable to the justices at quarter sessions for all such money as they, or any of them, shall receive by virtue of this act.

14. Of Persons deserting or absenting themselves from their Families.

Churchwardens, &c., by warrant of two justices, may seize the goods, rents, &c. of husbands and parents absenting themselves.

justice is required by the statute to be an inhabitant of the parish, if any such be there residing, and consequently in all probability essentially interested in the poor rate. As to the matter of practice, it is certain that nothing is more common at the sessions, than applications for the maintenance of poor persons as well by original motion as by way of appeal from the order of private justices. In some places this makes up almost half the business of the sessions, even to a degree of ridicule among the unthinking part of mankind; as if magistrates could be better employed than in relieving the miseries of the distressed. The reason that has been sometimes alleged against removing the poor rate into the courts at Westminster, lest the poor might starve before the cause should be determined, does not hold with regard to appeals against orders of maintenance. The justices' order takes effect immediately, and continues in force till altered by other legal authority. The usual way is, for the justices to order the overseer to pay to the pauper so much weekly or otherwise, until he shall be otherwise ordered according to law to forbear the said allowance, or, more generally, till further order. And this, if not acquiesced in, brings on an appeal to the sessions, where the court enlarges, mitigates, or takes off the charge, as they shall see cause.

Rex v. Winship, 5 Burr. 2677; Cald. 72. A pauper having refused to go into the poor house, the overseers refused to pay her the allowance. She applied to the quarter sessions, where an order was made of the sum in arrear, and 2s. a week. The overseers refused to pay the allowance, whereupon they were indicted. The Court of K. B. thought the general question of vast consequence, but gave no opinion upon the merits, holding the sessions order to be bad and illegal upon the face of it; "the sessions cannot make such an original order." Judgment for the defendants. In a note, Mr. Caldecott says, that certainly the court made no such determination as that expressed in the words marked by inverted commas. See Cald. 71, n.

14. Of Persons deserting their Families.

Punishment as a vagrant.

Order of two justices must state how much of the goods or rents should be seized, and must specify the quantum of relief to be appropriated out of them; and in case of rents must limit the period of such appropriations.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, enacted, that persons being able but wilfully neglecting to work to support their families, whereby they shall become chargeable to the parish, shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons, punishable by imprisonment and hard labour, not exceeding a month. And the fourth section declares that "every person running away and leaving his wife, or his or her child or children, chargeable, or whereby she or they, or any of them shall become chargeable to any parish, township, or place, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, punishable as therein mentioned." See tit. Vagrants.

Stable v. Dixon, 6 East, 163. In covenant for rent, the defendant pleaded as to 7l. 16s. parcel of the rent, that before the rent became due, the plaintiff had gone away from his place of abode into some other place, leaving his wife chargeable to Corney; that he continued away from the 24th of June, 1801, to the time of the action brought, and that during all that time she continued chargeable; that it thereupon was necessary that she should be maintained by the parish: whereupon, upon application of the churchwardens of the parish, a warrant was directed by two justices to the said churchwardens and overseers, whereby (reciting as usual) they the said justices authorized and commanded the said churchwardens and overseers of Corney to receive the annual rents and profits of the lands and tenements of the plaintiff at Bromhill, towards the discharge of the parish at Corney for the providing for the plaintiff's wife, &c. On the 18th of July, 1801, the order was confirmed by the Court; and the Court did then order the overseers, &c., to receive 7l. 16s. rent of the rents of the lands of the plaintiff at B., towards the discharge of the said parish for the providing the plaintiff's wife. And then the plea alleged payment. To this the replication was, that on the first of October, 1801, the said 7l. 16s. in the order of sessions mentioned, was paid by defendant to the then overseers of Corney, pursuant to the said order, and that on the 25th of March, 1802, the said 7l. 16s. was allowed by the plaintiff to the defendant out of the rent. To this replication it was by the defendant rejoined, that the said sum of 7l. 16s. so mentioned in the fourth plea to have been so paid, was another and a different sum of 7l. 16s. than the sum of 7l. 16s. so deducted and allowed as aforesaid, viz. for the second year's payment under the said order in the said plea mentioned. To this there was a demurrer. And it was urged, that the original order was void, as being prospective, to seize the rents and profits for future expenses; or if it might be prospective, still it did not ascertain the quantum of relief required by the parish, conformably with the words "so much" in the statute, and Rex v. Chaffey, 2 Id. Raym. 858, was cited. Also that the sessions had it only in their power to confirm the order, and direct a sale, and (perhaps) vary the sum before directed to be levied. And, that if the sessions could remedy any defect in the original order by ascertaining the sum to be raised, they have fixed it at 7l. 16s., and that sum is by the pleadings admitted to be paid and deducted out of the rent: the order therefore is functus officio; for it does not state that the same sum shall be raised annually. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "The 5 Geo. I. gave to magistrates a power of appropriating to the purposes of the act so much of the goods and chattels, and so much of the annual rents and profits of the party, as they should order and direct, or as the sessions afterwards, to whose confirmation such order is to be submitted, should think fit. But it never was meant to invest the parish officers or magistrates with a right to take indefinitely all the property of such a person without apportioning how much of it was to be taken for that purpose. The language of the act is, that the goods and chattels, &c., are to be taken for or towards the discharge of the parish; which imports that it was to relieve the parish from a burthen already incurred, and which was therefore capable of being then ascertained. But even if they had a prospective power, still the justices are to ascertain how much is to be taken. The act expressly says, the officers shall take so much as the justices shall order. That makes it imperative on two magistrates to ascertain the sum: but if an order like this could be sustained, it would open a door to great vexation. If any person happened to go away, leaving his family a charge on the parish, it would authorize the justices to make the parish officers trustees for the whole of his property to whatever amount. The original warrant then being made in the exercise of an indefinite instead of a limited authority, and being void in that respect, the next question is, Whether it were capable of receiving confirmation from the sessions? and assuming that it could, as capable of limitation in respect of the sum to be taken by the parish officers (for they seem there to have abandoned the ground of an indefinite seizure,) then can the order of sessions be sustained beyond the terms of it, as an order to receive the sum of 7*l.* 16*s.*? Admitting that it might be good to that extent, as an order to receive a definite sum (subject however to the objection to it as a confirmation of an original indefinite order of seizure), the answer is, that the sum is already paid and allowed: but taking it as it is now contended for, as an order to receive that sum annually out of the rents and profits without any limitation of time, the objection applies, that from want of such limitation, as, 'till some other order made,' it is void by the authority of the case mentioned. Therefore, unless the order of sessions be understood as limited to raise 7*l.* 16*s.* once for all, that would be invincibly bad; and if so understood, the order has been satisfied."—Grose, J., "The defendant insists that the order of sessions authorizes the annual payment of 7*l.* 16*s.* for ever. If it do, such an order cannot be sustained for a moment, for the statute authorizes the overseer to take only so much as the justices shall direct: that is, so much as the parish shall have sustained. The intention of the legislature was only to indemnify the parish: and it meant either that the money ordered to be taken should have been expended by the parish, or that the justices should judge what was proper to be expended upon the family of the absconding man." Lawrence, J., "The first order ought to have specified the sum to be raised: it should have specified how much property was to be seized, and then the order of sessions should have stated how much of that should be sold or appropriated. I cannot consider the order of sessions as directing that more than one sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* should be taken. If more had been intended they should have said so more distinctly, by adding the word 'annually,' or 'till further order.'" Besides, if the order were illegal, he should have refused payment, and if indicted for disobedience he might have defended himself; or he might have brought an action of trespass if his goods had been distrained, for he would not have been concluded by an order to which he was no party from showing that it was illegal. But I think the order of sessions only meant that one sum of 7*l.* 16*s.* should be taken." Judgment for the plaintiff.

It has been held, that if a man refuse to maintain his wife, but nevertheless remains in the parish, no order can be made on 5 Geo. I. c. 8, to seize his effects; but the wife must have recourse to the common remedy of suing for alimony; or any one who supplies her with necessaries may have his action against the husband for money expended to his use. (Rex v. Justices of Kent; Burn's Justice, 25th edit.)

Before this statute, the parish officers might have taken an assignment of the property of the husband, and there is nothing in this statute to prevent that. But as the land was conveyed in trust for the benefit of a charitable use, to the intent that the rents and profits may be applied to the use and benefit of the poor in aid of the poor rate, the deed is within the enacting clause of 9 Geo. II. c. 36, s. 1, and not being enrolled is void. It is not a deed within the 2nd sect.: made for a valuable consideration paid by the person to whom it is made.

Rex v. Flintan, 1 Bar. & Adol. 227. Upon appeal against a conviction of the defendant as an idle and disorderly person for refusing to maintain his wife. Conviction confirmed. Case:—Elizabeth, the wife of W. H. Flintan, became chargeable to the parish of St. Andrew on the 20th of February, 1829, and received from that time to the time of the conviction four shillings a week from the said parish. W. H. Flintan was then able wholly to maintain his wife. W. H. Flintan and his wife cohabited together for some years until the 26th of November, 1826, when they quarrelled on account of her having pawned some of their plate; and on the following day she quitted his house in his absence, and without his knowledge, and has not resided with him since.

If the husband remain in the parish, his effects cannot be seized for his wife's support. The act applies to runaways only.

Assignment by a pauper in custody to indemnify the parish for expenses incurred for his wife is good; but it is a charitable use and must be enrolled.

A man is not liable to the penalty of 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3, for neglecting and refusing to maintain his wife, who has left him and committed adultery; although he himself has been guilty of adultery since her departure.

14. Of Persons deserting their Families.

She subsequently sued her husband for alimony, by reason of adultery committed by the husband, who produced, in his defence, evidence of adultery committed by his wife; and the Court decreed, that W. H. Flintan had been guilty of adultery, and that the said Elizabeth Flintan had been guilty of adultery, and therefore dismissed W. H. Flintan from the citation. The adultery which was proved upon the wife had been committed while she lived with her husband, and without his knowledge or subsequent condonation; the adultery proved upon him did not take place till after that time, and after she had left him. The question for the opinion of this Court was, Whether W. H. Flintan was, at the time of the said conviction, legally bound, under these circumstances, to maintain his wife, within the meaning of the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3? Bayley, J., "This case is very clear. By this statute, a man is criminally answerable for refusing to maintain any of his family whom he is legally bound to maintain. That obligation must be made out; and it is not established in the case of a wife who has left her husband and lives in adultery." Littledale, J., "I do not see the distinction attempted between the parish and an individual supplying necessaries. If the husband is not obliged to answer for the wife's contracts, or to receive her into his house, it cannot be said that he is 'legally bound to maintain her.'" Parke, J., "It would be strange if the Court could hold that a man was not civilly liable for the supply of necessaries to his wife, and yet that not supplying them rendered him a vagrant." Conviction quashed.

59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 31, enacts, "that when any pensioner or other person, entitled to or in receipt of any such pension or other allowance as aforesaid, shall leave his wife or family chargeable, or suffer them to become chargeable to any parish, it shall be lawful for two or more justices, upon complaint thereof to them made by any one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, and verified on oath, by order under their hands and seals to direct that the next payment which shall become due of such pension or other allowance, shall be made to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish to which such wife or family shall have become chargeable; and any one or more of such churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall transmit such order to the aforesaid commissioners for the affairs of the royal hospitals at Chelsea or Greenwich, or the secretary of the board of ordnance respectively, in like manner as any assignment is hereinbefore directed to be transmitted to the paymaster-general of his Majesty's forces, and the paymaster of pensions at Greenwich, the paymaster of the royal marines, and the secretary of the board of ordnance, as the case may be; which said paymaster-general, or paymaster of pensions at Greenwich, or the treasurer of the board of ordnance, shall thereupon, and upon sufficient proof being given that the person whose pension or other allowance shall be directed to be paid shall have been living when the same shall become payable, and would have been entitled to receive the same if no such order had been made, cause the said payment to be made to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish for whose security such order shall have been made: and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor receiving any such pension or other allowance by virtue of any such order, shall retain and apply the same, or so much thereof as shall have been actually expended for the purposes aforesaid, for the use and indemnity of the parish, and shall pay the overplus (if any there shall be) to the pensioner or person entitled thereto, and upon the receipt of any such order as aforesaid, by which the pension, or other allowance to be mentioned therein shall be directed to be paid to such churchwardens and overseers as aforesaid, the payment thereof shall be suspended, until sufficient proof shall have been given to entitle the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, in such order named, to receive the money thereby directed to be paid to them."

Sect. 32. "And whereas in many instances the wives and families of seamen employed in the merchants' service become chargeable to parishes, while their husbands and fathers are absent on such service, and it is expedient to provide for the indemnity of such parishes by and out of the wages of such seamen; be it therefore further enacted, that where the wife or family of any seaman employed in any voyage or trip (not being his Majesty's service) shall, during his absence on such employment, become chargeable to any parish, it shall be lawful for two justices, upon complaint thereof to them made by any one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish, and verified on oath, by order under their hands and seals, to direct the acting owner or owners, ship's husband, or agent of the ship or vessel in which such seaman shall be employed, to pay, out of the wages which shall become due to such seamen, unto the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish to which his wife or family shall have become chargeable, so much as shall have been by such parish necessarily expended for their maintenance or relief, the amount, in case of any dispute, to be ascertained by two justices, whose determination thereon shall be final; and upon the production of any such order, the owner, ship's husband, or agent, by whom the wages of the seaman therein to be named shall be payable, shall pay to such one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish for whose indemnity such order shall have been made, as shall demand the same, the sum and sums to be therein specified and directed to be paid, or so much thereof as the wages then due shall amount unto; and the payment to and receipt of any such churchwarden or overseer shall be a good discharge for so much of such wages as shall be paid to them or him by virtue of any such order; and if any such owner, ship's husband, or agent, shall refuse or neglect to pay to the churchwarden or overseer producing any such order, the money thereby directed to be paid, or so much thereof as shall be actually due for the wages of the seaman to be therein named, the same may be levied and recovered, and the payment thereof enforced, against the owner or owners, ship's husband, or agent, by whom the same shall be payable, in such and the like manner as poor's rates in arrear may be levied and recovered, and the payment thereof enforced, against the parties and persons chargeable and charged therewith: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorize or compel the payment of any sum or sums of money by such acting owner or owners, ship's husband, or agent, until the voyage in which the vessel shall be so engaged shall be completed, nor beyond the sum that shall be then actually due to such seaman, by such acting owner or owners, ship's husband, or agent, as wages or otherwise."

By 11 Geo. IV. c. 10, intituled, "An Act for the Relief of Parishes from the Expenses of Maintaining the Wives and Families of Men convicted under the Laws for the Prevention of Smuggling, and sentenced to serve his Majesty in his Naval Service," reciting that "whereas many seamen are now serving in his Majesty's naval service, by virtue of certain acts passed for the prevention of smuggling: and whereas it is expedient to make provisions respecting the payment and distribution of the wages of such seamen, and of such others as may hereafter enter the naval service by virtue of any act for the prevention of smuggling, and also respecting the relief of parishes to which the wives or families of any such seamen are or may become chargeable whilst they continue in the service; be it therefore enacted, that no person who shall be hereafter adjudged or entered to serve in his Majesty's naval service by virtue of any act made or to be made for the prevention of smuggling, shall be entitled to receive more than half the pay of his rating in the ship's books."

Sect. 2. "That the wages of every seaman now serving, or who shall hereafter be adjudged or entered to serve in his Majesty's naval service, under or by virtue of any such act made or to be made for the prevention of smuggling, whose wife or family is or shall become chargeable to any parish or place, shall from and after the passing of this act be distributed as follows; (that is to say,) a proportion, not exceeding one half, of the wages at which such seaman is rated in the ship's books shall be made available for the support of his wife and family; and in order to effectuate the said purpose, it shall be lawful for any one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish or place where the wife or family of such seaman shall be or become chargeable, to make complaint thereof on oath to any two justices of the peace acting for the county in which such parish or place shall Duty of overseers to relieve.

It is contrary to the humane spirit of the English laws, that any individual shall be permitted to perish from starvation or want of medical assistance. Whoever is by sudden emergency or urgent distress deprived of the ordinary means of subsistence, has a right to resort for immediate relief to the overseers of the poor of the parish in which he may happen to be at the time when he is thus bereft of support, whether he has acquired a settlement there or not; and it is the bounden duty of the overseers immediately, and without waiting for an order of relief, to render the necessary assistance in such cases. This is clearly implied by various enactments regulating the mode of administering the parish funds, and authorizing justices of the peace to enforce this obligation upon overseers when they refuse relief to destitute applicants. See 3 W. & M. c. 11; 9 Geo. I. c. 7; 36 Geo. III. c. 23; 55 Geo. III. c. 137; 59 Geo. III. c. 12; 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 27, 54.

Duty of guardians to relieve.

And where guardians have been appointed under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, the 38th section provides, that in case any poor person shall be retarded in his passage through a parish in which he has no settlement by accident, by dangerous illness, or bodily infirmity, the guardian where such distressed object shall be, shall provide lodging and suitable nourishment and assistance, and may recover the expenses from the guardian of the parish in which he is settled. It makes provision also for the burial of such persons if they die, and also of those found dead; (a) and by the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 54,

(a) By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 38, "if any poor person shall be retarded on his or her passage through any parish, township, or place, in which he or she has no legal settlement, by reason of his or her meeting with any accident, or being afflicted with any dangerous illness or bodily infirmity, without the means of subsistence, or of proceeding to the place of his or her settlement, the guardian living near the place where such distressed object shall be, shall, and is hereby required, upon notice thereof, forthwith to provide lodging, and suitable nourishment and assistance (and also clothing, if necessary) for such person, until he or she can be removed with safety; and when such person shall be in a state of health fit to be removed,

shall take such person to some neighbouring justices of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, or place, where such person was found, who shall examine him or her upon oath, touching the place of his or her settlement, and make an order for his or her removal thither, if they think fit: and the parish officer who shall so receive and provide for such person or persons as aforesaid, shall make a charge of the expenses attending the same, which, on being allowed and certified by the justices before whom such poor person shall be so taken, or some other neighbouring justices within the limit where such person was found, the same shall be paid by the guardian of the parish, township, or place, where such poor person shall be in all parishes having guardians, or a select vestry, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity, the overseer is required to give temporary relief, whether the poor person is settled in his parish or not, and any justice of the peace may give an order for medical relief in cases of sudden and dangerous illness.

Where a person in need has no settlement, or it cannot be discovered, he must be relieved in the parish where he happens to be whilst remaining in a state of pauperism; and so also if he is irremovable.

There is also another class of paupers to be here mentioned, viz. persons born in Scotland, Ireland, or the Isle of Man, Guernsey, or Jersey, and who have acquired no settlement in England or Wales; and provisions have been made for their removal. Persons comprehended within any of the above descriptions are called "casual poor," the law with respect to whom will be here stated in detail. (See further who are casual poor, Paynter v. Williams, 1 Crompt. & Mees. 815, per Bayley, B.)

Where a bastard child is born, for whose support the parents neglect to provide necessities, the parish officers are obliged to do so, without an order of justices for that purpose. (Hags v. Bryant, 1 Hen. Bla. 253.)

Independent of the particular provision for places having guardians, mentioned in the note, it may now be considered as a general principle, that there is a legal and moral obligation upon the overseers of every parish to maintain every pauper, that meets with an accident or becomes afflicted with a sudden and dangerous illness in his parish; and that the parish cannot be relieved by causing such person to be removed to a neighbouring parish. It is true, that where an inhabitant of the parish is so afflicted, an order for his removal may be obtained, and execution of it suspended, and then the expenses incurred will be repaid by the parish in which the pauper is settled, if he was afterwards removed to it. But no such order can be obtained, where the pauper was accidentally in the parish, and has not come there to settle. Without such order, the parish in which the accident happens has no legal claim on the parish in which the pauper is settled; but if an overseer authorizes directly a surgeon to attend a non-resident parishioner, he is liable to the surgeon. It seems he is also liable, if after knowledge of the attendance of the surgeon, he sanctions it by requiring a fresh attendance. No promise can be implied from a master to pay a surgeon for his attendance on his ser-settled, in case the same can be discovered, and shall happen to be within that county, on demand made thereof, and on the production of such allowance and certificate as aforesaid, or in default of payment, the same shall be levied upon the goods and chattels of any such guardian so making default, after due summons, by warrant from a justice of peace having jurisdiction there; and if any poor and sick person circumstanced as aforesaid shall die before he or she can be so examined, or if any poor person shall be found dead in any parish or place to which he or she did not belong, the guardian of such parish or place respectively shall, and is hereby required, in every such case, to cause such person to be buried in the parish, township, or place, where he or she so died or was found dead, and shall make a charge of the expenses attending the same respectively, which shall be allowed and certified by a justice of the peace, after examining into the place of his or her settlement, and shall be paid by the guardian of the parish, township, or place, where such person shall appear to have been settled, if the same shall be within that county; but in case the settlement of such poor persons respectively cannot be discovered, or shall not be within that county, the same shall be paid by the treasurer of such county, riding, division, city, or place, where such person was so relieved, on the production of such allowance and certificate, out of the county or public money to be collected within his limit, and allowed to such treasurer in his accounts."

And by 33 Geo. III. c. 35, s. 3, "after the passing of this act, all such casual poor as may happen to be within, and would be entitled to relief from, any one of such parishes, townships, or places as have been, or may hereafter be, united together for the purposes of the act hereinbefore first mentioned, shall be relieved by all the said parishes, townships, or places conjointly, and in the same respective proportion as they shall and are directed to contribute for the general purposes of the said act, according to the provisions and regulations in the said act specified and contained."

vant, who may meet with an accident in the discharge of his duty. These principles will be found to have been established in the following cases:

Rex v. St. James in Bury St. Edmunds, 10 East, 25. An order removed S. Offord from St. James in Bury to Ixworth. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper being settled in Ixworth, was employed on the 23d of December, 1807, as a day labourer, by R. H. of Ixworth, to drive a load of hay to Bury, and to return with a load of muck. In loading the muck, he fell and broke his leg. On the 24th of December, two magistrates took the pauper's examination, made out the order of removal, and (the pauper being unable to be moved) suspended the execution by an indorsement on the back of the order. The pauper was attended by a surgeon, by the order of the parish officers of St. James. On the 1st of April, 1808, the magistrate took off the suspension, and made the order for payment of the expenses. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "No doubt can be raised on the question; no person is removeable from the parish where he is, but by positive statute. The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, (which confers the power of removing) after reciting that poor people endeavour to settle themselves in those parishes where there is the best stock, &c., and when they have consumed it then to another fresh, &c. says, that it shall be lawful, on complaint of the parish officers, within forty days after any such person coming so to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of 10*l.* for any two justices of the peace of the division where any person likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove him to the place of his last legal settlement. The expression of coming to settle, denotes the party comes animo morandi, or manendi; it may be for a temporary purpose, but still it must be understood that he comes to settle there. But how can it be said that the pauper went into this parish animo morandi at all? He went into the town with a cart of hay, which he was to dispose of, and return with a load of muck. How, then, can it be said that he went there to settle? Then, if he were not removable within the terms of the 13 & 14 Car. II., can we find any enlargement of the power of removal? The 35 Geo. III. has the words inhabiting or sojourning; but it would be an extravagant construction of either of those terms to say that it meant to include such a case as this. Then, if the order be not warranted by either of these statutes, there is no authority for it, and the sessions have done right to quash it. Le Blanc, J. said, that "it had been properly admitted, that 35 Geo. III. did not enlarge the 13 & 14 Car. II. The 35 Geo. III. was meant to provide that persons who by law were before removable, if likely to become chargeable, should not be removed till actually so; and to make provision for suspending the order of removal, when made in case of sickness or infirmity, and that the expenses incurred in the care and maintenance of the persons, between the order to remove and the actual removal of them, should be defrayed by the parish to which they should be found to belong."

But it is evident that the learned judge could not mean that the expenses incurred in a sickness or infirmity, produced by sudden accident, should be defrayed by the pauper's own parish.

Rex v. St. Lawrence, Ludlow, 4 B. & Ald. 660. Order of removal from St. Lawrence, Ludlow, to Leinthall Starks, Salop, discharged. Case:—On the 31st of October, 1818, G. Thomas, the pauper, was sent with his master's team for coals, and on the road, in the parish of Bromfield, was thrown down by the horses, by which means his thigh was fractured: the accident took place about half a mile from Ludlow, in the parish of Bromfield. A person passing by with an empty waggon took the pauper to the Bell Inn, in the parish of St. Lawrence, Ludlow, where the pauper was taken in, and remained fourteen weeks, attended by a surgeon. The overseers of Ludlow came to the Bell the same day, and examined the pauper, and directed the mistress of the house to take care of him: they also were present when the surgeon was there. On the 4th of November an order of removal was made by the magistrates, removing the pauper to Leinthall Starks. There was also an order of suspension. On the 17th of July, an order for the charges incurred by St. Lawrence was made. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that in this case the sessions were right in holding that the pauper was irremovable. The Rex v. St. James, Bury St. Edmunds, seems to me to have been most correctly decided, and I do not think the present case materially distinguishable from it. But it is said that Rex v. Birmingham, post, is at variance with its authority. I am not of that opinion; but if it were necessary to decide between the two cases as conflicting authorities, I should adhere to the opinion of the court in Rex v. St. James, Bury St. Edmunds. For the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, only gave a power of removal of those paupers who were coming to settle. Now how can it be said that this pauper was coming to settle in St. Lawrence, Ludlow? Nor does the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, make any difference, for previously to the passing of that act, a pauper under these circumstances could not have been removed. And that act only regulated the powers of removal already existing, but did not give any new power to the magistrates for removing paupers who were irremovable before. Order confirmed.

Where a pauper is legally settled in A., having met with a severe accident in the parish of B., was carried into the adjacent parish C., to be cured: Held that he was to be considered as casual poor in C., and was irremovable, and that an order of removal to A., suspended under the 35 G. 3, c.

Lamb v. Bunce, 4 M. & Sel. 725. Assumpsit for a surgeon's bill. Smith, a carter to a farmer in West Woodhay parish, met with an accident, in driving his master's team, in the parish of Hampstead Marshal, by which one of his legs was fractured. He was immediately conveyed to the nearest and most convenient house, which was a public house situate in the adjoining parish of Enborne, and distant about a half a mile from the spot where the accident happened. Smith, not being in a condition to be removed to his master's, the plaintiff, who was a surgeon and was generally employed to attend the poor of Enborne, was sent for, but it did not appear by whom, and he attended him until he recovered. During his attendance, the defendant, the overseer of Enborne, frequently visited Smith, and knew that the plaintiff attended him, and when Smith was fit to be removed, took him in a cart to his master's at West Woodhay. Smith was not a parishioner of Enborne.

Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "This pauper was to be considered as casual poor wherever his infirm and indigent body was found, and he had a claim on the parish where he was so found to have his necessities provided for by them. That was the parish of Enborne, and I consider that when the parish officer visited the pauper according to his duty, and knew that the plaintiff, who was generally employed for the poor, was in attendance upon him, and did not repudiate his attendance, he in effect commanded it. It cannot be

Where a pauper had his leg fractured in one parish, and was conveyed for cure to a house in another parish, the overseer of the parish where the cure was performed, was held liable for the expences. (a)

(a) In a former edition was the following note. It may sometimes happen that the parish where the accident occurs may not afford a proper place to give relief. The parish officers or others may, probably, without bestowing a thought upon the boundaries of parishes, do that which ought to be done immediately, namely, carry the pauper to the house nearest to the place where the accident happened, instead of conveying him to a considerable distance. In Lamb v. Bunce, the impression of the Court was, that the parish in which the house was situate was the proper parish to have given relief. There is no express decision upon this point, and Mr. Justice Bayley, it will be seen, reserved it, in giving his judgment in Tomlinson v. Bentall, (post, 92.) It can hardly be doubted, however, that whenever the question comes to be decided, that the Courts will follow up the manifest impression of these cases, and declare that this expense must be borne by the parish in which the house is situate where relief is afforded, if such house is the nearest to the spot where the accident has happened, and has been chosen on that account alone, from a laudable anxiety to obtain for the pauper the most prompt and efficient assistance. It can make no difference in this respect, even where the pauper's settlement is in the adjoining parish. It is highly prejudicial to the rights of the poor, that when an accident has happened, the question should be agitated, or even pass in the minds of those persons in whose power the sufferer is of necessity placed, whether a burthen, which must fall somewhere, must be borne by them, or can, by any contrivance, be shifted to others. The various dicta upon this subject seem to establish that a pauper, become so under such circumstances, obtains a settlement pro tempore in the parish where the accident has left him to be relieved; and that his settlement in his own parish is suspended till the cause of its interruption is removed.

1. By whom to be relieved, &c.

matter of dispute in point of law, and I could wish it were so understood, that where time is not afforded for procuring an order of justices, the law raises an obligation against the parish where the pauper lies sick as casual poor, to look to the supply of his necessities; and, if the parish officer stands by and sees that obligation performed by those who are fit and competent to perform it, and does not object, the law will raise a promise on his part to pay for the performance. Mr. Shepherd has argued that a moral obligation is not sufficient to raise an implied promise to a third person, but I think this case is out of that objection, because the defendant, by not repudiating the plaintiff's attendance, did that which is equivalent to a previous request. As to the objection that the parish of Hampstead Marshal was the place where the accident and injury arose, there is no pretence for saying that there is an exclusive liability attaching to the parish upon that account; there is no reason for connecting the place where the accident happened with the liability." Le Blanc, J. "There is no doubt that if the parish officers had sent for the plaintiff to attend the pauper, he would have been bound so to do. For here the plaintiff was in the habit of attending the parish poor; therefore he was not a stranger, but a person pointed out by the parish as the person to attend to this duty. He does attend, and this with a full knowledge of the parish officer, who does not make any objection on his part; consequently the parish officer must be taken to have assented to it. Therefore, there is quite sufficient to raise the presumption of a previous request."

In case of accident to a poor person, it is the duty of the overseers of the parish in which the accident happened to provide necessary medical and other relief, and such parish is bound to pay all needful expenses.

Tomlinson v. Bental, 5 B. & C. 738; 8 D. & R. 493, S. C. Assumpsit for a surgeon's bill. The plaintiff was a surgeon. The defendants in 1824 were overseers of the parish of Heybridge. In October in that year P. Bannister, a poor woman belonging to the parish of Malden, returning from Witham to Malden in a cart, about ten o'clock at night, was thrown out of the cart in the parish of Heybridge, near to a public house there called the Hoy. Her thigh was broken, and she was otherwise much hurt. The constable of Heybridge being sent for, desired her to be sent out of that parish. She was placed again in the cart, and taken over a bridge (which divides Heybridge and Malden); the driver of the cart then remonstrated with the constable, and told him that he was wrong in removing her from Heybridge. Upon this the constable ordered her to be taken back to Heybridge, and said he would go and consult a neighbouring magistrate. The magistrate, who was also churchwarden of Heybridge, advised him to take the woman to the nearest public house and send for a doctor. The landlord of the Hoy refused to take her in. The driver of the cart then suggested to the constable to take her to the poorhouse. The constable said he did not know where they would put her. The pauper, who had been exposed to the cold air for some hours, said, "if you do not know where to put me, for God's sake take me home." The constable desired a bystander to pay attention to the request made by the pauper to be sent home, as it was likely they might be called to speak to the fact upon some future occasion. She requested not to be put under the care of the plaintiff, (who was apothecary of the parish of Malden,) but of one Thorpe, who was apothecary of Heybridge. The constable then desired her to be taken to Malden. The driver of the cart refused to take her back to Malden, unless the constable would give him a note that she should be taken care of by the parish of Heybridge. The constable said he would, but he did not. He accompanied her to her house at Malden, where she arrived about two o'clock in the morning, and asked Thorpe to attend her, and told him the pauper was at her own house. Thorpe said that in that case he, as the apothecary of Heybridge, had nothing to do with her. The constable then sent for Tomlinson, and the latter attended her for several weeks. B. Graham was of opinion, that there was some evidence to go to the jury, that the magistrate, who was churchwarden, and the constable, felt the obligation to afford the pauper relief, and that the constable actually undertook to pay the plaintiff for his attendance; and secondly, he was of opinion, that as the accident which happened in the parish of Heybridge was one which required immediate care and attention, it was the duty of the officers of that parish to have taken the pauper to the house nearest to the place where the accident happened, and where they could procure accommodation for her, and to have provided medical assistance immediately; and if, as humanity required them to have done, they had sent for a surgeon to attend her in that parish, they would clearly have been liable; and that they could not, by neglecting their duty and removing her to another parish, relieve themselves from that liability which the law had cast upon them. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Abbott, C. J., "The pauper met with the accident in Heybridge, an accident that entirely incapacitated her from going to her own place of abode; and, therefore, if she had been taken to any house in Heybridge, as she ought to have been, and relief had been administered to her there, it is clear that the parish officers would have been liable for the expenses of her cure. Rex v. St. James, in Bury St. Edmund's, (ante, 90,) is an authority to show that it would not have been competent to the parish officers to have removed her, as a person coming to settle in Heybridge. If she had been taken to a house in Heybridge, therefore, the parish officers would have been under a moral and legal obligation to provide assistance for her. One of the parish officers did very properly recommend her to be taken to the nearest public-house, which was in Heybridge. The occupier of that house did not think proper to open his doors and receive her. A proposition was then made to take her to the poorhouse; and upon the way thither, some conversation took place, which excited in the mind of the poor woman (who at that time had been lying in the cold some hours) an alarm, whether, when she arrived there, she should be properly treated, and she said, 'for God's sake, take me to my own house!' and she was then taken home. The first proposal was to take her to her own parish; but, upon a remonstrance by the driver of the cart, the constable desisted. She was, however, ultimately taken to her own house. The constable of Heybridge sent to the plaintiff, and desired him to take care of her. As the parish officers of Heybridge must have paid for the medical attendance if she had remained there, it seems to me that the removal from that parish to another, (although it was her own,) coupled with the fact that the surgeon was called in from the parish of Malden, does not relieve the inhabitants of Heybridge from the obligation to which they would have been clearly liable, if this woman had been taken to some house in that parish, and taken care of there: and for these reasons I think that the verdict was right." Bayley, J., "I am of opinion that the verdict was right. It is of very great importance, with a view to the protection to which the poor are entitled, that it should be fully understood upon whom, under such circumstances as those which have occurred in the present case, the legal obligation to provide medical attendance attaches. I do not put the case upon the ground of moral obligation, or upon the ground of the constables having sent for and employed the plaintiff; but I put it upon the ground that the law imposed a legal obligation upon the parish officers of Heybridge to employ a surgeon for the cure of the pauper. I think it is highly prejudicial to the rights of the poor, that when an accident has happened, the question should be agitated or even pass in the minds of those persons in whose power the sufferer is of necessity placed, whether a burthen which must fall somewhere, must be borne by them, or can by any contrivance be shifted to others. It is of importance, therefore, that it should be certain upon whom the obligation to provide medical attendance rests. For otherwise the consequence will be, that poor persons, who ought not to be removed from the place where they have met with an accident, will, perhaps, at the risk of their life, but certainly with great aggravation of their sufferings, be removed to a distance. In this case the pauper met with the accident in Heybridge, which incapacitated her from moving herself from the spot where it happened. The best and most obvious course would have been, to have done that which the magistrate of the place suggested should be done, viz., to have removed her into the public-house, but if she was not placed there, she ought to have been placed in the poorhouse, or, at all events, she ought to have been sent to some house in the parish. I am of opinion that when the parish officers refused her an asylum in that parish where she was entitled to have it, and forced her to go to her own house, all the attendance given by the plaintiff in the parish of Malden, in consequence of the wrongful conduct of some of the parishioners of Heybridge, is to be considered as if it had been given in the parish where the accident happened, and as if the house which she occupied had been in the parish of Heybridge. Although the attendance was not given in the parish of Heybridge, but in the parish of Malden, yet as one of the parish officers of Heybridge knew that the attendance was indispensably necessary, and that the removal from Heybridge to Malden had been wrongful; it seems to me exactly the same as if the parish officer had stood by and seen the attendance of the surgeon upon the pauper in the parish of Heybridge. There was a subsequent case of Gent v. Tomkins (Trinity term, 1822), in this Court, which seems to support the principle, that the law casts the obligation of providing medical attendance for a pauper disabled by an accident, upon that parish where the accident has happened. In that case the action was brought, not against the overseers of the parish in which the accident happened, but against the overseer of the parish to which the pauper belonged, and the Court intimated a very strong opinion that it was not properly brought against the overseer of the latter parish. It may sometimes happen that the parish in which the accident happens may not be the proper place to give relief. It may happen that the parish officers, without entering into the question what are the limits of particular parishes, will do that which ought to be done immediately, namely, carry the pauper to the house nearest the place where the accident happens, instead of carrying her to a considerable distance. In Lamb v. Bunce, ante, 91, the impression of the Court was, that the parish in which the house was situate was the proper parish to have given the relief; but, without deciding that point, I am of opinion that in this case, inasmuch as the accident happened in the parish of Heybridge, and that was the place where, under all the circumstances, the pauper was entitled to receive surgical assistance, the plaintiff is entitled to look to the parish of Heybridge for payment of his bill." Holroyd, J., "The accident having happened to the pauper in the parish of Heybridge, it was the duty of the officers of that parish to provide medical assistance for her there. They might have done that, although the occupier of one public house refused to receive her. But I think they could not, by removing her elsewhere, shift upon other people that burthen which the law cast upon themselves; and that, whether they procured the medical assistance to be given in the parish or out of the parish, they are liable." Littledale, J., "Whenever any accident happens to a poor person of such a serious nature as to render removal out of the parish dangerous or improper, I think the law casts an undoubted obligation on that parish to administer all necessary relief. If the pauper in this case had actually been taken to a house in Heybridge, and resided there while the surgeon was attending her, that parish would have been liable for her cure; but it appears to me that, under the circumstances of this case, she was improperly taken out of the parish; and that any officer or inhabitant taking her to another parish, where it was improper to take her, cannot by so doing release the inhabitants of the former parish from the obligation."

If a pauper meet with an accident in a parish not his own, and he is attended by a surgeon there, no legal obligation lies upon the overseers of the pauper's parish to pay the surgeon's bill. (a)

Gent v. Tompkins, 1 D. & R. 541. The plaintiff, a surgeon at Winslow, was called in to attend one Tyrrell, a pauper of Newton Longville, who had met with an accident in the former parish. Tyrrell was confined at Winslow, and regularly attended by the plaintiff till he was removed to his own parish, of which the defendant was an overseer. Previous to Tyrrell's removal from Winslow, the defendant called upon the plaintiff, and desired him to take care of the pauper, and do what he could for him, and added, "that he

(a) This case (as Sneath v. Tomkins) is noticed in a note 1 Car. & P. 132, where the reporters say "that it was intimated from the bench, that two of the judges thought it highly doubtful whether, as the pauper was casual poor in B., there was any consideration even for a subsequent express promise by the overseer of A., and they had very great doubts whether the action could be maintained, as this promise came within the rule of nudum pactum."

would see him paid;" and, on a subsequent application by the parish officers of Winslow, the defendant said, "that if it was right that they should pay the surgeon's bill, they would." The plaintiff originally made the parish officers of Winslow debtors in his bill, but subsequently altered it, and debited the parish officers of Newton Longville.

Abbott, C. J. said, he was quite satisfied there was not in this case any legal obligation upon the defendant to pay the plaintiff's demand in the first instance, or to provide for the pauper. The court said they were clearly of opinion there must be a new trial, in order that the jury might distinctly consider whether the attendance of the plaintiff upon the pauper, after the accident, was in consideration of the defendant's express promise to pay.—Rule absolute.

Paynter v. Williams, 1 Crompt. & Mees. 810. Lord Lyndhurst, "The facts of the case are, that the pauper being settled in G., resided in F. for some time, during which he received an allowance from his own parish; that allowance was afterwards discontinued, the overseers saying they would not pay him any more unless he removed into his own parish. He was afterwards taken ill, and attended for nine weeks by the plaintiff (a surgeon); then a letter is taken to the overseers of G., and they directed the allowance to be renewed, and it was continued to the death of the pauper. They knew, therefore, of the pauper's being there; that in my opinion amounts to a request on the part of the officers that the pauper should not be removed, and to a promise that they will allow what is requisite. They knew by the same letter of the plaintiff's attendance. This in my opinion was an acceptance of the plaintiff's services, and created a legal liability." Bayley, B., "The legal liability of the parish was not alone sufficient to enable plaintiff to maintain this action without a retainer or adoption by the parish. The legal liability does not give any person who chooses to attend a pauper a right to call for payment. In Wing v. Mill, (1 Bar. & Ald. 104,) the parish officers knew of the attendance, and sanctioned it." Verdict for plaintiff for the amount of expenses incurred after the letter.

If a stranger gives an order for the attendance of the plaintiff as a surgeon, he is liable. There can be no implied promise from a deputy overseer. (Watley v. Walters, 1 C. & P. 132.)

Simmons v. Wilmott, 3 Esp. R. 91, Lord Eldon held that the parish was not merely liable to a surgeon who exerts his professional skill, and gives the requisite medical attention to a pauper under such circumstances, but that a common person who took care of an individual who had been severely bruised by accident, by being thrown off his master's cart, so as to render it unsafe to remove him, and was carried to such person's home, who attended him for ten days and provided a nurse, &c., might recover against the parish for the lodging, maintenance, &c., of the individual so relieved, as he came within the description of casual poor.

Atkins v. Benwell, 2 East, 505. The plaintiffs were the parish officers of Toddington, and the defendants of Milton Bryant. J. Mitchell was a pauper settled at the time of his illness and death in Milton Bryant, but resided with his family at Toddington, and was there suddenly attacked with dangerous illness, which prevented his being removed from the place of his residence to that of his settlement without endangering his life. The plaintiffs gave notice to the defendants of the illness of their pauper within two or three days after the pauper was so taken ill; and the pauper, about three weeks from such notice, died in Toddington; and the plaintiffs, from the time of such notice, laid out 14*l.* 12*s.* as well for necessaries for the pauper and family, as for medicines, and also on the funeral. The present action was brought to recover that sum. The jury found that there was no express promise of the defendants to pay it to the plaintiffs. Watson v. Turner, (Bul. Ni. Pri. 129, 147, 281,) was cited, where, however, there was a special promise to pay the plaintiff's bill. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "That last circumstance makes all the difference. A moral obligation is a good consideration for an express promise; but it has never been carried further, so as to raise an implied promise in law. There is no precedent, principle, or colour for maintaining this action." Le Blanc, J., "There was a moral as well as legal obligation to maintain the pauper in his illness in the parish where he was at the time."

Wennall v. Adney, 3 Bos. & Pul. 247. This was an action to recover the amount of a surgeon's bill for attending the servant of defendant, who had broken his arm and was carried to the house of his mother, where the surgical attendance was given. As the defendant had not employed the plaintiff, or made any promise of payment, the plaintiff was nonsuited. Lord Alvanley, C. J. "I have reason to believe that the opinion delivered by Lord Kenyon, in Scarman v. Castell, (a) was not a hasty opinion, but formed upon reflection. I have no difficulty, however, in saying that I concur with the learned judge before whom this cause was tried, in thinking that the defendant is not liable. In this kind of question much may depend upon the nature of the contract entered into between the master and the servant. Sometimes a master engages to supply his servant with necessary victuals, and it may undoubtedly be argued, that necessary victuals mean such victuals as may suit the state of health or infirmity in which the servant happens to be; as if a servant be in need of wine, or victuals of that description, which are given by way of medicine. It is sufficient, however, to observe, that previous to Scarman v. Castell, there is no authority in the law of England to be found, which warrants the position contended for on the part of the plaintiff. I have no doubt whatever that parish officers are bound to assist, where such accidents as these take place; and that the law will so far raise an implied contract against them, as to enable any person who affords that immediate assistance which the necessity of the case usually requires, to recover against them the amount of money expended." The other judges fully concurred.

Newby v. Wiltshire, Cald. 527; 4 Dougl. 283, S. C. This was an action brought by an overseer of one parish against the defendant, for expenses incurred in the cure of the defendant's servant, whose limb had been fractured by his falling from the shaft of his master's waggon, in the parish of which the plaintiff was overseer. The defendant knew of the accident the same night it happened, and visited the boy during the cure, and afterwards received him to complete his year's service, and paid him his whole year's wages. Lord Mansfield, "Whether judicially said, or when other subjects were under consideration, I cannot help thinking in general, that a master ought to take care of his servants in sickness. Upon every principle of humanity he ought; but the question here is, what is the law? and no authority has been produced to show that the parish have a remedy over against the master; and it cannot be. Parishes are bound to take care of their casual poor. There is no express contract to this purpose, nor can any be implied." Postea to the defendant.

The 11 Geo. IV. c. 5, repeals the several provisions relating to removal of paupers, born in Guernsey and Jersey, contained in 17 Geo. II. c. 5, 59 Geo. III. c. 12, and 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, and enacts, by sect. 2, "that it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace, and they are hereby required, upon the complaint of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, that any person born in either of the isles of Jersey or Guernsey hath become chargeable to such parish, by himself or herself, or his or her family, to cause such person to be brought before them, and to examine such person, and any other witness or witnesses, on oath, touching the place of the birth or last legal settlement of every such person, and to inquire whether he or she, or any of his or her children, hath or have gained any settlement in that part of the United Kingdom called England; and if it shall be found by such justices that the person so brought before them was born in either of the isles of Jersey or Guernsey, and hath not gained any settlement in England, and that he or she hath actually become chargeable to the complaining parish, by himself or herself, or his or her family, then such justices shall, and they are hereby empowered, by an order of removal under their hands and seals, to cause such poor person, his wife, and such of his or her children so chargeable, as shall not have gained a settlement in England, to be removed, by and at the charge and expense of the complaining parish, to the place of his or her birth."

Rex v. Leeds, 4 B. & A. 498. An order for removing Hannah, the wife of T. Robinson, and her children, from Leeds to Almondbury, was discharged. Case: The husband of Hannah was a Scotchman, residing at Leeds with his family, and had not acquired any settlement in England. Not being able to maintain his wife and children, they were obliged to apply for relief to the township of Leeds, and were actually chargeable to that township at the time of the order. He consented that his wife and children should be removed to Almondbury, the place of his wife's maiden settlement.

The wife and unemancipated children of a Scotchman, who has not acquired any settlement in England, must, if chargeable, be sent by a pass along with the husband to Scotland, and cannot be removed to the maiden settlement of the wife.

Abbott, C. J. This question arises out of the compulsory power formerly vested in justices of the peace, of removing a wife from her husband by consent: and it is one, and that not the smallest of the evils attendant on the poor laws, that cases should have arisen under them, in which this court has held that such a removal, amounting to a temporary divorce, might lawfully be made. It is to be observed, however, that in Rex v. Eltham, (a) there was the consent of both husband and wife to the separation. I am very glad we are relieved by this act of parliament from the necessity of considering those cases. I think it is impossible to read the words of the 33d sect. of 59 Geo. III. c. 12, without seeing that the magistrates have now the power in cases like the present, of sending the husband, together with his wife and family, by a pass to Scotland; and, having this power, I am of opinion that they cannot now remove the wife and family to her maiden settlement, so as to separate her from her husband. I think, therefore, that the order of sessions was right, and ought to be confirmed.—Bayley, J. It is against public policy and good morals, to permit the separation of husband and wife, even with their consent. This question, however, turns on the 59 Geo. III. c. 12. s. 33, which enacts, that it shall and may be lawful for the magistrates, and they are thereby required, in certain specified cases, to cause persons born in Scotland, &c., to be brought before them. Now these are words of compulsion on the magistrates to institute proceedings in cases like the present. The act then provides, that the justices shall enquire into the settlement of the head of the family and his or her children, in order, as it seems to me, to ascertain whether any of those children have been emancipated. It then enacts that such justices shall and are hereby empowered to cause such poor person, his wife, and such of his children as have not gained a settlement in England, to be removed by a pass to Scotland. Now it is to be observed, that the wife is thus for the first time, introduced in the latter part of this clause, which is perfectly silent in the prior part of it, as to any enquiry to be made by the justices respecting her settlement. I think therefore that the magistrates have no discretion given them of removing the wife to her maiden settlement, and thereby of separating her and her family from the husband. If the magistrates remove at all, they must remove the whole family together to Scotland, under the provisions of this act of parliament.—Holroyd, J. The words of this clause are imperative on the magistrates, in case they make any order, to remove the whole family to Scotland, and not, as they have done here, to remove the wife and family to the place of her maiden settlement. By the act, if the husband becomes chargeable by himself, or his family, he may be removed; and it seems to me, that it is altogether immaterial, provided the head of the family be born in Scotland, whether the children be born in England or not. The only exception is as to those children who have gained settlements in England in their own right. Then, as a power is now given to remove the husband, the wife must be removed with him: for the power of removing her to her maiden settlement was allowed to exist only from the necessity of the case, and must cease with it. It seems to me that we cannot narrow the construction of the words of this statute, unless, in so doing, we clearly saw that we should further the intention of the legislature. And as I do not think that their intention was to prevent the removal of the whole family together, I am of opinion that the decision of the sessions was right.—Best, J. If the point decided in Rex v. Eltham were to occur again, I think it would perhaps be worth considering whether that decision could be supported. It is, however, not necessary to determine that question now, because I am clearly of opinion, that, under the clause of this act of parliament, it is imperative on the magistrates to remove the whole family to Scotland. It seems to me that clearer terms could not have been used. For the act expressly says, "that the magistrates shall, and they are hereby empowered, to remove such poor person, his wife, and such of his children as have not gained a settlement, to the place of his birth or last legal settlement." The statute could not, therefore, mean to leave a discretion in the magistrates as to whether they would exercise this power or not. And by adopting this construction, we shall, as it seems to me, further the object of the statute, which was to remove the inconvenience which existed from idle and improvident persons coming to this country, and remaining here irremovable with their wives and families. Any other construction would produce great inconvenience. It is quite clear that the head of the family may be removed; and if he should be removed, after the separation from his family, the wife and children would, in all probability, remain permanently chargeable. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Whitehaven. 5 B. & A. 720; 1 D. & R. 384; and D. & R. Mag. Ca. 77. Case: The pauper, Mary M'Cornick, an unmarried woman with child, and thereby chargeable, but who had not applied for or received parochial relief, was removed from Whitehaven to Workington, as the place of her birth settlement. The pauper, at the time of her removal, was above the age of twenty-one, had gained no settlement for herself, was unemancipated, and living with her father and mother, as part of their family. The father and mother were both Irish, and had gained no settlement in England. The father had not applied for or received any relief from the removing township, for himself or any part of his family.

Per Curiam. We are of opinion that the chargeability contemplated by the legislature in 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, was the actual asking for parish relief, and not the constructive chargeability created by 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 6.

Rex v. Cottingham, 7 B. & C. 615; 1 M. & R. 439, 469; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 130, 137. Case:—Anne O'Hara's maiden settlement was in Cottingham, and she had acquired no subsequent settlement. The settlement of her eldest child Henry, who was a bastard, was also in that parish. Patrick O'Hara, a native of Ireland, was married to Anne, on the 28th of April, 1819, and the three youngest children were the issue of such marriage; he had no settlement in England. In 1819, after the marriage, and whilst Patrick and his wife resided at Hull, Anne and her eldest son became chargeable to Hull, and were thereupon (with the consent of the husband) removed to Cottingham, the place of her maiden settlement, and the order of removal upon that occasion stated her to be the wife of Patrick, an Irishman, who had no settlement in England, and the said P. O'Hara had consented to her removal. This order was not appealed against, and the appellant parish granted relief to Anne and her said child for a short time. In 1827, P. O'Hara having left Hull, and it not being known what had become of him, the wife and family again became chargeable to the parish of the Holy Trinity, who, as above stated, removed them to Cottingham.

Bayley, J. This is a very plain case. Before the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, passed, it was clearly established by a series of authorities from St. John's, Wapping, v. St. Botolph's, Bishopgate, to Rex v. Harberton, that where a woman had a settlement, married, and was deserted by her husband, who had no settlement, the maiden settlement of the wife was thereby revived, and she might be removed thither. Here the husband at the time when the order of removal was made had deserted his wife, and she did not know where he was. According to the authorities she was clearly removable to Cottingham, unless the law in this respect has been altered by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 23. The object of the legislature was to relieve parishes from the necessity of maintaining, as casual poor, persons born in Scotland or Ireland; and with that view it authorizes their removal to the place of their birth, together with their wives, &c. The statute does not authorize the removal of the wife alone to the place of the birth of the husband; and the husband having quitted the parish could not be removed to Ireland, and that being so the wife could not be removed without him. This is a case, therefore, not within the act of parliament, and the law applicable to this case remains as it was before the passing of the act. In Rex v. Heaton Norris, the same construction was put upon this statute. In that case, a Chelsea pensioner, born in Scotland, left his wife and family at Heaton Norris whilst he came to do town duty, and in his absence the wife and family were removed to the wife's maiden settlement. On appeal, the sessions stated a case, in which the only question they put was, whether under the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, the removal ought to have been to Scotland? The judges thought not. In Rex v. Leeds, (ante, 97,) it was only decided that where the husband (who was born in Scotland) and his wife were living together, the wife must be sent along with him to Scotland. The law applicable to this case remains the same as it was before the 59 Geo. III. c. 12; it follows, therefore, that the wife and children were clearly removable to the place of her maiden settlement. No mischief will result from this decision, for during the absence of the husband, the family will be maintained by the parish which is bound to maintain them, and upon his return that parish may pass him and his family to Ireland.

1. Origin and Progress of Enactments respecting this Parochial Fund.

THE Revenue or Income out of which the Poor are to be relieved is either general or ordinary, arising from general rates, usually made twice or oftener in every year; or, extraordinary and casual, as in the instances of penalties given for numerous offences, half to be paid to the overseers for the use of the poor of the parish. Of late such penalties have in general been made payable in aid of the County Rate.

The ancient statutes prescribing compulsory maintenance.

It is curious to a contemplative person to investigate by what steps and degrees the compulsory maintenance became established in this kingdom. By a statute made in the 12 Ric. II., viz. c. 7, the poor were restrained from wandering abroad, and were required to abide in the towns where they were born, or in other places within the hundred; within which districts they were allowed to beg.—By 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12, the justices were to distribute themselves into several divisions, within which divisions respectively they might license persons to beg.—By 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25, the several hundreds, towns corporate, parishes, or hamlets, were required to sustain the poor with such charitable voluntary alms, as that none of them might of necessity be compelled to go openly in begging, on pain that every person making default should forfeit 20s. a month; and the churchwardens or other substantial inhabitants were to make collections for them with boxes on Sundays, and otherwise at their discretions; and the minister was to take all opportunities to exhort and stir up the people to be liberal and bountiful.—By 1 Ed. VI. c. 3, houses were to be provided for them by the devotion of good people, and materials to set them on work; and the minister, after the Gospel every Sunday, was specially to exhort the parishioners to a liberal contribution.—By 5 & 6 Ed. VI. c. 2, the collectors of the poor on a certain Sunday in every year, immediately after divine service, were to take down in writing what every person was willing to give weekly for the ensuing year, and if any should be obstinate and refuse to give, the minister was gently to exhort him; if he still refused, the minister was to certify such refusal to the bishop of the diocese, and the bishop was to send for him to induce and persuade him by charitable ways and means, and so according to his discretion to take order for the reformation thereof.—By 5 Eliz. c. 3, if he stood out against the bishop's exhortation, the bishop was to certify the same to the justices in sessions, and bind him over to appear there; and the justices at the said sessions were again gently to move and persuade him, and finally, if he would not be persuaded, then they were to assess him what they thought reasonable towards the relief of the poor, and in case of refusal were to commit him till paid.—By 14 Eliz. c. 5, power was given to the justices to lay a general assessment, and this hath continued ever since, for the 43 Eliz. c. 2, only re-enacts former provisions with very little alteration.

1. Origin and Progress of Poor Rate.

By 57 Geo. III. c. 34, intituled, "An Act to authorize the Issue of Exchequer Bills, and the Advance of Money out of the Consolidated Fund to a limited amount, for the carrying on of Public Works and Fisheries in the United Kingdom, and Employment of the Poor of Great Britain in manner therein mentioned." (a) See also Appendix.

Advances of money, &c. under 57 G. 3, c. 34.

Sect. 29. "It is enacted that no such exchequer bills shall be advanced in aid of any parish in Great Britain unless the application for such advance shall be made with the consent of not less than the majority in number, and of three-fourth parts in value, such value to be calculated and ascertained from the last rate made for the relief of the poor in such parish, of the persons assessed to and paying such rates; or where the poor rates of any parish shall be under the care and management of any select vestry or commissioners, governors of the poor, trustees, or other select body, then with the consent of not less than four-fifths of such select body, by whatever name the same may be called; such consent to be certified by some justice of the peace or magistrate acting as such in each parish, and one or more of the overseers of the poor of the parish or place in respect of which the application shall be made."

Advance not to be made to parishes, unless application made with consent of majority in number, and three-fourths in value, of persons paying poor rates; or, where there is a select vestry, &c. then with consent of four fifths of that body.

Sect. 35 enacts, "that the principal sums contained in the exchequer bills which shall be advanced or lent by the said commissioners for the execution of this act in Great Britain, under the authority of this act, shall be repaid, without deduction or abatement, together with interest for the same, by instalments; that is to say, the principal sum in each and every exchequer bill shall be repaid to the cashier or cashiers of the Bank of England at their office, together with interest for the same at and after the rate of five pounds per centum per annum, by the space of fifteen days at least before the time when each such exchequer bill shall become payable according to the provisions of this act, such interest to be computed on the said principal sum from the date of such exchequer bill to the time of the payment thereof."

Principal sums of exchequer bills with interest to be repaid by instalments.

By 53 Geo. III. c. 124, s. 5, it is enacted, "that no advance shall be made under the provisions of 57 Geo. III. c. 34, for the use of any parish, township, or place in Great Britain, in which the amount of the money actually expended for the relief of the poor, in the year ending at Easter, 1817, or ending at the usual quarter-day immediately preceding Easter, 1817, shall not exceed by three-fourths the average annual amount of the money expended for the relief of the poor for the three years preceding Easter, 1816, or shall not exceed by one-half the amount so expended for the year ending Easter, 1816, anything in the said act of 57 Geo. III. c. 34, to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

Regulating advances to parishes.

Sect. 6 enacts, "that the principal sums contained in the exchequer bills which shall be advanced or lent by the said commissioners for the execution of this act in Great Britain, under the authority of the recited act (57 Geo. III. c. 34), the payment whereof shall not be otherwise provided for pursuant to the said recited act, shall be repaid without deduction or abatement, together with interest for the same at and after the rate of five pounds per centum per

(a) The overseer cannot borrow money for the general relief of the poor, but with a view to their better employment, the providing a workhouse for them, and encouraging emigration. The legislature has authorized the loan by various statutes. See sect. 62, 63, of 4 & 5 Will IV. c. 76, Appendix.

By 1 Geo. IV. c. 60, and 3 Geo. IV. c. 86, the 57 Geo. III. c. 34, and c. 124, are continued and amended; and by 5 Geo. IV. c. 77, after reciting the above acts, it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for the commissioners for the time being for the execution of 57 Geo. III. c. 34, and of the several other acts hereinbefore recited, whenever the said commissioners shall be directed so to do by any warrant under the hands of any three or more of the said commissioners of the treasury, and the said commissioners are hereby required to advance and lend any sum or sums of money toward the carrying into execution any act of parliament for making, completing, or maintaining any works of general public importance and utility, which shall be carried on under the direction of any commissioners appointed by authority of parliament, on such terms and conditions as shall from time to time be directed by the said commissioners of the treasury or any three or more of them, anything in the said recited acts, or any of them, contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding: provided always, that the rate of interest payable on such loan or advance shall not be less than the current rate of interest which shall be payable on exchequer bills at the time of making such loan or advance."

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, (a) s. 1, after enacting that certain persons shall be the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every parish, it enacts, that they, or the greater part of them, shall take order from time to time, by and with the consent of two or more justices of the peace in the same county, whereof one to be of the quorum, dwelling in or near the same parish or division where the same parish doth lie, to "raise weekly or otherwise, by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish, in such competent sum and sums of money as they shall think fit, a convenient stock of flax, hemp, wool, thread, iron, and other necessary ware and stuff to set the poor on work; and also competent sums of money for and towards the necessary relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such other among them, being poor, and not able to work, and also for the putting out of such children to be apprentices, to be gathered out of the same parish, according to the ability of the same parish, and to do and execute all other things as well for the disposing of the said stock, as otherwise concerning the premises, as to them shall seem convenient."

The overseers of townships and vills have the like duty and power, under 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 21; and the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, 9, provides for towns corporate and parishes extending into two counties, &c.

2. Who are to make the Rate.

The Churchwardens and Overseers shall, &c.] It is said by C. J. Holt, that the overseers, with the confirmation of the justices, may order a sum of money to be levied for the relief of the poor, without the concurrence of the parish. (Tawney's case, 2 Ld. Raym. 1009.) The churchwardens and overseers are required by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, (supra), to make the rate (Tawney's case, 2 Ld. Raym. 1009; 2 Salk. 531); and they may be indicted if they neglect to make such rate. And a mandamus will lie to compel overseers to Mandamus to compel the making a rate.

(a) The statute of Elizabeth was passed to enforce (what are called) duties of imperfect obligation. For it was a duty before that statute was made to relieve the poor and necessitous. And the provisions of that act were adapted to the enforcing of those duties in the only way in which they could be enforced, namely, by raising a fund from persons who are deemed competent to pay it. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J., 4 T. R. 775.

make a rate (Rex v. Barnstaple, 1 Barnard. 137; 1 Bott, 78; Lidleston v. Exeter, 1 Bott, 77; Rex v. Weobly, 1 Bott, 112); and the rule for a mandamus to make a poor rate is peremptory in the first instance, for otherwise the poor might starve (Rex v. Fisher, Sayer, 160); but not to make an equal rate, or to insert or omit any person or property, because it is to be presumed the overseers will do justice, and if they do not, there is a proper remedy by appeal to the sessions. (Rex v. Barnstaple, 1 Barnard. 137; 1 Bott, 78; 2 Stra. 1259.) And the overseers cannot charge for the employment of a person to make a rate, although such employment was authorized by a parish vestry. (Rex v. Gwyer, 4 Nev. & M. 158; 2 Adol. & Ell. 210.)

3. For what Purposes.

But not the making of an equal rate.

3. For what Purposes. (a)

3. For what purposes.

There are many purposes for which a poor rate may be made in addition to those mentioned in 43 Eliz. c. 2.(a) That statute provides for setting to work the children of those poor whose parents are not able to keep and maintain them: also, all persons, married and unmarried, having no means to maintain them, and use no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by; and for the putting out poor children apprentices.

It may now be professedly made for the express purpose of building a workhouse, employing the poor, paying officers, and repaying money borrowed for the purposes of the act, or for the emigration of paupers. See 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, gave power to build poorhouses; and, of course, impliedly gave power to defray the expense.

The 18 Geo. III. c. 19, relates to re-payment to constables of the money expended by them in the relief and removal of poor persons, and of vagrants.

Rex v. Essex, 4 T. R. 595. It was said, per Ashhurst, J., to have been the constant practice to allow the expenses of litigating the questions of settlement consequent upon the removal of paupers, to be defrayed out of the parish stock; the legality of which had never been disputed. (b)

Relief and removal of paupers and vagrants. Expenses of litigating questions of settlement.

Tawney's case, 2 Salk. 531; 2 Ld. Raym. 1009. Tawney, being overseer of the poor, laid out his money in the relief of the poor, and was turned out of his office by the justices before the end of the year; by which means he lost the opportunity of making a rate to reimburse himself. Upon this he applied for a mandamus to the overseers to make a rate to reimburse him.—By Holt, C. J. “We cannot order the parish or overseers by a mandamus to make a rate to reimburse an overseer, but only to raise money for the relief of the poor; nor can they make a rate otherwise. The act of parliament is expressly so, and must be pursued. An overseer is not bound to lay out money till he have it: if he do, he must make a new rate for the relief of the poor, and out of that he may retain to pay himself. Tawney should have done so; he trusted where he need not have done it. He hath not pursued the means the statute gave him, and we cannot relieve him.”—And by the whole court. The mandamus lies not.

After overseers are out of office, a rate cannot be made to reimburse money laid out by them whilst in office, but an overseer may make a new rate for the relief of the poor, and out of that retain to pay himself.

Rex v. Goodcheap, 6 T. R. 159. A person appointed an overseer for four successive years, did not make any rate in the three first years to reimburse himself what he expended in those three years, he cannot in the fourth year make a rate for that purpose: and Lord Kenyon said, “It was impossible to

An overseer for several successive years, cannot, in the last year, make a rate to reimburse himself for the preceding years.

(a) As to reimbursing overseers see more particularly 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 20; 42 Geo. III. c. 74; 43 Geo. III. c. 110, s. 1, 2; 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 8 to 16; 36 Geo. III. c. 10, s. 1; and 52 Geo. III. c. 73. See further, post, as to Overseers' Accounts.

(b) Quere. Whether the expenses of a valuation of the property of a parish which has been directed by a majority of the vestry, can be legally defrayed out of the poor rate? (See 1 Nol. P. L. 67, note 3.)

Semble, that if a select vestry so order under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, the expense may be defrayed out of poor rate. (Rex v. Micklefield, 1 Bott, P. L. 113.) A church rate to reimburse churchwarden is bad. (1 Burn, J., tit. “Churchwardens.”) So as to a county rate. (1 Burn, J., tit. “County Rate,” and see post, 106, note (a).)

3. For what Purposes.

But now succeeding churchwardens and overseers are empowered to repay money expended by preceding churchwardens, &c. for the maintenance of the poor, while there was no rate: or during an appeal: and in default of such repayment, the quarter sessions, on application being made to them, shall make an order for payment.

raise any doubt upon the question. Overseers ought not to include in their accounts charges for several years, but all the items of the accounts should be confined to that year when the accounts are directed by the act to be passed."

But now by 41 Geo. III. U. K. c. 23, s. 9, after reciting that "whereas it may have happened that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor have not been able to collect a sum sufficient for the relief and maintenance of the poor, but they or the guardians of the poor have advanced and expended considerable sums for that purpose;" it is enacted, "that the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, out of any money they shall collect in pursuance of any rate for the relief of the poor, may reimburse the preceding churchwardens and overseers or guardians such sums as they or any of them have heretofore advanced or expended for the relief or maintenance of the poor of such place, during the time that no rate or assessment for the relief thereof has been made, or during the time that any appeal has been depending which affected the whole of such rate or assessment, or upon hearing of which the whole might be quashed; and, in default of payment of such money so advanced and expended within fourteen days next after demand in writing, such preceding churchwardens and overseers or guardians, or any of them, may apply to the then next general or quarter sessions, giving due notice in writing of such application to the then churchwardens and overseers, or any two of them; and such court shall examine the parties and witnesses upon oath, and shall make an order upon the then churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, out of the money collected or to be collected by them, or any of them, in pursuance of any rate made for the relief of the poor, to pay such sum to the preceding churchwardens and overseers or guardians, or any of them, as the said court shall think fit: and such sums so ordered to be paid may be levied by distress, and by all such other ways and means as the poor rate may."

Rex v. Wavell, Dougl. 116. The rate was removed by certiorari, and the title was an assessment on the occupiers of lands and houses in the parish of Effingham, for the necessary relief of the poor, and towards payment of money borrowed for building and repairing the workhouse.—

Willes, J. "Can we reject, as a surplusage, what is a material part of the title of the rate? If we cannot, is a rate good to repay money borrowed? Tawney's case, (ante, p. 105,) is in point. And as to an appeal against the overseers' accounts, is a parishioner obliged to pay money, and be turned round in that manner to get it back if levied without authority? The rate cannot be supported." Buller, J. "This rate imports to be made for two purposes, and we are desired to consider it as only made for one. I conceive that a rate cannot be made for money borrowed, even though within the year. Tawney's case goes that length; for it is not confined to the mandamus." The rule for quashing was made absolute. (a) (See Rex Mayor of Gloucester, 5 T. R. 346.)

In Rex v. Glyde, 2 M. & Sel. 323, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "We have no doubt on the face of the order, that the overseer has no title to a salary for any meritorious services, or for any services at all."

Nor can he be remunerated even by resolutions of vestry for making a poor rate, or making divisions of the same, or copies for the collectors, or for payments to an accountant, or for making lists of defaulters, or for collecting the rates, though he employed another to do so under the authority of a vestry resolution. (Rex v. Gwyer, 4 Nev. & M. 158; 2 Adol. & Ell. 216.)

But where a local statute gave the overseers power to make a rate (inter alia) for the reasonable expenses of the overseers in the execution of their duty, a rate, purporting to be a rate "for raising the sum of 80*l.* as necessary to defray the reasonable expenses which they now, or hereafter may pay," is legal on the face of it, and cannot be quashed; and if the 80*l.* is improperly

(a) This principle also prevails as to church rates, although the money to be reimbursed may have been laid out under an order of vestry. (See Lanchester v. Thompson, et al. 5 Madd. 64; Lanchester v. Tricker, 8 J. B. Moore, 20; 1 Bing. 201, S. C.; Lanchester v. Frewer, 2 J. B. Moore, 688; 2 Bing. 361, S. C.)

expended, then the appeal must be against the overseers' accounts. (Rex v. Mayor of Gloucester, 5 T. R. 346.)

Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522. The expenses, which are to be allowed a constable out of the parish rates, are those necessarily incurred by him on behalf of the parish, as relieving or conveying vagrants, &c. within 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4: but the expenses of indicting a party for assaulting him in the execution of his duty, are not expenses so incurred, although the prosecution was directed by a magistrate. (See also Rex v. Seville, 5 B. & Ald. 180; ante, Vol. I. title Constable, s. 7.)

It has sometimes been the practice of coroners to require the overseers of the poor, in that character, and out of the poor rates, to prosecute parties charged with murder or manslaughter; but there is no legal ground on which that power has been assumed.—Editor.

The enactment in 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, as to appointing an assistant overseer with a salary will be elsewhere considered.

The enactments relative to labour rates in 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 96, and to lighting and watching rates, 11 Geo. IV. c. 27, s. 25, will be elsewhere considered.

3. For what Purposes.

Expenses of indictment for assault on constable, not allowable out of poor rate.

4. For what Time a Poor Rate may be made.

"Raise weekly or otherwise." Durrant v. Boyes, 6 T. R. 580. A poor rate may be made prospectively; and if it were made for six months, it would not (it seems) be bad on that account. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "Every person who is conversant in matters of this kind, knows the impossibility of foreseeing and providing for every expense that may arise: and therefore a rate may be made prospectively, not indeed wantonly, but such as is adapted to the probable exigencies of the parish."

Rex v. Audley, 2 Salk. 526; 1 Bott, 110, 272. A rate was agreed on in 1665, by the inhabitants of Audley, which had been followed ever since till the last year, when a new rate was made. On appeal to the sessions, the new rate was quashed, and the old one ordered to stand. By Holt, C. J. "The old rate, however just at first, may be unequal now; and therefore the justices cannot make a standing rate."

As to the amount of the rate, that in general must depend on the necessities of the poor; but by some local acts it was the practice to limit it to a specific sum. (a)

4. For what Time a Poor Rate may be made.

Rate may be prospective.

A standing rate cannot be made by the justices.

(a) The 36 Geo. III. c. 10, s. 1, recites, "that of late several acts have been made for the better relief of the poor in particular incorporated districts; and that certain persons are therein appointed to assess the poor's rates in such places, but the money so to be raised is limited not to exceed a certain sum in one year; and that by reason of the late increase of the price of corn and other necessary articles of life, the amount of the assessments so limited are insufficient, and the expense of maintaining the poor since 1st January, 1795, had exceeded the whole amount of the rates which could be raised in the present year, whereby debts have been incurred, so that it is become necessary that the sums to be assessed should be enlarged;" and then enacts "that it shall and may be lawful for the directors and acting guardians of the poor within any hundred, town, or district, in that part of Great Britain called England, incorporated by any act of parliament for the relief or maintenance and employment of the poor, or for any other persons, by whatsoever name they are called or described, to whom is given, by any such incorporating act, the power of appointing the sum or sums to be assessed on the several parishes, hamlets, or places within their respective hundreds, towns, or districts, for the maintenance of the poor, and other the purposes of such act, at any of their annual, quarterly, or other general meetings, whenever the average price of wheat at the corn market in Mark Lane, London, for the quarter immediately preceding such annual, quarterly, or other general meeting, shall have exceeded the average price of wheat at the same market during those years from which the average amount of the poor's rates was taken upon the passing of the several incorporating acts respectively, to assess the several parishes, hamlets, and places within their respective hundreds, towns, or districts, which now are or usually have been charged to the poor's rates, in such respective sums of money as the said directors and acting guardians, or such other persons as aforesaid, shall think necessary for defraying the expenses attending the support and maintenance of the poor for the current quarter, and for paying the interest of the money borrowed and due by virtue of the said respective acts, and of any debts which may have been incurred since the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five, in the maintenance of the poor, and for other the purposes of the said acts, notwithstanding such sums of money so to be assessed should exceed the amount of the assessments limited by such respective acts of parliament to be assessed on the respective parishes, hamlets, and places within such incorporated hundreds, towns, or districts, in any one year: provided always, that the sums to be assessed, and the assessments to be made by virtue of this act, in each respective incorporated hundred, town, or district, shall be assessed, made, collected, and paid in the same manner, and subject to the same restrictions, regulations, limitations, and powers of appeal, and with the like powers and remedies for compelling payment thereof, as the sums to be assessed, and the assessments to be made, by virtue of the several incorporating acts, are by those respective acts directed to be assessed, collected, and made, within the several hundreds, towns, and districts respectively incorporated by those acts: provided also, that the sums to be assessed by virtue of this act, upon any parish, hamlet, or place, shall be in the same rates and proportions as the assessments which have hitherto been made and levied by virtue of the said act or acts incorporating the several hundreds, towns, or districts in which such parishes, hamlets, or places are respectively situated: and provided also, that, from and after the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, the sums to be assessed, by virtue of this act, on any parish, hamlet, or place, shall never exceed, in any one year, the amount of double the sum at present raised by virtue of any incorporating act now existing.”

The 52 Geo. III. c. 73, enacts “that so much of 36 Geo. III. c. 10, as limits or provides, that from and after the first day of January one thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight, the sums to be assessed by virtue thereof in any parish, hamlet, or place, shall never exceed, in any one year, double the sum then raised by virtue of any incorporating act then existing, shall be and is hereby repealed.”

(a) On principle, it would seem, that every person ought to be compelled to contribute to the relief of the poor, in proportion to his actual annual income or profits, and not merely in respect of his visible tangible property or expenditure; and the principle of the income tax might well be extended to the relief of the poor; whereas a person whose property is in the funds, or in a mine, may, if he be content to reside in a lodging, wholly avoid paying any sum towards the relief of the poor. (See Burroughs’ argument in Rex v. Andover, Cowp. 550, post, 114, 115.) The poor rate is a personal charge and not a charge merely upon the land, (Theed v. Starkie, 8 Mod. 314; Case v. Stephens, Fitzg. 207; and see Rex v. Butler, Caldecot, 93.)

The liability to the poor rate is divisible into two principal heads; first, that of inhabitancy, as connected with certain property; second, that of the occupation of property, independently of the question of inhabitancy. The cases upon the first of these heads may be subdivided into those which relate to the character of inhabitancy, and those which relate to property; in respect of which, inhabitants, as such, may be chargeable. See a long note in Evans’s Coll. Stat. 8th vol. 21. The word inhabitant means a person resident permanently and sleeping in the parish. (Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East, 330.) And therefore a person who is lessee of a stall in a market, and comes there on market-days to sell his wares, is not rateable (Holledge’s Case, 1 Bott, 123), unless also resident in the parish. And he must have local visible property within the parish; and he shall not be rated in that parish by reason of any property he may have out of it. (Sir Anthony Earby’s Case, 1 Bott, 124.)

He is not rateable by reason of money he has out at interest, or in the public funds (Rex v. White and others, 4 T. R. 771; 1 Bott, 89, 202; Rex v. St. John’s Maddermarket, 6 East, 182; 1 Bott, 239); or by reason of his salary as clerk, or pay as an officer in the navy, &c. (Rex v. Shalfleet, 4 Burr. 2011; 1 Bott, 133; Rex v. White and others, supra); or in respect of the profits of his profes-

The statute gives a power "to rate in such a sum as they shall think fit." This does not import that they have a power to rate arbitrarily, but to rate the occupier according to the value of his occupation, and inhabitant according to his visible personal property. Tindal, C. J. 9 Bing. 595.

The words "inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other," include all those who possess property not coming within the several species of it described in the next following part of the same clause of the act. (a) sion of attorney (Rex v. Startifant, 7 T. R. 60; 1 Bott, 217); nor for household furniture merely. (Rex v. White, 4 T. R. 771.)

By special custom, however, every inhabitant in a parish may be rated in respect of his supposed general ability to contribute to the relief of the poor, and without reference to any property whether in or out of the parish (Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 Barn. & Cress. 318; 3 Dowl. & Ryl. 549); and the editor submits that this was the intention of the legislature, see post, 115.

And he may by custom be rateable for his stock in trade within the parish, of which he makes a profit (per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Rex v. Macdonald, 12 East, 324; Bott, cont. 75), whether there be a custom in the parish to that effect (Rex v. Hill, Cowp. 613) or not. (Rex v. Ambleside, 16 East, 380; see also Rex v. Andover, Cowp. 550; 1 Bott, 153; Rex v. Whitney, 5 Burr. 2634; 1 Bott, 141; Rex v. Ringwood, Cowp. 326; 1 Bott, 148; Rex v. Dursley, 6 T. R. 513; 1 Bott, 210, 290; Rex v. Sherborne, 8 East, 537; Bott, cont. 67.) But a farmer is not liable to be rated by reason of his farming stock, because the annual profits of the land being rated, the profits of the stock have already been assessed in those of the land. (Reg. v. Barking, 2 Ld. Raym. 1280; 1 Nolan, 84, 204; 1 Bott, 126.) So a shipowner is liable to be rated for a ship of which he makes profit, if its principal port be within the parish, (Rex v. Jones, 8 East, 451. See Rex v. Liverpool, 8 East, 455, n.; Rex v. Collison, 8 East, 455, n.,) whether such ship be within the parish at the time of making the rate (Rex v. Howard, 8 East, 455, n.) or not. (Rex v. Shepherd, 1 B. & Ald. 109.)

A rate on a foreign ambassador cannot be levied by distress, 7 Anne, c. 12; nor can any of his suit be rated, if they be clearly within the meaning of the stat. 7 Anne, c. 12. (But see Novello v. Toogood, 2 D. & R. 833; 1 B. & C. 554, S.C.)

Every occupier, &c. The tenant, and not the landlord, is the occupier within the meaning of the statute. (Rex v. Welbank, 4 M. & Sel. 229; Rex v. Parrott and others, 5 T. R. 593; 1 Bott, 202. Case v. Stephens, Fitzg. 207.) But where the owner occupies by his servants, or agent, he is rateable (Rex v. St. Mary, Durham, 4 T. R. 477; 1 Bott, 120; Rex v. Aberystwith, 10 East, 354), but a person occupying merely as servant, is not to be rated. (Rex v. Terrott, 3 East, 506; 1 Bott, 230; Rex v. Woodward, 5 T. R. 79; 1 Bott, 205.) Corporations may be rated whether they occupy by themselves or servants. (Rex v. Gardner, 1 Bott, 143; Rex v. Mayor, &c. of Sudbury, 2 D. & R. 651; 1 B. & C. 389, S.C.)

It must be a beneficial occupancy. (See Rex v. Sculcoates, 12 East, 40; Bott, cont. 72; Rex v. Salter's-Load Sluice, 4 T. R. 730; 1 Bott, 201.) Thus the person who erects, or the trustees of, an hospital, almshouse, or other charitable institution, are not rateable for it (Rex v. St. Bartholomew's, 4 Burr. 2435; 1 Bott, 139; Rex v. Waldo, Cald. 358; 1 Bott, 166; St. Luke's Hospital Case, 2 Burr. 1053; 1 Bott, 132), nor are the persons who reside in it merely as servants. (See Rex v. Woodward, 5 T. R. 79; 1 Bott, 205; Rex v. Terrott, 3 East, 506; 1 Bott, 230.) But an officer of such an institution is rateable, by reason of rooms appropriated separately to his own use. (Ayre v. Smallpiece, 1 Bott, 131; Rex v. Catt, 6 T. R. 332; 1 Bott, 213; and see — v. Armstrong, 2 Stark. 543.) And persons occupying it, if their occupation be beneficial (Rex v. Munday, 1 East, 584; 1 Bott, 223); and lands given to such an institution, and from which it derives a profit, are rateable. (1 Bott, 125; 2 Salk. 527; and see 48 Geo. III. c. 96, s. 26.) The trustees of a chapel or meeting-house are not rateable, if no pecuniary advantage be made therefrom (Rex v. Woodward, 5 T. R. 79; 1 Bott, 205); but if a pecuniary advantage be made by letting out the pews (Robson v. Hyde, Cald. 310; 1 Bott, 164), although it be expended in paying the clergyman's salary, rent, &c. (Rex v. Agar, 14 East, 256; Bott, cont. 88), it is liable to be rated.

Pipes in the ground for the conveyance of gas to light a town, is a rateable occupation of land within this act, and the occupiers are rateable to the extent of the increased value of the land so used. (Rex v. Brighton Gas Co., 8 D. & R. 308; 5 B. & C. 466, S.C. Post, 137.)

5. On whom the Rate to be made.

WHO ARE RATEABLE AS INHABITANTS.

Inhabitant not to be rated for estate in another parish. Lodger or stall-keeper as regards church rates.

"Inhabitant" in this statute means "resiant."

Sir Anthony Earby's case, 2 Bulstr. 354. No inhabitant is to be taxed by a parish in regard of any estate he hath elsewhere, but only in regard of the visible estate he hath in the town where he doth dwell.

Holledge's case, 2 Roll. Rep. 238. The lessee of a stall in a market town, who came there weekly to the market to sell his wares, was not rateable to the repairs of the church; and that if a man take up his lodging for a week in a town, he shall not be so charged or to such like taxes.

Rex v. The Inhabitants of North Curry, 4 Barn. & Cres. 953; 7 D. & R. 424. The appellants were partners in trade, all residing in the parish of Langport, and carried on a considerable branch of their business in coals, culm, deals, and salt, in North Curry, by means of a foreman and other servants. The foreman and his family resided there in a house on part of the premises on which the trade was carried on, belonging to the appellants, for which they were assessed, as proprietors and occupiers, in the rate appealed against, at 1*l.* 2*s.*, and they were also assessed for stock in trade 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Neither of the appellants ever slept in the parish of North Curry, but they came there for the purpose of inspecting the foreman's accounts, and to see how the business was going on. On such occasions the acting partner used a small parlour in the foreman's house as a counting-room, which the foreman, in the absence of the appellants, used when he had company. There were no sleeping conveniences kept for the appellants in the foreman's house, nor in any other part of the parish. The stock was received and sold by the foreman on the premises, and on every Friday the proceeds, with the accounts of the week, were sent to the partners at Langport, and returned, after inspection by them, to the foreman on the succeeding Monday. Accounts were also made up monthly, and sent to the partners for their inspection. The amount of the rate was one ground of appeal stated in the notice; but on the hearing of the appeal, that was abandoned, and the ground stated and relied upon was, that the appellants were not liable to be rated for their stock in trade, they not being inhabitants of the parish of North Curry, nor otherwise liable for the same. The assessment on the wharfs, houses, &c. was submitted to without objection. Bayley, J. "If the question raised in this case were res integra, the argument addressed to us would deserve great consideration. But there have been cases in which it has been held that a party (not being a parson or vicar,) to be rateable to the relief of the poor must either be an inhabitant or occupier of lands within the parish; and I need hardly observe, that in this branch of the law certainty is very desirable. If the appellants in this case were liable to be rated, it must be because they come within the description of the persons upon whom the liability is imposed by the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. It has been insisted, that Stuckey and his partners are persons liable to be rated either as inhabitants or as persons coming within the meaning of the parson and vicar of the parish, whether they reside in the parish or not, are liable to be rated by reason of their tithes in the parish (Rex v. Turner, 1 Stra. 77; 1 Bott, 126), although they let the tithes to their parishioners respectively (16 Vin. Abr. 427); they are liable also with respect to oblations and other offerings (per Lord Kenyon, C. J., in Rex v. Carlyon, 3 T. R. 385; 1 Bott, 186); they are liable also to be rated for other property in their possession or occupation, in precisely the same manner as other persons. But if they by deed let the tithes to a tithe farmer, the farmer only shall be rated for them. (Rex v.

By an inclosure act it was provided that a certain corn rent, "free from all taxes and deductions whatsoever, except land tax," should be issuing out of the lands to be inclosed, and other lands in the parish, and to be paid to the rector, in lieu of all great and small tithes, &c.; and it was held that this corn rent was not liable to be assessed to the relief of the poor. (Mitchell v. Fordham, 6 B. & C. 274; 9 D. & R. 335.) words 'and other.' In the numerous cases, however, which have come before the courts on the rateability of tolls, it has never been suggested that persons not coming within the description of the words 'inhabitants or occupiers' were liable to be rated under the words 'and other.' In Rex v. Nicholson, (12 East, 342,) Lord Ellenborough, after stating the words of the act, says 'that tolls do not come within any one description of occupancy described by the statute, they are not lands nor houses, &c. If, therefore, the owner be taxable for them at all, it must be as an inhabitant of the parish out of which they arise.' Lord Ellenborough, therefore, must have considered the words 'and other,' not to have carried the description of the persons liable to be rated further than the word 'inhabitants' did, assuming that to be the true construction of the statute; then the question in this case is, whether Stuckey and his partners were inhabitants within the meaning of the statute. That word may have a very extensive sense, so as to include in it all persons possessed of property in the place. Such a construction has been put upon that word in the statute of bridges, the riot act, and the black act; but in those statutes the word 'inhabitants' was the only word used as descriptive of the persons liable to be charged. From the nature of the subject-matter to which it was applied, it was considered as necessarily including in it all persons having property in the place to be taxed. It has been held, accordingly, that a person occupying land in a parish, but living out of it, is compellable to receive a parish apprentice, although the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, says that none but inhabitants and occupiers shall be bound to receive the same. But in this statute several words are used as description of the persons to be taxed, viz. 'every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and every occupier of lands.' In Rex v. Nicholson, (12 East, 342,) the court were of opinion that the word 'inhabitant' was not to be taken in the extensive sense which had been applied to it in the construction of the statute of bridges, but in a confined sense, as descriptive only of a resident within the parish." Le Blanc, J. said, "That the word 'inhabitant' was used as well as occupiers, and that he considered that by the former was meant a person who was resident in the place, for one might occupy without being resident, and the statute meant to include both. It is also stated in Nolan's Poor Laws, 3d edit. 72, that personal property cannot be rated unless the proprietor reside in the parish. Then the question is, what is the meaning of the word 'resides?' I take it that that word, where there is nothing to show that it is used in a more extensive sense, denotes the place where an individual eats, drinks, and sleeps, or where his family or his servants eat, drink, and sleep; and if that be so, there is no ground for saying that Stuckey or his partners had a residence in the place in question. I think that according to the former decisions, the word 'inhabitants' in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, must be confined to residents; and therefore, inasmuch as the appellants were not residents within the parish, they were not liable to be rated in respect of their personal property." Holroyd, J. "It seems to me, that consistently with the construction put upon the words of the statute of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, in several cases we must hold that the appellants in the court below were not rateable. If that construction had not already been put upon the statute, the argument in favor of the rate would be entitled to attention; but without overturning the cases where it has been held that a non-resident proprietor of tolls is not rateable, we cannot hold that the parties mentioned in this case are rateable either as coming within the word 'inhabitants' or the words 'and other.' It seems to me that the latter words must mean 'other inhabitants.' The legislature never could intend to rate persons who were neither inhabitants nor occupiers of property within the parish; and unless inhabitants means inhabitant resident, the subsequent word 'occupier' will have no effect whatever. On that ground, in Rex v. Nicholson, it was held that a party was not liable to be rated for tolls unless he was an inhabitant resident. In the course of the argument, Lord Ellenborough says, 'The great difficulty is to bring the case within the words of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, conferring the authority. The party rated must be either an inhabitant of the parish, or he must be an occupier of one or other of the descriptions of property mentioned in the statute.'

5. On whom the Rate to be made.

5. On whom the Rate to be made.

And in another place he asks 'whether the counsel were aware of any case where the word inhabitant in the statute of Elizabeth had been held to mean any other than resident?' And afterwards in giving judgment, Lord Ellenborough says expressly that there is no case in which the word 'inhabitant' in that statute has been held to mean any other than a resident within the parish. Le Blanc, J. also seems to have considered it clearly necessary that a party must be either a resident in the place, or an occupier of real property, in order to make him rateable; and Bayley, J. says, 'In a statute which mentions inhabitant as well as occupier, inhabitant must meant resident, otherwise it would mean the same as occupier.' In Williams v. Jones, (12 East, 346,) it was held, on the same grounds, that a non-resident proprietor was not rateable for tolls of a ferry. The construction which it is contended ought to be put upon the words 'and other,' would have applied to those cases as well as to this; and if that be the right construction, these cases have been improperly decided. I think that according to the construction already put upon this statute, the words 'and other' in this clause of the statute must mean 'and other inhabitants,' and that being so, then, for the reasons already given, Stuckey and his partners were not rateable." Order of sessions confirmed.

See ante, 20, 21, Rex v. Poynder, and Rex v. Adlard, as to the meaning of the word "inhabitant," when a personal trust and when a pecuniary charge is intended.

Inhabitants may be rateable in respect of their local visible personal property in the parish, or apparent means, even to be collected from the ordinary scale of expenditure, as for their stock in trade and ships, but not for salaries, household furniture, money, or profits of personal labour. Nor in general is the former rated; and it is only by custom or usage that a rate in respect of personal property is in general made. As to custom or usage, see Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 Bar. & Cres. 318; 3 Dow. & Ry. 549, S. C.

The King v. Fryer, 4 B. & C. 961; 7 D. & R. 426. An appeal by W. Fryer, J. Gosse, and R. Pack, against a rate made for the parish of St. James, Poole, whereby they were assessed for certain ships, for exports and imports, and cooper's stock. Fryer, Gosse, and Pack were partners as merchants, and were interested in equal thirds in the partnership stock and effects, and the vessels belonging thereto. The partnership business was carried on at Poole and Newfoundland. At Poole they had a counting-house and store-houses, and a clerk used the counting-house and kept the key, but did not sleep there. Fryer also carried on the business of a banker, with third persons, in the parish of Winborne Minster, six miles from Poole, and his dwelling-house was at Winborne. The banking partnership had also a counting-house and some other rooms and a stable in Poole, and a clerk of the banking partnership lived on those premises. The furniture in the rooms belonged to him, but the furniture in the counting-house belonged to the banking firm. None of the partners in the banking firm resided in Poole. Pack resided at Newfoundland. The rate was made upon the whole partnership interest in the exports and imports, in the cooper's stock, and in each of the ships, and not upon the share of Gosse only. Scarlett said, that the rate being upon the partners in respect of personal property, they were rateable only as inhabitants, and, according to the authorities, it was impossible to contend that two of them were inhabitants, inasmuch as they were not resident within the parish. He said he would not therefore argue the case, and the rate was sent back to be amended, by striking out the names of the appellants.

Rex v. Gosse, 9 D. & R. 759; 7 B. & C. 60. Where only one of several partners was resident in a parish, held that he could not be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of more than his own share of the partnership personal property. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It is clear that the rate must be amended. By 43 Eliz. c. 2, inhabitants are to be rated according to their ability. If this rate were to stand, Gosse would be rated according to the ability of himself and others. It is said that there will be difficulty in ascertaining the share to which any partner may be entitled: but where that is the case, the rate may easily be imposed in respect of the whole, and the party may come and dis-

Personal estate.

Whatever difficulties in practice may attend a rating of inhabitants in respect of their personal estate, it is now settled that an inhabitant is rateable for his (a) stock in trade, of which he makes a profit within the parish, whether there be a custom in the parish to that effect or not; and the principle of some of the following cases is therefore no longer law.

Q. v. Barking, 2 Ld. Raym. 1280. Upon quashing several orders made relating to the poor rates, the matter in difference was referred by K. B. to Lord C. J. Holt; but the parties, not satisfied with his opinion, signified their consent in writing to submit this question to the opinion of the judges of the K. B. : to wit, whether a farmer for his stock shall not be chargeable and taxable to the poor rate, as well as a tradesman for his stock in trade? And the other three judges were of opinion that a farmer for his stock is not taxable, contrary to the opinion of Holt, C. J. Whereupon the following rule of court was made: "Upon mature deliberation, it is considered by the court that a farmer is not taxable to the poor rate for his stock; and that a tradesman is taxable for his stock in trade." [Or, as it is expressed in the record, Quod firmarius, anglicè, a farmer, non erit onerabilis et taxabilis ad ratus pauperum pro pecuniis, anglicè, stock; et quod artifex, anglicè, a tradesman, est onerabilis et taxabilis pro pecuniis, anglicè, stock, in arte, anglicè, trade.

A farmer is not rateable for his stock.

The reason why a farmer is not liable to be rated by reason of his farming stock is, that the annual profits of the land being rated, the profits of the stock have already been assessed in those of the land.

Rex v. Witney, 5 Burr. 2634. Upon an appeal against a rate, many manufacturers and traders within the parish of Witney, who had been assessed to the land-tax for their stock in trade, had never been charged to the poor rate for such stock. In support of the rate, Q. v. Barking, (supra), was cited. But the court were not satisfied with the authority of that case. Lord Mansfield, C. J., expressly called it a strange case. They observed, that the opinion of three of the judges was only said to be that a farmer for his stock was not taxable, contrary to the opinion of Holt, C. J. But it doth not appear that a question was directly put to them, whether a tradesman was taxable to the poor for his stock in trade? The court, however, gave no explicit opinion upon the merits of the present case, though they seemed very far from allowing that a tradesman is rateable to the poor for his stock in trade. But here, the order of sessions is clearly wrong upon the face of it; because they ought not to have quashed the whole rate, but to have added those persons and that property which it was thought were illegally omitted. Order quashed.

Stock in trade of tradesmen, &c. rateable.

Rex v. Ringwood, Cowp. 326. The sessions quashed a rate, and stated that three persons were possessed as co-partners of stock in the trade of brewers and maltsters, in the parish, to the value of 4000*l.*, for no part of which was any of them assessed; that the partners were inhabitants of the parish. It did not appear that stock in trade had ever before been rated in this parish, therefore they adjudged the rate to be quashed. Lord Mansfield said, "I have no doubt what is to be done with it, as the authority of Rex v. Witney (supra), is precisely in point. I think the justices would not have done very wrong, if they had acquiesced in the practice which has obtained ever since the statute of 43 Eliz., of not rating this species of property. The Rex v. Witney was determined upon this single ground, that the justices in session should not have quashed the whole rate, but should have amended it by inserting the particular persons and that property which was omitted, and which they thought rateable. So here, the justices at sessions should have amended the rate, if they thought this property rateable; and then on attempting to do it, they would have discovered the wisdom of conforming to the practice, which they expressly state in the case, of not rating it. If they had tried to amend it, how would they have rated this stock? Are the hops, and the malt, and the boiler, to be rated at so much for each? Or is the trader to be rated for the gross sum which his whole stock would sell for? If the justices had considered, they would have found out the sense of not rating it at all; especially when it appears that mankind have, as it were, with one universal consent, refrained from rating it; the difficulties attending it are too great, and so the justices would have found them." Then, after adverting to some of the cases, his lordship added, "They talk of visible property; what is visible property? I do not know what is meant by it. If any visible thing should be determined to come under that description, in that case a lease for years, a watch in a man's pocket, would be rateable. Visible property is something local in the place where a man inhabits; but that does not decide what a man's personal property is: consider how many tradesmen depend upon ostensible property only." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Rodd, Cald. 147; 1 Bott, 161. Rodd was rated in Bridgewater four shillings in respect of his stock in trade, above what he was charged for his house and shops, and other real property. The sessions confirmed the rate, and stated specially, That within the said borough it had been usual ever since the existence of rates for the relief of the poor to assess the inhabitants of the said borough for and in respect of their personal property or stock in trade; and amongst them, such as have been of the same trade and of similar circumstances with the appellant. And it was admitted that it was not possible to distinguish this from Rex v. Hill, (post, 115.) By the court: rate affirmed.

Personal property is rateable, and the bare possession of it is evidence from which the justices may draw the conclusion, that the possessor is rateable.

Rex v. Dursley, 6 T. R. 53. J. Harris appealed against a rate for the parish of Dursley, upon the ground that Messrs. Tippots were not rated for their goods, stock in trade, and personal effects; and the court being of opinion that stock in trade and personal property ought to have been rated quashed the rate. The case stated that "it was not proved that any profit was made from the stock, or that it belonged to them, except from its being in their possession." By Lord Kenyon, C. J. "There is no doubt but that personal property is rateable; but the difficulty in this case is to know for what these persons should have been rated. They appeared, indeed, in the possession of stock in trade, some to the amount of 100*l.*, others 50*l.*, but the sessions have not stated whether or not this property belonged to the several persons whom the appellant wished to include in the rate, or, if it did, whether or not it produced profit, or was not liable to incumbrances equal to the value of the property itself. The bare possession of personal property, is, to be sure, evidence from which the justices may draw the conclusion that the possessor should be rated; but here the justices, after stating the possession, have raised a doubt respecting other facts, which they should have enquired into and determined upon. They have raised a mist which we cannot dispel. The facts are not sufficiently disclosed to enable us to draw the conclusion that these persons ought to be rated. Order of sessions quashed.

The sessions must find that the stock in trade is not only visible property, but productive.

Rex v. Sir A. Macdonald, 12 East, 324. One ground of appeal was, that certain stock in trade was not rated. And the case found, as to this point, that the justices were not satisfied from the evidence that there was any sum of surplus by which they could amend the rate. Lord Ellenborough, "As to the omission of rating stock in trade. In order to include particular individuals in the rate, a case must be made out in evidence against those individuals; but the justices have found only certain inhabitants were possessed at the time of visible stocks in trade within the township, and were personally liable to be assessed to the poor's rate in respect thereof, if by law such property be liable to be rated. Now visible property in the place, such as stock in trade, merely as being visible is not liable to be rated; but to make it rateable, it must be also productive: but the parties have found that it was not productive, or, what is the same in effect, that it was not proved to be so to their satisfaction. That finding concludes the question.

If personal estate be rateable, it must be local visible property within the parish.

Rex v. The Overseers of Andover, Cowp. 550. The case was, the overseers made a new rate, in which they omitted to rate tradesmen for their stock which had been formerly rated in that parish. Upon which the other inhabitants of the parish appealed to the sessions. The sessions adjudged, "that Mr. J. Wakefield was a proprietor of stock in trade as draper in the parish of Andover, to the amount of 300*l.*, and that the profits of that trade are 15*l.* a-year; and that he ought to be rated, in respect of such stock and profits, 7*l.* each rate." And there was the like adjudication as to other tradesmen. And the court ordered the rate to be amended, by putting into it a rate on the said several tradesmen in respect of such their stock and profits. It was objected, that this order on the face of it was bad, as it did not appear that the persons whose names were added had notice of the appeal. The court held this to be a fatal objection; and therefore the order of sessions was quashed. Lord Mansfield, C. J., said "It is a very different question, whether personal estate is to be rated to the extent contended for, (a) or not to be rated at all. It would make the poor laws very oppressive, if a man were to be taxed to the extent of his whole personal estate and income. In that case every man who has money in the funds would be liable; lawyers for their fees, soldiers for their pay and the like. But where men are occupiers of houses, and have stock in trade, whether such stock in trade may be taken into consideration, is a very different question. Some personal estates may be rateable. But it must be local visible property within the parish. It would be material to state what has been the custom of rating. If the usage should be to take in stock in trade, there would be a very good right to support it. Let them, therefore, try it on the special circumstances of the case." Mr. J. Aston said, that if upon the general question it should turn out to be the law that personal property is rateable, it must be then rated, though it was never rated before.

Rex v. Hill, Cowp. 613. The appellant Hill was a clothier, and an inhabitant of the parish of Bradford. He was charged to the poor rate in respect of his stock in trade in the parish. The sessions confirmed the rate. Lord Mansfield, C. J. asked, "What usage heretofore had been in this place with respect to rating stock in trade?" Unto which it was answered, that the usage was waived, and that the counsel at the sessions had agreed to bring the general question before the court. Lord Mansfield said, they had no right to do so, and thought it ought to be sent back to the sessions to state the usage. Afterwards, the case being sent back, and the sessions returning, that it had been the usage heretofore in the parish of Bradford to rate persons for their stock in trade, the court ordered the rate to stand.

Rex v. Darlington, 6 T. R. 468. G. Allan appealed because seven persons were not rated for their stock in trade. The sessions quashed the rate, and stated, that it did not appear whether stock in trade had or had not been rated in D. prior to 1745; from 1746 to 1752, and again from 1788 to 1794 it had been rated; in August, 1794, a rate was made, which continued in force the remainder of the year, which was not appealed against, in which the above seven persons were rated for their stock in trade as yielding certain profits (stating them), and which the appellants contended was an admission that to that time those seven persons possessed stock in trade producing the profits there stated. This rate was paid by some of the traders, but not by others; to enforce payment from whom no step had been taken. The appellants then proved that those seven persons, when the rate was made in January, 1795, kept shops in Darlington, and that each possessed a visible stock in trade there, and appeared to carry on business to the same extent as in 1794. The circumstances of the ability of those seven persons, or that they respectively made profit of their stock in trade, or that it was exclusive of their debts, or that it was a clear residue after debts paid, did not appear otherwise than as above stated. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The case of Rex v. Dursley (ante, 114,) (b) has been particularly pressed upon us as a decision of our own; but the present case is clearly distinguishable from that. There the sessions had forbore to draw any conclusion from the facts proved before them, and left a mass of evidence for our consideration, but so incomplete, that we could not say upon the facts stated

The sessions cannot add to a rate the names of those who have not notice of the appeal, or do not litigate the question at the sessions.

Usage.

Stock in trade may be rated.

The Court will not alter the conclusion drawn by the sessions from the evidence stated.

(a) Mr. Burrough contended that every inhabitant was rateable according to his actual ability, and in a most learned and elaborate argument reviewed the whole common and statute law on the subject of the early relief of the poor.

whether the parties ought or ought not to have been rated; whereas here the justices have drawn the conclusion. They have indeed added, that the stock was not productive 'otherwise than as thereinbefore stated.' What is stated before is, that these persons had large visible stock in trade; that they were rated in the preceding year for that stock; that they submitted to the rate—for whether paid or not at the time is immaterial, no appeal having been made against the rate. Then, these circumstances not having been altered, the question, whether all this was not prima facie evidence for the justices to proceed upon,—and whether, as this evidence was not opposed by evidence on the other side, it was not sufficient to enable them to draw the conclusion which they have drawn. Undoubtedly it was strong prima facie evidence against the persons rated; and they should have discharged themselves in such a case by evidence. I feel indeed the severity of making persons in trade disclose their circumstances. But this is not a singular case: persons appointed sheriffs in some corporations being sometimes obliged to disclose their situations in order to excuse themselves from serving the office. In this case there was prima facie evidence before the justices in support of the rate. It was competent to them to decide on the weight of the evidence; they have decided, and we cannot now say that the conclusion they drew was certainly wrong. With regard to the other question, this was a case in which the sessions could not alter the rate, because, by the addition of these seven persons, the proportion of every other person would have been altered, therefore they were bound to quash the rate." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

But a rate may now be amended, see 41 G. III. c. 23, post.

Goods sent to be worked are not stock of workmen.

Rex v. Sherborne, 8 East, 537. The appellants were silk throwsters, occupying certain buildings in Sherborne, in which persons were employed by them to clean, spin, and throw silk sent them in a raw state from London, for that purpose. The silk, after being so improved, was sent back, and they were paid for the process. The rate was imposed in respect of the profits derived from the silk as stock. But the Court decided at once that it was impossible "to call the silk the stock in trade of the appellants, who were employed to work it up. It was nothing like stock in the sense in which it had always been understood."

On an appeal against a rate, on the ground that A. is not rated for his stock in trade, the sessions ought to amend the rate, and not quash it. Stock in trade is rateable to the poor, notwithstanding it has never been rated, unless there be some circumstances to take it out of the general rule.

Rex v. Ambleside, 16 East, 380. Appeal against a poor rate, because W. W., and other persons named in the rate, were not assessed in respect of their stock in trade. The rate was made in respect of real property only, and no stock in trade or other personal property was included in it. The sessions quashed the rate. The question intended to be submitted was, whether, if stock in trade produce a profit, the usage can vary its rateability?—Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "Is there not another question, whether the rate ought not to have been amended, instead of being quashed? As to the rateability of stock in trade, that has been settled in Rex v. Darlington, 6 T. R. 468 (ante, 115), if it be ascertained to be profitable. It is then an objection applicable to one person, and the justices should have amended the rate, and not quashed it. The 41 Geo. III., U. K. c. 23 (post), was passed for the very purpose of enabling them so to do, in order to prevent the inconvenience of the parish being without funds for the maintenance of its poor in the mean time. We say, therefore, that this rate was not properly quashed, but ought to have been amended. If there are any circumstances to take it out of the general rule, as stated in Rex v. Darlington, they should be stated: if there are none such, the property is rateable. Rex v. White, 4 T. R. 774 (infra), is also to the same effect." Order of sessions quashed.

Ships are stock in trade at their port.

A ship is stock in trade at her principal port (Rex v. Jones, 8 East, 451; Rex v. Liverpool, 8 East, 455; Rex v. Collinson, ibid.), whether such ship be within the parish at the time of making the rate or not. (Rex v. Howard, 8 East, 455; Rex v. Shepherd, 1 B. & A. 109.) See post, "Where property rateable."

An inhabitant is not rateable for the profits of a ship, unless the home of the ship is within the parish. (Rex v. Shepherd, post, "Where property to be rated.")

Stock vested in the public funds not rateable.

Rex v. St. John's, Maddermarket, Norwich, 6 East, 182. The rate was made by virtue of a local statute (10 Anne, c. 6), which enabled the overseers, &c. "to assess a certain sum upon the inhabitants, &c., and on all persons having and using stocks and personal estates in the said parish, or having money out at interest. Money out at interest, as well without as within the said city and county of Norwich, of the respective inhabitants within the same, had been constantly assessed to the poor's rates. The appellant was possessed of money vested in the public funds, or on government security, and then standing in her name in the books of the governor and company of the Bank of England in the 5 per cent. bank annuities. And the question was as to the rateability of this stock. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "Money out at interest, however the lender may stipulate not to call for the principal for a given period, is still a loan of money, with forbearance for a certain time. It implies that the principal is to be repaid at some time or other, when the lender will be entitled to receive it as money, and not a substitute for the principal in a mere annuity. But with respect to stock, the payment of the principal can never be compelled. All that the government engage for is a perpetual annuity, redeemable at their own will and pleasure. Then can we say that stock is 'money out at interest?' Money out at interest must mean that which is capable of being recalled at some time or other; money which may or may not be out at interest, and is only rateable when so used. Is that at all applicable to the funds, where the principal is sunk in an annuity, and cannot be recalled, though in their stock parliament have reserved a power of redemption? If this then be not rateable under the local act, neither is it so under the 43 Eliz. c. 2, (the only other statute by which it could be rateable), not being local visible property within the parish. It is therefore not rateable under either statute." Lawrence, J., "If ability alone were the criterion of rating, all persons would be rateable in respect of their property, whether locally and visibly situated within the parish or not; but it has been determined again and again, that a person can only be rated for local visible property within the parish. The appellant was therefore not rateable under the general law; and for the reasons stated by my brothers, I am of opinion that she was not rateable for her stock as for money out at interest."

Rex v. Shalfleet; Sherrington's case, 4 Burr. 2011. The appellant inhabited a tenement at S. for superintending the saltworks there, for which he received a salary of 40*l.* per ann. from the government, and was rated for this salary. And Lord Mansfield, C. J. said, "We are all of opinion that this is not such a species of property as can be rated to the relief of the poor, as personal estate within the parish." (See Rex v. White, 4 T. R. 771, ante, 116.)

In Rex v. Startifant, 7 T. R. 60, the defendant was assessed in respect of his profits and fees of his profession as an attorney, according to the same usage which had prevailed since 1732. And the Court, without hearing any argument, said that there was no doubt in the case, and quashed the rate. So Governor of Lead Co. v. Richardson (post). The fees of a physician or lawyer cannot be rated.

Inhabitant not rateable for personal labour, nor for salaries.

Nor for his profits as an attorney.

Rex v. White, 4 T. R. 771. S. White was rated in 13,500*l.* for his personal property, consisting of ships employed in the Newfoundland trade from Poole, and monies vested on real securities on lands lying out of the parish. A. White was assessed for her personal property within the parish in 1000*l.*, such personal property consisting of principal money to that amount. J. Lander was rated for his personal property in 200*l.*: he was collector of the customs at the port of Poole, and had no personal property except his salary payable as collector. T. Langharne was assessed for his personal property in 100*l.*: he was a captain in his majesty's navy, and had no other personal property but his pay, which was paid to his agent in London: he had household goods and furniture in the parish. W. Corben was rated for his personal property in 100*l.*: he was clerk to a merchant, then an inhabitant of the parish, and had no personal property except his pay as clerk, and which he received in the parish. R. Daw was rated for his personal property in 100*l.*: he was master of a merchant-vessel trading from Poole to other parts, and had no personal property but his pay, which he earned as such master of a vessel, and which he received in the parish. W. Stansmore was rated for his personal property in 300*l.*, such personal property consisting of stock in trade as a shopkeeper. Lord Kenyon, C. J., "This is a question of great difficulty, and of vast importance to the public. The statute of Elizabeth was passed to enforce (what are called) duties of imperfect obligation; for it was a duty, before that statute was made to relieve the poor and necessitous; and the provisions of that act were adapted to the enforcing of those duties in the only way in which they could be enforced, namely, by raising a fund from those persons who are deemed competent to pay it: and in the case in Bulstrode, it was said that the rate should be on persons in respect of visible property locally situated within the parish. Then apply that rule to these cases. First, as to the ships: I think that they are rateable; this parish is their home, and must be so considered for the purposes of the register act. (a) With regard to the money lent on real securities, I think that it cannot be rated, for it is stated that the money was lent by persons out of this parish on landed securities elsewhere: this, therefore, is not personal property in the parish, and I am not prepared to obviate the difficulty of such a person residing in two parishes. In the act of parliament which imposes a tax on horses and servants, the legislature have guarded against this difficulty by directing the person liable to the duties to give an account to the collector of the number for which he pays in any other parish; but there is no such provision for this case. I have doubted a great deal in the course of the argument on the case of the person rated for 1000*l.* in specie, but the inclination of my opinion is, that she is rateable for this, because it is stated to be property within the parish, and it may be productive if the owner choose. For the same reason I think that the household furniture is not rateable, because it produces nothing: the party might as well have been taxed for his clothes: for a house, indeed, the occupier must be taxed, because the legislature have said so in express terms. The case of the stock in trade is admitted to be rateable; but the cases of the salaries have been long at rest, those are not the subject of a rate." Buller, J., "I concur with my lord in all the points except that relative to the 1000*l.*, for which I think the owner is not rateable; the reason for which it was admitted that household furniture is not rateable, namely, because it does not produce any profit, must also govern this: it is stated that the owner has it in hard money, and therefore we must take it, upon this state of the case, that it does not produce profit. In the next place, I am of opinion that money is not rateable within this act of parliament. The legislature could not intend that inquiry should be made as to every guinea which a man has in his pocket. If the rate be confined to visible property yielding profit in the parish, there will be no difficulty in adhering to that rule; but it will be dangerous in the extreme to extend it farther, and to look into every man's bureau to see what money he has there. But at all events I think that this person cannot be rated for the reason first given." Grose, J., "I have no difficulty upon the question respecting the ships; they are rateable, like stock in trade. But the party cannot be rated for the money at interest: and as to the 1000*l.* not at interest, I have had great doubts in my mind. But after consideration, I agree with my brother Buller, that the legislature did not intend to rate money. The act of parliament has enumerated all the different species of property which should be the subject of a rate, but has omitted money. Besides which, considering how much this statute has been at different times discussed, and that it has never been held that money is rateable under it, I am satisfied that this is the true construction of the act; for though, generally speaking, usage contrary to an act of parliament cannot bind us in construing it, the not rating money shows what has been the opinion of the profession upon this subject." Lord Kenyon, C. J., then said, "That he thought there was great weight in the reasons urged by his brethren against rating money; that he had himself expressed great doubts of his own opinion, and that he was therefore glad that that part of the rate would be quashed by the opinion of the Court." And on a subsequent day his lordship mentioned an expression of Yates, J. upon the subject of rating personal property in a case in Hil. 1769, which was not taken notice of by Sir J. Burrow, in his report of it. "If personal property be rateable, it is not to be done at random, and to leave the party rated to get off as he can; but the officer making the rate must be able to support what he has done by evidence; and no personal property can be rated but the clear liquidated surplus after paying all his debts."—The Court ordered the rate to be confirmed as to the ships and stock in trade, and amended as to the other points.

What Personal Property, &c. not rateable.

2. WHO ARE OCCUPIERS.

The occupier intended, is every person occupying that which produces profit, whether to himself or to the person under whom he holds.

Who an occupier.

Jeffrey's case, 5 Co. 66. W. J. had and occupied or received rent for thirty acres of land in H., but was himself an inhabitant of C., in the same county, and never did inhabit in H. He was assessed to the church rate of H. at so much per acre for his land there. And upon application to K. B. for a prohibition to stay proceedings against J. in the spiritual court for payment of the assessment, it was resolved, that although the house he dwelt in was in another parish, yet as he had lands in H. in his proper possession and manurance, he was in law a parishioner of H. That by manuring lands in H. he was by that resident upon it, and was therefore a parishioner of H., as to this purpose. But when there is a farmer of the same lands, the lessor shall not be charged for them in respect of his rent; and see Burn's Eccl. Law, 8th edit. by Tyrwhitt, vol. i. p. 350, n. (9).

Occupiers residing in another parish.

In general the occupier, not the landlord, is to be rated; but in some modern local acts the landlord is made liable, as in the parish of St. Pancras, 59 Geo. III. c. cxxxix. s. 77; and see Rex v. Dyer, 2 Adol. & El. 606; and see Cambridge case, 7 Taunt. 54.

Mode of occupation.

The land may be occupied by means of pipes for gas, water, &c. (Rex v. Brighton Gas Company, post); or by the enjoyment of an exclusive licence in the land (Rex v. Chelsea Water Works Company, and Rex v. Trent and Mersey Company, post); but the owner of a mere easement, as of a right of navigation or ferry, who cannot maintain trespass, is not a rateable occupier (Rex v. Thomas, Rex v. Nicolson, post.) These cases are considered more fully hereafter.

Rex v. Gardner, Cowp. 79. The master and fellows of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, purchased several houses, and pulled them down, and converted part of the ground on which the said houses had stood into an area, and planted the same with trees for ornament. The parish assessed them for the same to the poor rate. The questions were, whether the master and fellows, being a body corporate, were liable to be rated, and whether the ground, as it was in its converted state, could be rated. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question is, whether in law a corporation may be considered as occupiers or inhabitants? By the statute of Eliz. all lands and all real property are rateable to the poor, and must have occupiers and inhabitants, in respect of taxation; therefore, if a man have no tenant, and be seised of lands in fee, he is said to occupy them himself, or by his bailiff or agent. (a) No case hath been instanced to show that a corporation is exempted from this tax; and I can find no authority in law which says they cannot be rated. And the authorities which have been cited tend to prove that corporations are rateable both as inhabitants and as occupiers; if they are liable in respect of the repairs of bridges and of churches, they are equally so by the statute of Elizabeth in respect of the poor. As to the objection, that this area yields no profit, and therefore ought not to be rated, the answer is, that the value is in the judgment of the assessors; and if the college think themselves over-rated, they have their remedy by appeal." Mr. J. Aston, "I have no idea but that the corporation may be occupiers; and as to the remedy of levying a duty upon a corporation, the books all agree that it can be levied, though they differ in the mode. Sheppard, in his Treatise upon Corporations, says, 'If a sum of money be to be levied upon a corporation, it may be levied upon the mayor or chief magistrate, or upon any person being a member of the corporation.' But in the case of the city of London, concerning the duty of water-bailage, (1 Ventr. 351,) it is different, and is thus: 'Note: it was said that for a duty or charge upon a corporation, every particular member thereof is not liable; but process ought to go in their public capacity.' And this is the right law. In the case of Thursfield v. Jones, (Skin. 27,) the corporation were cited, not by their proper names, but in their public capacity; and the court said 'If the company had neither land nor goods, there was no way to make them appear; but if they stood out, they must lie by the heels in their natural capacity.' Therefore the idea that a corporation is not liable to be rated, or amenable by process in respect of a rate, is not well-founded. Besides, by the act of 17 Geo. II. c. 38, the remedy of distress is extended beyond the particular parish into other precincts, and even into other counties. So that their property is answerable, though they cannot personally be punished." The other two justices concurred. (And see Cambridge case, 7 Taunt. 54.)

The master and fellows of a college are rateable as a corporation for what they occupy.

Corporations are rateable.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Cortis v. The Kent Water Works Company case, 7 B. & C. 314. By a local act for the relief of the poor, certain commissioners were enabled to make rates upon all and every person or persons who held, occupied, or possessed land in the parish; it was held that a corporation was liable to be rated, although by a clause, giving an appeal to the quarter sessions to any party aggrieved, such party was bound to enter into a recognizance.

Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 453. It was admitted that a corporate body was rateable.

Rex v. St. Mary the Less, Durham, 4 T. R. 477. Upon an appeal for being rated for the whole instead of a part of a house, the sessions amended the rate, and also stated, that the appellant purchased the premises and repaired them, but neither he nor any other person resided therein, except as hereafter mentioned, but he kept the key. In one of the rooms the appellant kept a lathe for his amusement, and had sometimes a fire in that room, and three chairs and a table; and in another room he kept corn for his horse; and he also occupied the garden, worth 40s. a-year, and the gardener sometimes put his flower-pots, shrubs, &c., and some of his working tools, into another part of the dwelling-house, where other lumber was also put, but no person had ever slept or lodged in the house, nor had any furniture been kept there (except as above). The appellant, out of charity, had permitted a poor man and his wife to live rent free in the kitchen, between which and the rest of the house the door of communication was stopped up. The stable had not been for upwards of two years used for any other purpose than as a dog-kennel. By the court: "As this person occupied the garden and part of the house, his servants other parts, and a poor man another part, but those occupations were not distinct from his own, he ought therefore to be rated for the whole, for it would be attended with great inconvenience to have to inquire into each particular case what rooms of a house the owner occupied before he could be rated." But see Rex v. Morgan, 2 Adol. & El. 618.

In Rex v. Aberystwith, 10 East, 354, the appellant, being surgeon of a militia regiment, was occasionally absent from home, and left an assistant in a part of his house: his wife and daughter also were absent, and the assistant had only the use of the shop, the remainder of the house being completely parted off from it. The garden was taken care of by a person paid by the appellant, and the person with whom the key of the house was left permitted a friend of the appellant's and his servants to lodge there. The house was always ready for the appellant's return. The court decided that such person was rateable for the whole house, for that he must be taken to have been, under these circumstances, the occupier of the whole house.

Rex v. Woodward, 5 T. R. 79. The appellants were rated for a Quaker's meeting-house, the basement story of which is divided into many small rooms,

If the owner of a house occupy a part thereof only, but his servants (a) occupy other parts, and no one reside in the house but a poor person, permitted to do so out of charity, the owner is rateable as occupying the whole.

Assistant occupying shop in the absence of master, makes master rateable for the whole house.

Meeting house of which no profit is made is not rateable.

(a) As to the occupation of a master by his servant, see Rex v. Tynemouth, post; and Rex v. Morgan, 2 Adol. & El. 618.

one of which is occupied by a person called the door-keeper, whose business it is to attend the door when necessary, and keep the meeting-house clean, for which he has a small salary. The remaining apartments are either not occupied, or are appropriated to the use of poor persons maintained by the Quakers. The meeting-house is solely appropriated to religious and charitable purposes. The trustees, the persons rated, do not receive any rent for the same. No pecuniary advantage whatever is made of the meeting-house. The court said it was impossible to support this rate on the trustees, who had no interest in the premises; and that there was no occupier at present, nor any profit made of it.

Robson v. Hyde, Cald. 310; 1 Bott, 181. The person rated was the lessee of a chapel and vestry-room demised to him to be always used as a chapel for the service of the Church of England, and by contract never to be used for any other purpose, but not consecrated. It is, if a profit be made of it by letting out the pews or otherwise, rateable to the poor. But if it were absolutely given to the public, it might be a strong ground for saying that it was not rateable in his hands, at least out of whom his property had passed, and by whom nothing is reserved.

Rex v. Agar, 14 East, 256. In 1804, the appellants purchased a piece of ground, upon which, by voluntary contributions, they erected a chapel. The premises were conveyed to them, upon trust, that they should let the pews in the chapel under such payments as they might think fit, and upon other trusts; the consideration for the purchase of the ground, and the expense of erecting the chapel, were raised partly by voluntary donations and partly by sums borrowed by the appellants. The current expenses in supporting the chapel during the year 1810, were 247*l.* 7*s.*, and the pew rents for that year amounted to 221*l.* 4*s.*, which were applied towards the discharge of the insurance, of the rent and taxes of two houses occupied by the two methodist preachers, of the chapel cleaners, of the salary and board allowed to two methodist preachers, and of the salary for conducting the singing in the chapel; these expenses amounting to 247*l.* 7*s.* Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "The question is, whether the trustees are rateable? In what situation do they stand to the property? In 1804 they purchased the ground on which they afterwards erected the chapel; they are therefore the owners of the property. If they had gratuitously admitted persons into their chapel, and provided preachers for the congregation, without receiving any thing, they would have come within Rex v. Woodward (5 T. R. 79). What similitude then does this bear to Waldo's case (post, 125), who gratuitously devoted his property to the education and maintenance of paupers, but derived no profit to himself? Here profit is made of the property to the full by the trustees. If it were absolutely necessary that all the sums stated in the account of expenses should be expended, it should have been expressly found in the case that they were all necessarily expended in the carrying on the business of the chapel. The trustees may go on increasing their expenditure in this manner as their profits increase. I admit that it is not found that any of the items were fraudulently swelled for the purpose of this question; but it is not enough in these cases to show that the expenses laid out in any particular year absorbed the profits of that year; for the benefit of such expenses may be derived in future years, as is often the case with improvements of farms. If valuable lands in the neighbourhood of a town be covered with buildings in one year, the expenses of that year would probably exceed its profits, but the land would not cease to be valuable and rateable on that account. Whether these which are stated were necessary expenses or not, I

A private building used as a chapel (a) is rateable, if a profit be made of it.

The trustees of a methodist chapel (a) receiving money annually for the rent of the pews, are rateable for the profits made of the building, though in fact they expend the whole of what they receive in making disbursements for repairs, &c., and to attendants in the chapel, and in paying the salaries of the preachers. (b)

(a) Churches and chapels are now exonerated from parochial rates by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 30. See post.

(b) By a decision of Mr. Halls, one of the magistrates of Bow Street office, on the 2d April, 1833, in a case from the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, any member of a dissenting congregation is liable for the parochial rates of the chapel he attends, and his goods may be distrained for the same. In the case here referred to, the party summoned was not a trustee, nor had he any right or title to the chapel property whatever.

2. Who are Occupiers.

cannot take upon me to say from the case, but it should at least have been found that they were all necessary, to produce the rent of the rent received. This is not like the cases where persons have been held not to be rateable for property, as not being in the occupation of it; for these appellants are the original proprietors of the land on which they have erected a chapel by voluntary subscription, under no restriction as to the profits to be derived from it, and in the actual receipt of rents, which they have applied in manner stated." Grose, J. "The first question is, whether there is any thing rateable in this case? and here is clearly rateable property; for there is land, and a building which produces profit. But it is said that it does not produce profit sufficient to warrant a rate on these defendants in respect of it. But that depends on the manner in which they chuse to apply the proceeds. It does in fact produce profit, and they dispose of it as they please afterwards. How then does this differ from the case of other buildings which produce profit? If this be not rateable on account of the subsequent application of the profits by the trustees to the benefit of others, why should any estate which a man holds in trust be rateable? Then, 2dly, the trustees who receive the profits are the occupiers of the property, and therefore they are liable to be rated for it." Le Blanc, J. "The subject-matter of this rate is within the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, which directs the occupiers of lands and houses to be rated. The appellants purchased the lands and erected a chapel, and now let the seats and receive rents for them: they are therefore the occupiers of the building. Then the only question is, whether they are liable to be rated for it on the ground that it is not valuable property? It is let out on an annual rent. But it is objected, that though they receive profit for it in the first instance, they afterwards dispose of the whole on the establishment, in paying the salaries of the ministers, and in defraying other expenses of attendants and repairs. I agree that this is in substance a rate on the ministers, for if they had let out the pews and received the rents, they would only have received the surplus profit after payment of all the necessary expenses of the chapel; but the pews are let out by those who are in effect the trustees for the ministers, for they pay over to them so much as remains after defraying the expenses. The trustees, therefore, must be considered as the occupiers, because the property is in them, and they let out the pews, and they are therefore rateable for the profits in the same manner as the ministers themselves would be if these latter let out the pews." Bayley, J. "The property itself is rateable, and the trustees are the proper persons to be rated for it. It is a house, and the stat. of Eliz. says that occupiers of houses are rateable. It produces profit, for certain sums are annually paid into the hands of the persons rated by those who rent the pews. Then it is objected, that part of the money so received which is applied to the salaries of the preachers, is referable to them and not to the house; and that if there were no preachers, there would be no pew-rents received: I agree that the money so received is partly referable to the preachers, but a part is also referable to the house itself, in respect to the superior accommodation afforded by it to those who attend the preacher: for such large sums would not be paid to hear them in the open air. There is no hardship in saying that the trustees shall pay the rate, for they will stop in transitu so much as they pay for this purpose; and the ministers are not the proper persons on whom to impose the rate on the building in respect of their salaries. The trustees are not under any obligation to make the payments to the extent stated: they have paid the money in fact; but they were under no obligation to do so at all events. This, therefore, being property which in its nature is rateable, and profit being in fact made of it, and that profit passing in the first instance through the hands of the trustees, I see no doubt but they are rateable for it." Order and rate confirmed.

Where a profit is made of a building occupied by servants and lunatics, the person in receipt of the rent is rateable.

Rex v. St. Giles's, 3 Bar. & Adol. 573. The appellants were rated as the trustees of a lunatic asylum, which had been purchased by voluntary subscriptions, and was originally designated for lunatics, being parish paupers or members of indigent families; but the finances of the institution being inadequate to the maintenance of that description of persons only, a limited number of affluent patients were afterwards admitted, at rates of payment in proportion to their abilities, with a view of providing a surplus towards the support of the most necessitous. The asylum is now large and flourishing. The trustees receive yearly payments from 100*l.* to 20*l.*, or weekly payments from three guineas to 6*s.* Sixty-two patients pay 6*s.* per week; nearly the whole of these are parish paupers. 300*l.* per annum, arising from stock bequeathed to trustees in maintenance of lunatic parish paupers, paid to the asylum out of the Lupton fund. From 1825 to 1830, inclusive, the donations amounted only to 249*l.* The balance in the hands of the trustees in 1825 was 1579*l.*; and in 1830, it had increased to 2572*l.* The institution had also made purchases and erected buildings out of the monies accumulated in their hands during this period, to the amount of 1000*l.*; so that the accumulation during the five years was about 2000*l.* All benefactors to this institution of 20*l.* or upwards at one time, as well as certain public functionaries for the time being, are governors, who exercise the entire control over the asylum and its funds. A committee of governors is appointed every quarter at a general meeting, and to them is delegated the power of auditing the accounts, contracting with tradesmen for provisions, hiring and discharging servants, determining what sums are to be paid by patients, and what persons are to be admitted, discharging patients, and otherwise giving such orders and directions as they think requisite. The paid officers of the institution receive salaries amounting to 986*l.* a year. The apothecary resides in the asylum, and has two furnished rooms to his separate use, in addition to his salary, which would be greater without these rooms. The house-servant and matron have no exclusive apartments except bed rooms. The attendants, domestic servants and lunatics are the only other inmates of the house. The trustees do not derive any personal benefit from the institution. The asylum is situate in the respondent parish, and several persons in consequence of being employed about it have gained settlements in and become chargeable to the said parish. The trustees appealed on two grounds, first, that the asylum was not rateable; and secondly, that the trustees were not persons liable to be assessed. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Tenterden, C. J., "Upon these facts it seems to us impossible to say that this building does not produce a profit by means of the entertainment of those persons who are able to pay for their reception; and if any profit be made, the application of it when made is immaterial as to the question of rateability. Then supposing the building to be rateable, the next question is, who are the occupiers to be rated? Not the servants, for they cannot be considered as occupiers, and certainly not the unhappy lunatics received into the building. Then the property being subject to rate, the trustees who are in the actual receipt of the profits must be the persons rateable. There are no persons who can be rateable but the owners, and these are the owners. The case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Agar," (ante, 121.)

Rex v. Governors of St. Luke's Hospital, 2 Burr. 1053. This case differs in some of its facts from Rex v. St. Giles, for the sessions found as facts that none but poor lunatics were received into this asylum, that the trustees made no profit and had no occupation or possession than by the lunatics and servants. It appeared that certain lands had been demised to lessees for the purpose of erecting an hospital for lunatics: twenty-nine houses standing upon these lands were pulled down, and the hospital erected; and divided into cells for the lunatics, offices for their sustentation, &c., and apartments for the servants who were hired to attend them: and was supported by voluntary contributions; and J. M., one of those who were rated, was the principal hired servant, living in the hospital, and the trustees who were rated had no benefit from it nor any occupation thereof. Lord Mansfield, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court. He said, "cases of this kind must depend on the

2. Who are Occupiers.

Trustees of a lunatic hospital appropriated to the poor are not rateable having no profit or occupation; nor a servant having no exclusive apartment. (a)

(a) By 9 Geo. IV. c. 40, land purchased for a county lunatic asylum shall not be rated at a higher value than the land was at the time of the rate. See post, "Proportion."

2. Who are Occupiers.

The governors of an hospital, or the poor persons, or the servants, are not such occupiers as can be rated.

Royal palaces in the occupation of the royal family are not rateable, but servants occupying house and land belonging to the crown are rateable.

A beneficial occupier of the king's lands, whether by gift or for wages, is rateable for the same.

Tenant at will is rateable.

The officer of a college is rateable for the apartment he inhabits in the college.

A master gunner appointed by the crown, and stated to be occupier of the king's battery house, is rateable.

nature of the respective hospitals. That proprietors of lands might convert them into a state in which they could not be rated to the poor. That nominal trustees could not be rated; that servants could not be rated excepting for their own particular apartments, and it was not here stated that there were any such; and that the objects of this charity certainly could not. That, therefore, as no occupier could be found to be rated, there could be no rate at all."

Rex v. St. Bartholomew's the Less, 4 Burr. 2435. The mayor and commonalty of London, as the governors of Bartholomew hospital, were rated to the poor for it. Lord Mansfield, "The poor rate must be charged upon the occupiers. In the case of St. Luke's hospital, and in that of Chelsea hospital, the officers were rateable as occupiers. Here the corporation de facto are not de facto the occupiers. The poor are occupiers; but they are not rateable."

Rex v. Matthews, Cald. 1; 1 Bott, 170. Matthews was rated for a keeper's lodge in Windsor Park and two acres of land, which he occupied as keeper. He appealed against the rate, and the case stated that the King was rated for his Mews in New Windsor, and for his Mews in St. Martin's, Westminster. Lord Mansfield, "The question is, whether this property is rateable? The royal palaces are not liable, nor have they ever been rated. As to the Mews in St. Martin's parish, that part of it only is rated which was taken in of late years, and was before that time ground belonging to some adjacent parish. But when a servant occupies house and land belonging to the crown, whether he pays for the same by rent or by service, he is rateable."

Lord Bute v. Grindall, 1 T. R. 338. Lord Bute was ranger of New Park, Richmond, and had the custody of the houses, lodges, &c., and also the herbage and pannage of the park: some part of the park is enclosed land, some part meadow, and some arable land sown with corn and clover in the ordinary course of husbandry: the meadow has been always mowed, and the hay made by persons paid by the king, who found the seed: sixty-six loads of hay have been always carried by the king's waggons into the park for the deer, and the overplus stacked up for the king's horses, and the ranger's horses; when the arable land was sown with corn, the ranger found the seed; and when with clover, the king found the seed; and was manured, ploughed, and sown by the king's servants and horses, and reaped by the ranger, and sold for his benefit, and the king had no part; the straw was used for thatching the hayricks, and by the king's cart-horses: the profits arising to the ranger from the said lands are worth 100*l.* a-year; but the herbage and pannage of the park have yielded no profit to the ranger. Lord Mansfield, "The question is, whether the plaintiff is rateable at all? Not for how much or in what proportion. It is clear he is not rateable for the herbage and pannage, because they yield no profit; but there is a parcel of land inclosed which he sows, and afterwards reaps the corn from, and the profits arising to the ranger from the said lands amount to 100*l.* a-year: therefore he is occupier; and quo nomine occupier can make no difference whether by gift or for wages." Buller, J., "It is immaterial what interest the occupier has in the lands, whether he holds as tenant at will or at any other tenure: it is not necessary to enquire into the occupier's title."

Ayre v. Smallpiece, 1 Bott, 154. The comptroller of Chelsea college, residing in the college, was rated to the poor, for having apartments distinctly and separately to his own use.

Rex v. Hurdis, 3 T. R. 497. The appellant objected to the rate because one Wood, gunner of the king's fort and battery at S. who was a servant to his majesty, and not in his own right the occupier of the dwelling-house thereto belonging, and who therefore ought not to have been charged in the rate, was charged as the occupier of the battery-house. Wood was a gunner at the fort of S. The fort and battery-house are the property of the crown, and a master gunner is an officer appointed by the crown, and removable at pleasure. Wood being so employed, occupied the whole of the house, except one room; the furniture belonging to him. Lord Kenyon, C. J., "I do not feel that my opinion upon this subject militates against any decided case, but I shall determine upon the ground of positive law, as it is laid down in the 43 Eliz. which subjects every occupier of lands, houses, &c., to be rated to the relief of the poor. Now it is expressly stated in the case that Wood was the occupier of the battery-house; and though perhaps it might have been contended below that he was not the occupier, in the legal sense of the word, yet the finding of the sessions precludes that question here. It is not, however, a general position, that a servant of the crown occupying a house in respect of his office is not rateable for it. Soldiers indeed cannot be said to be the occupiers of their barracks, in the legal sense of the word; they are no more than mere servants. Therefore Wood was properly rated."

2. Who are Occupiers.

Soldiers are not occupiers in the legal sense of the word.

Lord Amherst v. Lord Somers, 2 T. R. 372. By warrant under the king's sign manual, a lease was entered into by Lord R. Bertie with one A., by which certain buildings were covenanted by A. to be built by him as a riding school, &c., for the use of a troop of the horse guards. Lord Amherst succeeded Lord R. Bertie, and had possession given him of the school, &c., and the buildings were used always for the purposes of the troop, and never in any manner for the private benefit of Lord Amherst. The rent was paid by stoppages from the pay of the troop. By Ashhurst, J., "It is admitted that neither the possessions of the crown, nor of the public, are liable to be rated to the poor; and as this property falls within one or the other of these descriptions, it is not rateable to the poor." And by Buller, J., "In this case the plaintiff did not contract as general lessee, but merely for the benefit of the public, by order of the crown; and he made no use whatever of the stables. Therefore he cannot be considered as the occupier."

Stables rented by order of the crown for the use of a regiment, are not rateable, where the lessee himself does not occupy them on his own particular account.

Rex v. Terrott, 3 East, 506. The appellant was an artillery officer, and had his quarters at a building fitted up at the expense of the crown. There were several apartments beyond what were necessary for the regimental business, and he resided in them with his family; the usual barrack furniture was provided by the crown. He was rated in respect of these apartments. By Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "The principle of the subject is, that if the party have the use of the building, or other subject of the rate, as a mere servant of the crown, or of any public body, or in any other respect for the mere exercise of public duty therein, and have no beneficial occupation of or emolument resulting from it in any personal and private respect, then he is not rateable. The property of the crown in the beneficial occupation of a subject, whether he be a civil or a military officer of the crown, is equally rateable. But if the use of, or residence upon, the property, be either as the servant of the crown, and for public purposes only, or as a mere public officer or servant, the parties having the use of the property merely for such purposes are not rateable; because the occupation is throughout that of the public, and of which public occupation the individuals are only the means and instruments." Rate confirmed.

Officers supplied with accommodation not strictly necessary are rateable.

The rule as to public servants.

See also Holford v. Copeland, 3 Bos. & Pul. 139, in which the principle of the above decisions is fully discussed and elucidated.

[A Beneficial Occupier of Charitable Institution may be rated.] Rex v. S. Waldo, 1 Bott, 183; Cald. 338. Mr. Waldo, about sixteen years before, pulled down a house, for which he was rated to the poor eight guineas a year, and built on the same spot a new one, in which ten poor girls were educated, maintained, and brought up on his charity; he provided a woman to superintend and instruct them. She and the ten girls were the only inhabitants, and the house was solely appropriated for this purpose; Mr. W. was rated for this house. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Mr. W. makes no profit of this building; and it is sufficient that this is so in fact, and the profit is in fact here applied to public and charitable uses."

A person who builds an almshouse is not rateable, if no profit be made of it.

Rex v. Munday, 1 East, 584. The persons rated were the objects of a charitable foundation, in the actual occupation of the alms-house and charity lands, and of certain stock upon the same (being the increase of stock originally given with the house, &c. by the will of the founder,) together with a certain wood, which they were bound to fence at their own charges; and they were liable to be dismissed whenever they infringed upon the rules of the foundation, and were maintained solely by this charity. The court held that these persons were justly rated; for that the 43 Eliz. c. 2, is general, the rate for the relief of the poor being to be levied upon every occupier of lands, houses, &c. and there is no exception of lands devoted to charitable purposes. And that in the present case there was a beneficial occupation.

But persons living on charitable foundation for their own benefit are rateable.

Rex v. Green, 9 B. & C. 203; 4 Man. & R. 164, S. C. An appeal against a poor rate confirmed. Case:—The Merchant Tailors Company are patrons of a charitable establishment for the relief of the widows of poor freemen of the company. About three years ago, the company purchased land in the parish of Lee, whereon they erected alms-houses for such poor widows. The appellants are poor women resident in the alms-houses as alms-women and objects of the charitable establishment, and pay no rent for the same, and are removable at pleasure. The alms-houses were erected at the sole expense of the company. Before the purchase of the land the same was rated on the occupier at the rate of 2*l.* 5*s.* per annum. The question was, whether the poor widows were liable to be rated? Bayley, J. “I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that this property is rateable. The 43 Eliz. c. 2, enacts, ‘that the rate shall be imposed upon every occupier of lands, houses, &c.’ It has been made a question in several cases whether a person residing in a house used for charitable purposes is liable to contribute to the relief of the poor. In Master of a free school is rateable.

Rex v. Catt, 6 T. R. 332, it was decided that the master of a free school, appointed by the minister and inhabitants of a parish under a charitable trust, occupying a house and garden belonging to the school, was rateable, although they were held by him as a recompense for teaching, he being a beneficial occupier. Lord Kenyon there says, ‘To the authority of the cases cited I subscribe my assent. They proceeded on the grounds that there was no occupier. In Rex v. Waldo, (ante, 125,) the rate was held to be bad, because there was no occupier; the poor children who were placed there for education could not be considered as occupiers, neither could the women-servants who superintended them. That case could not be distinguished from that of St. Luke’s Hospital, where the rate was also quashed, because there was no beneficial occupier. But when a case arises where a person is found to be the beneficial occupier of a house, he must be rated, though the house be appropriated to charitable purposes. As long as Richmond park continued in the hands of the king, it was not rateable; but when the ranger made profits of it, and beneficially occupied it, it was held to be rateable in his hands. So if this person had been put in merely to look after the pupils, and had not occupied the house, he would not have been rateable; but it appears that he is the beneficial occupier of this house and garden. By the old land tax act, certain property given for charitable purposes is exempted from that tax; but there is no such exemption in the acts respecting the relief of the poor. In Rex v. Munday, the objects of a charitable foundation, in the actual occupation of an alms-house, were held to be rateable. That case is not distinguished from the present in point of principle. There they were rated for the alms-house and lands in the sum of 2*l.* 5*s.*, and the court held that they were rateable for the house and lands; they must, therefore, have been considered as occupying that house rent free. It is true, that in this case the objects of the charity are described as poor persons, but there is no distinction in the statute between poor persons and others. If they are occupiers of property from which they derive a benefit, they are rateable. Mr. Nolan, p. 188, after stating the authorities upon this subject, says, ‘the distinction, therefore, as to where charities are rateable, and where they are not so, seems to depend upon this: whether there is any body who can be rated as beneficial occupier.’ There was therefore no ground for the appeal.” Littledale and Parke, J., concurred. Order confirmed.

Property in hands of the king not rateable.

Where profits are applicable to public purposes they are not rateable.

Rex v. Commissioners of Salter’s Load Sluice, 4 T. R. 730. The defendants were assessed for the tolls of a sluice, which, by the act of parliament passed for the supporting of the sluice, were “to be applied for the several purposes of the said act, and for no other whatever.” Per Lord Kenyon, C. J. “It is not sufficient to point out property within the parish, but there must also be some beneficial occupant or occupants. Corporations may unquestionably be rated. Here there is property which is the subject of a rate, but there is no occupier of it." Rate quashed.

Rex v. Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61; 9 D. & R. 780, S. C. This was a rate on the trustees of the docks of Liverpool. Case:—"The dock estates within the parish of Liverpool are vested in the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs, and common council of Liverpool, as trustees of the docks and harbour of Liverpool, by virtue of several acts of parliament, (viz. 8 Anne, c. 12, 3 Geo. I. and 11 Geo. II. c. 32, 2 Geo. III. c. 86, 25 Geo. III. c. 15, 39 Geo. III. c. 59, and 51 Geo. III. c. 143, all of which, excepting the second, are public acts,) and consist of a large quantity of land, to the extent of 100 acres. Part of those estates was granted voluntarily by the corporation of Liverpool, part was sold by that body to the trustees for a pecuniary consideration, and other parts have been purchased by the trustees from private individuals, according to the powers given to them by the said acts. Before the construction of the present works part of the land was waste, both above and below high-water mark, but other parts consisted of lands and buildings in the occupation of individuals rated to the relief of the poor of the said parish. The dock estates at present consist of several wet docks, in which vessels may be constantly afloat, dry basins, that is to say, dry at low water, wharfs, piers, slips, cranes, weighing machines, offices, and yards for storing goods, and other conveniences requisite to form a complete dock; and the trustees are authorized to receive large sums, under the name of dock rates and duties, for the accommodation of vessels in the said docks, by virtue of the said acts of parliament. The trustees manage the dock estates by their servants and agents, who receive and account to them for the dues and profits arising as aforesaid, and no part of the estates and premises above assessed is let off to other persons. The engine-house is used for the purpose of keeping a fire-engine, which the trustees have provided out of the public funds for the security of the shipping, as empowered by the same section, and no rent is charged to or paid by any one for the same. Of the different offices enumerated in the schedule some are for the accommodation of the dock masters and gate-men at the various docks, as places of shelter, and merely for the despatch of public business; others are occupied by the collector of the dock rates, the harbour-master, and other public officers of the trustees, solely for the purposes of the dock business. No rent is charged to them for the use of these offices, and no part of them is occupied as a residence by any one. The two yards mentioned in the schedule are hired by the trustees at an annual rent, as a place necessary for the deposit of the various articles used in the erection and maintenance of the docks, and from the occupation of which they derive no personal benefit." After argument, Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It seems to me that there is no solid ground for the distinction which has been taken as to those parts of the property rated, which are rented by the dock company; for if there be no beneficial occupation, it can make no difference whether the occupier be the owner or not. As to the main question, Rex v. The Commissioners of Salter's Load Sluice is decisive. There the tolls were by act of parliament directed to be applied 'to the purposes of the act, and to and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.' The statute under which the dock rates in question are levied does not indeed contain an express direction that the rates shall be applied to the purposes specified, and no other; but it directs that certain burdens shall be discharged, and that then the rates shall be lowered; and, therefore, any application of those rates to other purposes not specified would be a direct violation of the statute. Nothing of that kind is suggested, and, therefore, there is not, in reality, any difference between this case and the former. The principle of not rating property of which no person has a beneficial occupation, is not confined to canals or docks, or property of that nature. A quaker's meeting-house, if the pews are not let, is not rateable, as was decided in Rex v. Woodward (ante. 120), (a) and the same would be applicable to a chapel with the rites of the Church of England, or to a dissenting meeting-house. On the other hand, it was held

2. Who are Occupiers.

Dock dues, if expended, pursuant to the act, entirely in making and keeping the docks, &c. in repair, are not rateable.

(a) See now 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 30, post.

2. Who are Occupiers.

When the surplus tolls of a navigation were directed by statute to be expended in repairing public bridges and highways, it was held that they were not rateable to the poor.

in Rex v. Agar (ante, 121), that when the pews of such a meeting-house were let, the trustees were rateable in respect of the rents, although not received to their own use, but for the benefit of the minister. Here the trustees were not occupiers in the ordinary sense of the word, and no profit was received for the use of any person. It is said that the docks were made by the corporation of Liverpool in order to improve their private property; if such an effect is produced, that property will be rateable for the improved value." Bayley and Littledale, Js. concurred.

Rex v. The Trustees of the River Weaver Navigation, 7 B. & C. 70; 9 D. & R. 788, S. C. Rate upon the trustees of the river Weaver Navigation confirmed. Case:—By 7 Geo. I., for making the river Weaver navigable, it was enacted, that after the work shall be finished, and the charges paid, the clear produce of the rates and duties shall be employed towards repairing the public bridges within the county of Chester, and such other public charges upon the county as the justices at quarter sessions shall direct. If any surplus remained, it should be expended in repairing certain highways. The tonnage rates upon the Weaver are not charged by the mile, but one shilling per ton is charged upon the whole line of river; and a vessel navigating the whole, or any part of the said navigation, is subject to the same charge. This tonnage is paid quarterly at the Navigation Office at Northwich, which is a distinct township from Moulton. The annual accounts are regularly audited by the clerk of the peace, and filed at the sessions, when the balance, arising from the rates above the necessary charges for the maintenance of the navigation, is by direction of the magistrates paid to the county treasurer, for the general purposes of the county, and to none others. Bayley, J. said, "We think that as there is not any clause in the statutes set out, which vests the soil of the river Weaver in the trustees, they cannot be rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of the tolls." (a) It was then suggested that the trustees were rated in several parishes through which the river Weaver runs, and that in some of them they might be considered as the occupiers of land; it was therefore important to have the opinion of the court as to their liability to be rated under such circumstances. Upon this point the court deferred their judgment until Rex v. Liverpool (ante, 127), had been decided, upon which occasion Bayley, J. said, "The principle of this decision is applicable to the case of Rex v. The Trustees of the River Weaver Navigation. There the surplus tolls remaining over and above the expenses of supporting the navigation were to be applied to the repairing and maintaining of bridges and highways. Those were public purposes, and as no part of the monies received could be applied to private purposes, those monies were not rateable in the hands of the trustees. The order confirming the rate must therefore be quashed upon this ground, as well as that which was mentioned by the court at the time of the argument."

The tenant of a farm may be rated for the whole farm although he lets a dairy. The dairyman might have been rated, but the rating of the tenant for the whole and the omission of the dairyman, is no ground of appeal for a third person.

Rex v. Brown, 8 East, 532. The farmer let a dairy, the cows to be exclusively depastured on the farm. The farmer was rated for the whole. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The appellant complains of the rate, without showing any grievance; because the farmer having been rated, as we must presume, for the full profits of the farm, it matters not to the appellant whether or not the rate in respect of that farm could have been better distributed by laying one portion of it on the farmer and another portion on the dairyman. The appellants proportion of the rate would remain the same in either case. It is said that the interest which the dairyman takes under such agreement is a tenement in law, and gives him an interest in the land by which he may gain a settlement, and that I do not dispute; and, therefore, if the dairyman, considering him and not the farmer as the occupier of so much of the farm as the cows were depastured upon, had been rated as such for it, I do not see what objection could have been made. But here the objection is, that the farmer is rated for the whole farm, the profits of which arise principally from the stock upon it, and a part of those profits are again required to be subjected to another rate in the hands of the dairyman. But there is no objection to the rate as it now stands, and great inconvenience would ensue if the profits of different persons out of the same farm were subdivided and a proportionable rate laid upon each, instead of one general rate for the whole on the general occupier of the whole. A farmer may make a bargain with one man to let him have a field of grass to cut, or he may let the aftermath of his meadow some to one and some to another, and this may not only vary every year, but every month or oftener, in the neighbourhood of populous towns. These are substantially the tenants of the land while their subordinate interests subsist, and either might be rated for it during such holding; but if there be one general rate, made on the general occupier of the whole farm, including all these particular profits and subdivisions of interests, by which, in fact, he is benefited, who can say he is injured by the rating of one for the whole, rather than the several subtenants of those partial interests for their respective proportions, deducting the value of them from the rate upon the general occupier? - And as to the convenience of the general rate for the whole, there can be no question of it. Other cases may be put: the owner of a house and garden may let the profits of his garden to his gardener, retaining the use of it in other respects, upon condition of the latter supplying his table with certain articles, or upon a rent; and though the garden might be rated for this interest, yet, if the owner were rated for his house and garden, what objection could any other person make to the rate on that account? The principle is, that the estate which has once paid shall not be made to pay again: and yet in all these cases it may be truly said that some profit is made by the subholder beyond what the general occupier receives. What was said by Lord Mansfield (a) does not contradict this, that where there was a proportion of the profits of the land rateable in the hands of the tenant, which was not rateable in the hands of the crown the tenant was assessable for it. But here the whole having been rated in the hands of the farmer, nothing remained to be assessed in the hands of the undertenant. It would be a different question if a farmer derived profit from stock kept upon his farm, but not connected with the management of it; as if he kept a large flock of cattle there, which he fed with oil cake for sale. There he would be separately rateable for it; not as stock of his farm, but as stock generally, from which he derived a separate and distinct profit. But here the dairy cows are properly speaking the stock of the farm, and as to any separate profit derived from them to the dairyman distinct from the farmer, the same might be said of a man to whom the farmer sold the milk by pails full on the premises, and who after mixing it with water retailed it again at a profit." Grose, J. "The question is, whether the appellant has any ground of complaint. He complains of being rated too much because certain persons renting dairies in the parish have been omitted in the rate. But it appears that though those persons be not rated, others are so for the same subject-matter; because the profits derived from the stock of cows on the farm have in effect been once rated, being included in the rate upon the farmer for the profits of the whole farm, of which they constitute a part." Lawrence, J. "It is contended that the dairymen are liable to be rated for their dairies on two grounds: 1st, That a dairy is a tenement, the taking and occupying of which is capable of conferring a settlement, and that every occupier of a tenement is liable to be rated in respect of it. That may be so, but the ground of appeal is, that the appellant is injured by the omission of these persons in the rate. But if it appear that others are rated for the whole value of the farms, including the profits of the cows depastured on them, and that the appellant sustains no injury in any way, the ground of appeal fails. Then, secondly, it is said that the cows are personal property, and that the dairymen are liable to be rated for the profits made by such stock. But this is the stock by which the farm is rendered productive, and having been once taxed in effect in respect of the produce in the hands of the farmer, is the produce to be rated again as milk in the hands of the dairyman? By the same rule might it not be rated again as butter, and again as cheese, in the hands of the same person, on account of the additional profit which may be made of it in either of these stages? This would be carrying the principle of rating much further than it has gone before. It would be very inconvenient to parishes to subdivide the rate in the manner proposed. If a person, taking the aftermath of a meadow, is to be rated for it instead of including it in the rate for the whole farm, what is to be done when this is taken, as it frequently is, by drovers of cattle passing along the road, who depart again in a few days and are nowhere to be heard of? Experiments of this sort, if carried into effect, would only introduce confusion. The amount of the rate would be the same; for if by underletting the aftermath the original renter make more of the land, he is rateable in proportion; and it will be found much more advantageous to the parishioners at large to abide by the old practice, and to lay one entire rate on the whole farm in the hands of the general occupier." Le Blanc, J. "I am surprised that the sessions should have reserved any case upon the application of this appellant, when the only question was, whether with respect to him this were an equal rate, or whether injustice had been done to him by the omission of the dairymen in the rate. For, supposing it to be a question whether the farmer or the dairyman were in possession of the property to be rated, and that it were a case of doubtful occupation, yet when it appears that one of them has been assessed for the whole property, and that neither of them complained of the rate, what pretence can there be for setting aside or altering the rate at the instance of a third person, who has no interest in that question, in order to decide a question of doubtful possession between the other two? Taking it, however, as a case between the farmer and the dairyman, it is true that the taking of a dairy in this manner has been held to give a settlement as upon the taking of a tenement; but it has only been held to be a tenement in respect of the interest in the land on which the cows are agreed to be depastured. But here the farmer has the general interest in the whole of the land out of which the other interest is carved: the cows fed upon it are his own, they are his stock; the dairyman is to have the care of them, and the trouble of milking them, and the profits arising from the produce of the cows, in consideration of a certain sum which he agrees to give the farmer. Then what is this in effect more than the farmer making this profit of his land and of his stock by this general agreement with the dairyman, instead of employing his own dairyman to milk the cows, and afterwards disposing of the produce when made into butter or cheese? It is a mode of selling the milk of his cows. Then it is said that the dairyman is rateable as for his personal stock; but he is not the owner of the cows, they are not his personal stock, he has no capital of his own, but he only makes a profit by his personal labour out of the capital of another person." Rate confirmed.

One who occupies a house as surveyor to the navigation of the river Lee, under the trustees of that river, held to be liable for poor's rates, although by act of parliament the tolls, &c. are exempted from being rated, and although the trustees have no beneficial interest but act for the public.

— v. Armstrong, 2 Stark. c. 543. This was an action to try the question, whether the plaintiff was liable to be rated for a house which he occupied under the trustees of the navigation of the river Lee. It was situated on the river, and had been built out of the tolls arising from the navigation of the river, and he occupied it for the purpose of superintending the business of the trustees. By the act of parliament it was expressly directed that the tolls arising from the navigation should not be subject to the poor's rates. It was contended that as the plaintiff was the servant of the trustees, who had no beneficial interest in the navigation of the river or in the tolls, he was to be considered as the servant of the public, and as exempted from the poor's rate: if the trustees had not built the house they must have paid for one out of the rates and duties collected on the river. Abbott, C. J. was of opinion, that the plaintiff was rateable in respect of this house. If he had received a salary out of the tolls, and had rented another house, he would clearly have been liable to be rated for it. Verdict for the defendants.

Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 460. Lord Ellenborough said, "I have great difficulty in deciding that a person who has mere permission to turn his cattle on another's land is rateable."

However poor the occupier may be, he ought to be put on the rate, (a) and a power is given to the justices with the consent of overseers to have the name struck off.

2. Who are Occupiers.

Power now to rate owners of certain houses, instead of the occupiers.

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 19, after reciting, that "whereas in many parishes, and more especially in large and populous towns, the payment of the poor's rates is greatly evaded, by reason that great numbers of houses within such parishes are let out in lodgings, or in separate apartments, or for short terms, or are let to tenants who quit their residences, or become insolvent before the rates charged on them can be collected; and it hath been found that in many instances the persons letting such houses do actually charge and receive much higher rents for the same, upon the ground and expectation that the occupiers thereof cannot be effectually assessed to the poor's rates, and will not be charged with or required to pay such rate, and do thus obtain an undue advantage to themselves; and by means of the premises the other inhabitants of such parishes are unjustly compelled to pay much more than their fair and due proportions of the charges of relieving and maintaining the poor;" for remedy thereof, enacts, "that after the 1st of January, 1820, it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish, in vestry assembled, and they are hereby empowered, to resolve and direct, that the owner or owners of all houses, apartments, or dwellings in such parishes, being the immediate lessor or lessors of the actual occupier or occupiers, which shall respectively be let to the occupiers thereof at any rent or rate not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 6*l.* by the year, for any less term than one year; or on any agreement by which the rent shall be reserved or made payable at any shorter period than three months, shall be assessed to the rates for the relief of the poor, for and in respect of such houses, apartments or dwellings, and the outhouses and curtilages thereof, instead of the actual occupiers; and the inhabitants so assembled in vestry may, and they are hereby authorized from time to time to rescind, renew, vary, and amend every resolution and direction as they shall see occasion, so as no such resolution or direction shall extend to assess or charge the owner of any house, apartment, or dwelling, which shall, with the out-houses and curtilages thereof, be let at a greater rent than 20*l.*, or less than 6*l.*, as aforesaid; and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every such parish are hereby empowered and required to carry into effect all such resolutions and directions of the inhabitants in vestry assembled; and in pursuance and execution thereof, in all rates to be by them made for the relief of the poor, to assess by a fair and equal pound rate the owner or owners, being the immediate lessor or lessors of the actual occupier or occupiers, of every house, apartment, or dwelling to which such resolution and direction shall extend, for or in respect of the same, according to the actual rent at which every such house, apartment, or dwelling shall be let, after making a reasonable deduction from such rent, not exceeding in any case one-half of the same; and upon non-payment of the sum or sums so to be assessed, the same may and shall be levied upon, and the payment thereof be enforced against, such owner and owners, lessor and lessors, so to be assessed, and his and their goods and chattels, in like manner as rates for the relief of the poor may by law be levied and recovered, and the payment thereof enforced, upon and against any actual occupier on whom the same are charged."

S. 20. Provides that the goods and chattels of every occupier of any such house, apartment, or dwelling, which shall be found in and about the same, shall be liable to be distrained and sold for raising so much of any such rate or assessment being in arrear, as shall have become due during the occupancy of the person or persons whose goods and chattels shall be so distrained, (to be ascertained in a summary way by the justices granting the warrant of distress), so that in no case any greater sum be raised by distress of the goods and chattels of any such occupiers, than shall, at the time of making such distress, be actually due from such occupier for rent of the premises on which such distress shall be made: provided also, that every occupier who shall pay any such rate or rates, or upon whose goods or chattels the same or any part thereof shall be levied, shall and may deduct the amount of the sum which shall be so paid or levied, out of the rent by him or them payable; and such payment shall be a sufficient discharge to every such occupier for so much of the rent payable by him as he shall have paid, or as shall have been levied on his goods and chattels, of such rate, and for the costs of levying the same.

Sect. 21. Provides, that every person receiving or claiming the rent of any such house, apartment, or dwelling, for his or her own use, or receiving the same for the use of any corporation aggregate, or of any landlord or lessor who shall be a minor, under coverture, or insane, or for the use of any person who shall not be usually resident within twenty miles from the parish in which any such house, apartment, or dwelling shall be situated, shall for this purpose be deemed and taken to be and shall be rateable as the owner thereof.

Sect. 22. Provides, that every person to be rated as the owner of any such house, apartment, or dwelling, who shall think himself or herself aggrieved by any such rate, shall have such and the like remedy by appeal against the same as any other person thereby rated; and every person so rated shall be entitled, as an inhabitant of the parish in and for which he shall be assessed, to be present and to vote in every vestry or meeting of the inhabitants thereof for the execution of the laws for the relief of the poor, or for the consideration of any matter or question in relation thereto, in like manner as the inhabitants of the said parish.

Sect. 23. Provides, that nothing in this act contained shall extend to give any power or authority to assess the owner (not being the occupier) of any house, apartment, or dwelling, in any city, borough, or town corporate, in which the right of voting for the election of members to serve in parliament, shall depend upon the assessment of the voter to the poor's rate, or to vary or affect the manner of assessing and charging any of the inhabitants or occupiers of houses, lands, or tenements, within any such city, borough, or town corporate. Similar clause in 2 W. IV. c. 45, s. 50.

Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 D. & R. 359. This was an appeal by the company against a rate; and one ground stated in the notice was, that the overseers had not rated the lessee of houses, who underlet the same at an improved rent, the occupiers of which had been rated, but excused from payment on account of poverty. Upon this point, during the argument, as reported in D. & R., C. J. Abbott said, "If the principle is established that the landlords are liable to be rated in consequence of the inability of their tenants to pay rates, it will have the effect of depriving poor persons of their habitations, for no landlord will let small tenements to persons of that description if they are to be liable as sureties for their tenants." And again, in giving the judgment of the Court, he said, "As to the question of the lessee, whose under-tenants have been excused from poverty, the point was not very much pressed upon our consideration in the argument, and we think the lessee not liable. The 9 & 10 W. III. (local act) imposes the rate indeed upon the lands, houses, &c. without mentioning either occupier or owner; but as this is a burthen commonly falling on the occupier, we think the owner not compellable to bear it. The owner fixes his rent upon the supposition that this is his tenant's burthen; and without very clear words to show that such was the intention, we think we cannot make the landlord surety for the tenant."

The construction of the general act, 43 Eliz. c. 2, is, that the general term inhabitant relates to persons having visible property within the parish, and only to certain particular description of properties, excluding in general mere incorporate hereditaments, unless arising out of real property, especially tolls or stallage. (See the general doctrine Rex v. The Mersey and Irwell Navigation, 9 Bar. & Cres. 95; 4 Man. & R. 84, S. C.) And yet, according to principle, every person ought to contribute to parochial wants according to his real ability; and morally he should do so in the parish from which he receives his income, unless such income has already been rated or taxed by an assessment upon land or other property, or the lands of an occupier, in which case, by the necessary reduction of rent, the landlord is in effect the person assessed. It has therefore been held a valid custom to rate all persons in a parish according to their apparent ability, without regard to visible property in their possession. Nightingale v. Marshall, 2 Bar. & Cres. 313; 3 D. & R. 549, S. C. In order to enforce a more comprehensive rating, modern local acts sometimes expressly render rateable all property, such as hereditaments, (a term not in 43 Eliz.) &c. enjoyed. See post, tit. "Rating under Local Act."

By the 43 Eliz., besides the inhabitants, "the parson, vicar, and occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, proprietor of tithes, coal mines, and saleable underwoods," are to be taxed.

"Land hath in its legal significations an indefinite extent, upwards as well as downwards. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum, is the maxim of the law, upwards; and downwards, whatever is in a direct line between the surface of any land and the centre of the earth, belongs to the owner of the surface. The word 'land' includes not only the face of the earth, but every thing under it or over it."—2 Bla. Com. 18.

This is the legal signification of "land," when it is used by itself; but when it is accompanied with other words, which can have no meaning, if the word is understood in its general sense, then there is reason for taking the word in a less comprehensive sense, as in a grant of "lands, meadows, and pastures;" the former word means any "arable lands." (Barton Com. 194.) So here, if land is used in its general sense, no effect can be given to the words "houses, woods, or coal mines;" and on the contrary, land in such sense would comprehend all woods, and all mines, and make that rateable which, by repeated decisions, have been held not to be included in the statute.

Trustees of Tewkesbury*, 13 East, 155; Bott, cont. 86), were holden to be rateable for them. And where a farmer let his cows (depastured on his own lands) to a tenant at a certain rent per cow, it was holden that neither the farmer nor the dairyman was rateable for the profits arising from the dairy. (Rex v. Brown, 8 East, 528; Bott, cont. 59.) So a person having the exclusive use of a way (7 T. R. 598; 1 Bott, 218), and not merely the right of way over the land of another (*Rex v. So for the fishings of a river, if connected with any right to the soil, the lessee is rateable. (Rex v. Ellis, 1 M. & S. 652; Bott, cont. 107.) But the lord of a manor is not rateable for the quit rents and casual profits of the manor (Rex v. Vandewall, 2 Burr. 991. See Carth. 14, Comb. 264); for in that case the property would be twice rated, in the hands of the landlord and in the hands of the tenant. (Rex v. Alderbury, 1 East, 534.) and substantial property, situate within the parish, and yielding profit there, id. ibid. So as of a ferry (Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East, 330; *Williams v. the Avon, unto and from the lock and sluice next above the bridge at Evesham, together with all the tolls, rates of tonnage, &c., to the navigation belonging." By the 24 Geo. II., 1751, "An Act for the regulating the navigation of the river Avon, and for ascertaining the rates of water-carriage," it was enacted, "that the river Avon shall be a free river, and all persons shall have liberty of passing down the river with boats laden with goods, paying the proprietors of the navigation certain rates of tonnage." The appellant was not an inhabitant or occupier of any messuage or tenement in Bengworth, but he resided in the parish of All Saints, Evesham, in which parish part of the river was, and which was used by vessels passing along the river. In Bengworth was a wharf communicating with the river, belonging to one Day, where goods were landed annually, yielding tonnage dues to the amount in the rate assessed; but no tonnage dues were received by the appellant in Bengworth, nor any account given of them in that parish; but, as a check upon the boatmen, an account was taken at the wharf by Day's servant of all the goods landed there, which was sent over to the appellant at his house in Evesham, where the boatmen accounted to him; and he usually received tonnage dues on goods in Evesham, but sometimes at Pershore; there was no lock within Bengworth, and when the tonnage dues were paid at Evesham, the boatman took back with him a certificate from the appellant of his having paid the dues at Evesham, in order to enable him to repass the sluice through which he came up loaded, which was situate at Pershore, and which was kept locked. The same amount of tonnage was payable by every vessel which passed Pershore sluice in its way to Evesham or Bengworth, whether it proceeded as high as either of those places, or unloaded and delivered at any intermediate place, which was frequently the case, and which distance included eight different parishes where goods might be landed. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that this rate, which has been made on the river tonnage, cannot be sustained. It has been contended, that by the words 'river tonnage,' we may understand the profits arising only from that part of the river which lies within the parish of Bengworth. It seems to me, however, that we cannot so understand those words, for they are explained to us by the subsequent facts stated in the case. From these facts it clearly appears that the profits accrued in respect, not only of the use of that part of the navigation which was within the parish of Bengworth, but also from the use of the other parts of the navigation, situate in the different parishes through which the goods had passed. This is, therefore, in substance, not a rate upon the profits of that part of the river only which is situated within the parish of Bengworth, but a rate upon the tonnage dues payable at the wharf there, in respect of the carriage of the goods through the other parishes. Unless, therefore, we are to supersede all the late cases by which it has been held that tolls per se are not rateable, we are bound to say that these tonnage dues are not subject to this rate." Bayley, J., "Since Rex v. Nicholson, the court have held themselves bound to see clearly that the property rated comes within the words of the 43 Eliz., by which the rate is directed to be 'by taxation of every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods, in the parish.' Now the party here, not being an inhabitant, must be brought within some of the other words, and the only other words applicable to this case are, 'occupier of lands.' Rex v. The Aire and Calder Navigation, and Rex v. Page, certainly do not admit of that distinction. In Rex v. Nicholson those decisions, however, were expressly overruled by this court. In Rex v. Macdonald the rate was for the Rochdale Canal Lock Tunnel dues or rates. Now, if those dues or rates had arisen from property partly within the parish and partly without, it would have been like the present case. The only dues which the party was entitled to receive in that case were dues in respect of vessels passing through the lock, which lock lay within the parish: and, therefore, all the tolls and dues there, arose from what may be called parish property. The rate in this case is for tonnage dues, and it would be a good rate, provided it could be shown that the tonnage arose wholly from the use of rateable property within the parish. It is stated, however, that the canal dues for their whole amount in the parish of B., stated to be for river tonnage, could not be considered as a rate upon that part of the river locally situate within the parish of B., but as a rate upon the parts of the river situate as well within as without the parish, and that it could not therefore be supported: Held also, that stat. 41 G. 3, (U. K.) c. 23, s. 1, does not give the Court of K. B. the power of amending a poor rate.

Tonnage dues, like tolls, are not rateable per se.

passes through several parishes. The tolls, therefore, which are collected for goods landed at the wharf in the parish of Bengworth, are payable to the proprietor as a compensation for the use of the whole line of the canal through which the goods pass, and not merely for the use of that part of the canal which lies within the parish of Bengworth. It is a rate, therefore, upon profits arising partly within and partly without the parish; and upon that ground, I think that the rate cannot be supported; and if it cannot, the case of Rex v. The Mayor of Bath is an authority to show that the rate must be quashed. This is not a mere objection to the quantum of the rate." Holroyd, J. "It is now to be considered as an established rule, that tolls qua tolls are not rateable. I do not mean to say, however, that a rate may not be made on rateable property under the denomination of tolls, provided that the property from which the tolls arise be within the parish, and the rate be confined to that property. Here the rate is upon tonnage-dues. It is said that the property rated is rateable property within the parish where the tonnage-dues became payable, and that, therefore, this is to be considered as a rate upon that rateable property. I think, however, that this is a rate, not only on rateable property within the parish, but on other property, which, though rateable, is rateable in another parish, and not in this. The case states, that within the parish there is a wharf, communicating with the river, where goods to the amount assessed are annually landed. It must be taken, therefore, that the rate was made upon all those tonnage-dues. It is also stated, that part of the navigation lies in other parishes, in the passage through which the tonnage-dues arise, as well as for the passage through the part of the river which lies within the parish. Now, if the rate on the tonnage-dues be, in fact, a rate on the rateable property, that is, on the whole part of the navigation, in respect of which those dues are payable, it must be considered as a rate upon the profits arising, not only from that part of the navigation which is within the parish, but from that also which is not within the parish. The objection, therefore, is not merely to the quantum, but to the rate itself, viz. that it is a rate upon property without as well as within the parish. I think, therefore, that this rate is bad." Best, J. "The only mode by which the tolls of a canal become rateable is by rating the land itself, or that part of the land occupied by the canal, which is locally situate within the parish; the tolls then are the profits arising from that part of the land; and the statute of Elizabeth authorizes the rating of such property locally situate within the parish: but it does not authorize the rating of property not situate within the parish. I think that the rate here is upon property partly within and partly without the parish, and that it is, therefore, bad; and that, being so, I think the order of sessions ought to be quashed."

Tolls are not rateable per se, but contra, when mixed with a rate upon other property, which, as having substance and locality within the parish, is properly rateable there.

Rex v. Sir A. Macdonald, 12 East, 324. Case:—The property was described in the assessment as the Rochdale canal, lock, tunnel, dues or rates; and certain warehouses were named; and the assessment was made upon Sir Archibald Macdonald (and others), trustees of the late Duke of Bridgewater. The appellants are not inhabitants of Manchester, but are in the receipt of the tonnage in respect of vessels passing through the lock built upon the Rochdale canal, under the 34 Geo. III. The 2d section reciting, that "whereas the Duke of Bridgewater hath expended a considerable sum in making wharfs for the convenience of the public near his canal at Manchester, and when the proposed junction is made with his canal, the profits of the Duke arising from his wharfs will be considerably diminished; he nevertheless consents to such junction on being authorized to build a lock upon the Rochdale canal, near the junction, and to collect rates as a compensation," authorizes the Duke, &c. at his expense, to build a lock upon the Rochdale canal, at Castle Field, &c. and to take at the said lock for his benefit the following rates, viz. (naming rates for goods carried from the Rochdale canal to the dock,) which rates shall be paid at or near the lock to the duke, &c. The lock was built in pursuance of this act. The tonnage amount to as much as is charged in the assessment. The appellants did and do still occupy the lock and warehouses and wharfs. No inhabitants of Manchester or other persons were rated in respect of their personal property in the township.

There were owners of annual chief or ground rents payable from lands in Manchester, and the owners were also inhabitants, but not rated in respect of these rents. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question stands on the rateability of the property of the trustees. The case states that they are the occupiers of the lock, and of the several wharfs and warehouses mentioned in the rate; and it is not disputed that the property rated yields profit; but it is objected that they are rated for dues or rates, that is, for the tolls payable at the lock under the act of parliament; and that the court have held tolls not to be rateable. But the court have only said that tolls are not rateable per se, but only when connected and rated conjunctively with real and substantial property, situated in the parish; which, as yielding profit there by means of the tolls, is the proper subject of rating within the act of Elizabeth. Now here the lock itself is rated, which is something real and substantial, locally situated in the township, and producing profit; and the addition of the dues or rates is merely giving other names for the same thing. These dues or rates are given by the act of parliament as a compensation to the Duke of Bridgewater, for the loss of his profits of certain wharfs adjoining to his canal at Manchester; which wharfs were before clearly rateable in respect of those profits: the rates, therefore, made payable at the lock were substituted as a compensation for and in lieu of the wharfage before enjoyed: they are the substituted medium of profit arising, as the act describes, from those wharfs. The court, therefore, by this decision, will not break in upon that which they have recently decided, that tolls per se, and when not mixed with a rate upon other property, which, as having substance and locality within the parish, is properly rateable there, are not liable to be rated. The other judges concurring, the rate and order of sessions were confirmed.

Rex v. Cardington, 2 Cowp. 581. Case:—A. Palmer, Esq. was seised in fee of the right of navigation of that part of the river Ouse, which lies between Erith, in Huntingdon, and the town of Bedford, and of all the tolls arising from the carriage of goods upon that part; he had power to erect sluices and staunches for keeping up the water, tolls were paid for passing every sluice, and in a different rate for different sluices: one sluice was erected in the parish of Cardington, at which the toll was 3d. a chaldron: Mr. Palmer did not reside in Cardington, nor was any person resident at that sluice to receive the tolls; the tolls for that sluice were received at Barford or Eaton; neither Mr. Palmer, nor any former proprietor of that navigation, were assessed to the poor rates for their sluices or for the tolls, but they had for many years been assessed to the land tax. The court ordered it to stand over, that inquiry might be made as to the custom of rating this description of property in other places. In answer to the inquiries, it was returned, that out of fourteen sluices, being the whole number erected upon this navigation, one only was rated to the poor; that the river Ivel, near Bury, the Northampton river, Larke, Ouse, and Stower, were none of them taxed. The tolls at Marlow, Oxford, Reading, and several others on the river Thames, were all rated to the poor. Upon the whole, the court was of opinion that these tolls were rateable.

Tolls taken upon a river for passing a sluice are rateable.

The proprietors are rateable in each parish for the profits earned by the canal there; see "Proportion," post; unless by the Canal Act there is a special exemption. See "Exemption from Rate," post.

3. PIPES.

Occupiers of land by means of pipes are rateable.

Rex v. Brighton Gas Company, 5 B. & C. 466; 8 D. & R. 308; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 60. The company was established by act of parliament for lighting Brighton with gas. The buildings and manufactory are in the parish of Rottingdean, the mains or pipes, forming the subject of appeal, are placed in the ground in the parish of Brighton, where the gas is sold and consumed; the company being authorized, with the consent of certain commissioners to open the ground in the streets of Brighton. The mains or pipes were assessed at 40*l.* per annum, being a ninth part of the estimated value of 360*l.*, that

The company are rateable as occupiers of the land wherein their mains and pipes are laid, for the entire profits of that land, part of them arising from such pipes so laid therein.

3. Pipes.

being the proportion in which other rateable property is there rated. Personal property is not rated in Brighton. The mains and pipes were worth 360*l.* a year at the least, to any person who could use them for the purpose for which they were laid down. Bayley, J. "The only question is, whether the company can be deemed occupiers of land, and to the extent to which they are rated. If it were doubtful in this case, whether the pipes constituted part of the freehold, the company would, at all events, be liable to be rated for an occupation way; but I think that we may collect from the case that the pipes are fixed in the soil; and if so, then Rex v. The Corporation of Bath establishes that they are to be deemed occupiers of that land in which the pipes are fixed. Rex v. The Rochdale Water Works Company (infra), and Rex v. The Birmingham Gas Light Company establish the same principle. In the case of a canal the proprietors are rateable, not only in the parish where the tolls are collected, but in each parish where they occupy land for that purpose. In many acts of parliament, authorizing the making of a canal, it is provided that the company shall not be rated at a higher rate than the adjoining land; but if there be no such provision, then they must be rated in respect of the value which the land has acquired from its having been used for the purposes of the canal. There is no such provision in this case; and as the pipes are laid down so as to become part and parcel of the land for the time they remain, they thereby improve the value of the land, in the same manner as buildings erected upon the land, and the whole must be rated accordingly. I entertained some doubt at one time whether the right of the company to remove the pipes might not prevent their being rateable in respect of the increased value of the land; but upon reflection it appears to me that that makes no difference, because they must be rateable upon the same principles as buildings are which may be removed at the end of the term. There are cases which in principle are similar to the present. Thus a person who had the exclusive occupation of a waggon way, and not a mere right of passage, has been held to be rateable. Upon these grounds I am of opinion that the property is rateable. Secondly, that it is rateable to the extent of the value of that which, for the time, constitutes part of the freehold. Thirdly, I am of opinion that the rate is properly made in Brighton, and not in Rottingdean, because the rate must be upon the land occupied by the company, and here the land occupied is in the parish of Brighton." Holroyd, J. "The first point is decided by many cases which are similar in principle to the present." [He then referred to Rex v. St. Nicholas, Gloucester, and Rex v. Hogg, post.] "I think, therefore, that so long as the company use the land for the purpose of their pipes, they are rateable, for they have the exclusive occupation of that part of the land in which their pipes lie; and that they are rateable for the entire profits of that land, part of them arising from the gas pipes placed in the land." Little-dale, J. "The rate must be upon the land. Here the pipes being fixed to the land, the land and pipes are to be considered as one thing. The only difficulty in the case is, whether the company are to be considered as occupiers of land. They are authorized, with the consent of the commissioners, to break the soil for the purpose of laying their pipes. Now in Dyson v. Collick, 5 B. & A. 600, it was held that the contractors for making a navigable canal, having, with the permission of the owner of the soil, erected a dam of earth and wood upon his close, across a stream there, for the purpose of completing their works, had a possession sufficient to entitle them to maintain trespass against a wrong doer. This is an authority to show that the company were virtually in the occupation of this land, and being in the exclusive occupation of that portion of land in which their pipes lay, they are rateable within the principle laid down in Rex v. The Corporation of Bath, and Rex v. The Rochdale Waterworks Company."

A company was empowered to lay under ground through the streets of a town main pipes for the conveyance of water;

Rex v. Rochdale Waterworks Company, 1 M. & S. 634. The proprietors of Rochdale Waterworks were rated in the township of Spotland for pipes for the conveyance of water belonging to the company, and being fixed in the ground in the township, and the profits arising therefrom within the township. By 49 Geo. III. intituled, "An Act for the better supplying the Inhabitants of the Town of Rochdale and the neighbourhood with Water," the appellants are empowered to lay under ground, along the streets and highways, in the township of Spotland, main pipes for the conveyance of water; and authorizes the inhabitants of the township, with the consent of the company, to lay down pipes, communicating with such main pipes, to their respective houses, paying to the company rates for such privilege and water. In pursuance of this act, main pipes and branches are laid and used in the township, and divers of the inhabitants pay rates to the said company. The company were assessed for the pipes. Lord Ellenborough, "Whether the occupiers of the houses are or are not rateable in respect of the advantages derived to them from the use of these collateral pipes, does not affect the present question. The question here is, whether the company, as occupiers of the main pipes, are rateable? What difference does it make whether it be a reservoir of so many feet square, or a pipe of so many inches in diameter? I own I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. The Corporation of Bath." Le Blanc, J. "If this rate on the company had been simply on the leaders which carry the water to each house, the argument might have been of weight; but the rate is imposed in respect of the main pipes and the profits arising from them." Rate confirmed.

Rex v. Chelsea Waterworks Company, 5 Bar. & Adol. 156; 2 Nev. & M. 765, S. C. Part of the pipes, reservoir, &c. belonging to this company are situate in the Green Park, and are laid in the ground for the conveyance of water to persons paying the company for the same. The herbage growing on the surface, including that under which the pipes pass, is rated in the hands of the ranger of the park. The reservoir is situated in the Green Park, and was formerly a pond. It communicates with the pipes and with the water trunks, and forms part of the company's works. In 1725 permission was given to the company by a warrant from the king to use the pond and the park as a reservoir, and to dig the ground for laying pipes. Under this warrant the company have ever since used the pond, and have made the reservoir, and laid the pipes in the Green Park, and have conveyed water into the reservoir, and through it in its progress to the houses they supply. The tanks are a part of the reservoir. About two years ago, when improvements were made in that vicinity, the company were required by the crown to cleanse and reconstruct the reservoir, and to brick the sides and bottom, which they did under the superintendence of the crown surveyor; at the same time they erected other works for cleansing the surface of the water while in the reservoir, and keeping it at a proper level. The company have no interest in the basin, or in the soil, other than is conveyed by the royal warrant, nor do they occupy it further than as above stated. The use of it is not essential to their purposes, but it is beneficial to them by enabling them to charge their main pipes without working their engines at the head of their works, (a) and the company are by this means better enabled to use the engines when they think proper for the supply of other districts than those communicating with the reservoir, and for other purposes, and in particular, it may be useful in case of fire. The fish in the reservoir have been taken by the deputy ranger, the company not objecting; and the company have been always restrained from making alterations in or doing repairs to the basin, unless by the express permission of the crown surveyor, and under his inspection. They pay no rent, and are paid for supplying the palace. The question was, whether any of the works in the Green Park were rateable. Cur. adv. vult. Denman, C. J. "With respect to the pipes laid in the park it was admitted by the learned counsel for the appellants, that unless he could distinguish this case from those in which it was decided that pipes of similar companies laid in the streets were rateable, the rate in the present instance in that respect must be confirmed. The ground of distinction was, that here another person was rated for the surface of the land under which the pipes were placed. But we are clearly of opinion that this makes no difference. That part of the soil which the company occupied was not included in that rate. Upon this question the

3. Pipes.

Held, that the company were rateable to the poor in the parish where the main pipes lay.

A company, who occupy lands by their pipes, is rateable, although another person is rated for the herbage of the surface.

A warrant from the Crown to use a pond in a royal park, for limited purposes, and as tenants at will, gives the grantee an interest in the soil, which makes him rateable.

(a) The water is brought from the Thames. See the act 8 Geo. I. c. 26.

3. Pipes.

court expressed a clear opinion in the course of the argument. The only reason for deferring our judgment was, that we might have an opportunity of more attentively considering the effect of the royal warrant under which the reservoirs were made. We have done so, and we are of opinion that it gave to the company as much interest in the space where their reservoirs are made as in that where the pipes are laid. It is impossible to distinguish one from the other. Their interest, indeed, in the former is expressly, in the latter by implication at will only; but a tenant at will is, until the will be determined, an occupier of the land; and as the company are, on the authority of the decided cases, the occupiers of the land filled by the pipes, they must be considered as the occupiers of that where the reservoirs are constructed. They appear to us to have the exclusive right in a portion of the soil in both cases, though for a limited purpose only." Rate confirmed.

4. OCCUPATION.

4. Occupation.

It is necessary to distinguish between an easement, and an interest in the soil. The grantee of the former is not rateable. A power given by statute to render a river navigable, does not necessarily give the undertaker any interest in the soil, except in the land which they purchase. So also the grant of a right of way, of a right of common, of the privilege, not exclusive, of taking stone from the quarry, does not constitute the grantee an occupier. In all such cases the person in possession of the land is deemed the occupier, and liable to be rated for the value of the land increased by the use of it.

Exclusive Occupation.—Criterion of Easement or Interest in Land.

Rex v. Trent and Mersey Navigation Company, 4 B. & C. 57; 6 D. & R. 47, in which case the proprietors of certain limestone quarries agreed to deliver to a canal company, yearly, such quantities of good limestone as the latter should direct, at the rate of 7*d.* per ton, and if they should at any time neglect to deliver the quantities required, it should be lawful for the company to enter upon the lands, or limestone quarries, of any of the proprietors, and to take such quantities of limestone as they should think proper, paying 2*d.* per ton. The proprietors having failed to make the supply, the company entered, and worked the quarries for more than twenty years, according to the contract, and they were, therefore, rated as occupiers; and the sessions confirmed the rate on appeal. Abbott, C. J., having adverted to the fact, that no one besides the company had got stone from the quarries, since they first entered to work them for themselves, proceeded—"But the right of the company was merely to get there what stone they might think fit: there was nothing in the contract to prevent the owner from giving to others also the privilege of getting stone in the same quarry. The company, therefore, had not the sole and exclusive occupation, but a mere privilege, and consequently were not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor." Order of sessions quashed.

5. DOCKS, CANAL TOLLS, &c.5. Docks, canal tolls, &c.

The great benefit resulting to commerce, and the consequent promotion of the national prosperity, from the establishment of docks, and of internal navigation by means of canals, does not exempt lands and buildings devoted to these purposes from the poor's rate, wherever they are the property of individuals or companies who derive an immediate profit from them by means of dues, tolls, &c. If, however, the entire funds thus raised are destined exclusively to the repayment of the original outlay, and the necessary expenditure in keeping the works in a proper condition, then there are no beneficial occupiers within the meaning of the statute, and in such circumstances the poor's rate cannot be demanded.

It is now settled that only such occupiers as have an exclusive occupation of land, whether covered with water or not, so as to enable them to maintain an action of trespass, in respect of any injury done to the land, are rateable as occupiers of such land. Where, therefore, the occupancy amounts to no more than an easement in the soil of another, as in the case of trustees of turnpike roads or navigable rivers, they are not rateable as occupiers of the lands over which such roads or rivers pass, although they are authorized by act of parliament to keep the former in repair, and cleanse, scour, open, enlarge, and remove all obstructions to the navigation of the latter, and to receive tolls or dues from those passing along the same. But if such trustees make additional cuts or canals upon lands purchased by them, and erect locks, sluices, or other works for the more profitable enjoyment thereof, then, according to all the authorities, they are rateable in respect of the occupation of such cuts, locks, wears, drains, &c., although the profits are earned chiefly by the passing along the navigable river. (Steer's Par. L. 409.)

Rex v. The Mersey and Irwell Navigation Company, 9 B. & C. 95; 4 Man. & R. 84, S. C. By 7 Geo. I., certain persons, therein nominated undertakers, were authorized, at their own cost, to make the rivers Mersey and Irwell navigable from Liverpool to Manchester, and to maintain such navigation; and for those purposes to open, scour, enlarge, or straighten the said rivers, and to dig or cut the banks thereof; and to make any new cuts, trenches, or passages for water in the adjoining lands, as should be necessary for the navigation of boats and other vessels, and if necessary, to cut and remove trees, gravel beds, &c., which might hinder the navigation; and to erect bridges, sluices, locks, &c., as should be necessary where they should think fit, and to turn any highways, and make towing paths near the rivers, and do all other things necessary for the maintenance and improvement of the navigation of the said rivers, first giving satisfaction to the owners of property taken or destroyed for the purposes of the act. In consideration thereof, the undertakers and no others were to take certain tolls for their own proper use and behoof; and that the said rivers should for ever thereafter be deemed navigable from L. to M., and that all the king's subjects with their goods, &c., might have free passage thereon, with boats and other vessels, &c., without hindrance, paying such rates or duties as were appointed by the act. The company was incorporated by 4 Geo. III. The sessions held that the company were rateable for the whole line of navigation within the township to which they were in this instance assessed, in respect of the land taken and used by them for the Mersey and Irwell Navigation, the towing-paths, wears, locks, cuts and sluices, and assessed the annual value of the profits at 2,600*l.*, and ordered the rate to be reduced accordingly, being of opinion that the amount of the tonnage as originally stated in the rate (2,908*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*) was overvalued. Lord Tenterden, C. J., "I am of opinion that the company of proprietors are not rateable for the ancient bed of the navigable part of the river; and inasmuch as the rate, which the sessions have affirmed, is made on them as occupiers of that part of the navigable ancient bed of the river which is situate in the township of Barton-upon-Irwell, the order of sessions must be quashed. It does not follow, however, that the whole rate ought to be quashed by this court, even on these proprietors, much less the whole rate on the whole parish. Some matters there are which, according to the present state of the case, appear to be rateable; such as the new cuts, which are made through the soil of which the proprietors were actual purchasers. They must be considered, in respect of those cuts, in the same light as the proprietors of any ordinary canal. So of the locks: and the only question will be as to the amount. I say nothing about the towing paths; for there seems to be some question whether the facts as to the length of those in the township are correctly stated. But inasmuch as there is one sum now applied to a subject for which the company are not rateable, joined with a subject-matter for which I think they are rateable, the inclination of my mind is to quash the order of sessions, and send the case to them that they may rate such parts as are rateable according to their own judgment, if they can come to any proper conclusion upon the question." Bayley, J. "When this question was first presented to my consideration in Rex v. Thomas, it struck me that the company were

5. Docks, Canal Tolls, &c.

Authority given by act of parliament to a company to make a river navigable, and to build bridges, sluices, locks, &c.; and in consideration thereof to levy certain tolls, gives them no more than an easement in the river. They cannot, therefore, be rated as occupiers of the river, though they are rateable for the locks, &c.

5. *Docks,
Canal Tolls,

liable to be rated in respect of the navigation and the other property; but on further consideration, I think that with reference to the navigation, viz. the navigable bed of the river, I was wrong. In order to make them rateable, they must be within the words of the 43 Eliz. 'occupiers of land or houses,' and it struck me at first, that inasmuch as they had a right to have the bed and banks of the river upheld, to hold the water, which water they were to use, they might, perhaps, be called the occupiers of that land which was so covered with water, and which held the water so afterwards to be used. But when, after considering the subject, I find that they can maintain no description of action which an occupier is capable of maintaining, I am now disposed to think that the correct view of the case is not that they are occupiers of the land covered with water, but that they had an easement only in the land. Where the proprietors of a canal purchase the land, and are themselves owners of the soil, they are rateable, on the principle that they are the occupiers of the soil which belongs to them; but in this case, the soil, as far as we can form any judgment, does not belong to this company. They have only a qualified right to use the land, to deepen the channel of the river, and make the soil fit for the purpose of holding the water, which water they are afterwards to use; but subject to the right of navigation being vested in them, and subject to the right they have that the soil shall continue to hold the water in which the navigation is to take place, the soil remains in the ownership and occupation of those persons to whom that soil originally belonged. When the company make cuts under the powers of the act of parliament, which authorizes them to buy the land for the purpose of making these cuts, they are, with reference to those cuts, proprietors and occupiers of land, and therefore rateable in respect of that land. As they have a right also to erect wears, and dams, and locks, those wears, and dams, and locks, being on their own land, become their own real property; and they are the occupiers of that land on which those wears, dams, and locks, respectively are, and they are therefore rateable in respect of them. But, for the reasons I have given, (which I have thought right to state, having, on a former occasion, expressed an opinion that the navigation was rateable,) I am of opinion that they are not liable to be rated for the navigation. It seems to me, therefore, that the proper course is to send the rate down to the session for amendment. For, if the rate be quashed, this consequence will ensue; namely, that a rate will be levied in respect of a bygone time, and the former overseers of the parish will be reimbursed by rates to be levied, not on the persons who were occupiers at the time when the expenditure took place, but by a rate on those persons who have become occupiers since that time. For these reasons I think the case ought to go back to the sessions, that they may rate those parts of this property which ought to be rated." Littledale, J. "I am entirely of the same opinion, that the principal subject of this rate, viz. the navigation, is not rateable, and I think the case ought to go back to the sessions to have the rate amended. The inconvenience mentioned by my brother Bayley, would certainly arise if the rate were quashed entirely; but for that, I should have thought it more convenient that this part of the rate should have been quashed altogether. It seems to me there may be some difficulty, but we have nothing to do with that, in ascertaining how those locks and towing paths are to be rated. The rate is an entire rate on the whole profits, and I do not see how it is possible to say how much a lock or a towing path produces. Suppose they were to make 2000*l.* annual tolls, how can it be ascertained what proportion of that sum is contributed by the locks and towing paths. That, however, is a question for the sessions." Parke, J. "I agree with the rest of the court, in thinking that the order of sessions should be quashed. The question has been argued with much ability, and at last is reduced to a very simple point, namely, whether we can pronounce that these defendants are, on this finding, 'occupiers of lands.' If they are occupiers of lands, they are rateable; if they are not occupiers of lands, they are not rateable. Many of the early cases of rateability seem to have proceeded upon a disposition of the court, (pardonable, but, perhaps, not strictly correct,) to extend the operation of the statute of Elizabeth, so as to include as large a fund as possible in the rate. The law on this subject was at length settled in Williams v. Jones, 12 East, 346. It is clear, from that case, that no one can be rated unless he be an inhabitant or occupier, and these defendants are not inhabitants. The question then is, whether they are occupiers of land? If they have a mere easement they are not rateable. Persons who have a right of common, a right of way-leave, or a right of ferry, are not rateable. This subject-matter of rate cannot be well distinguished from the case of a ferry, from which the owner of the ferry derives a particular benefit, and from the use of which the public also derive a benefit. In Williams v. Jones, the owner of the ferry had repaired the landing-place, which was parcel of a highway on the bank of the river, and had a post fixed in the ground there, to which the boats were usually moored, and yet he was held not to be the occupier of the highway, though he had a special power and privilege as to a part of it. Now in this case it is quite clear that as to the bed of the river, this company had only a special power; they had not the exclusive occupation of any part of it. It seems to me, therefore, they are not rateable for the bed of the river. No person can be an occupier unless he has the exclusive right to enjoy some portion of the soil. It will be found that that obtains in the case of the gas companies. There the companies who have gas pipes have the exclusive right to enjoy a portion of the soil; they have the exclusive right of occupying, by means of these pipes, that portion of the soil in which the main is. But in this case the company have no exclusive right to occupy any part of the soil of the bed of the river. As to the locks, if it shall appear that the property of the soil (where the locks are made) is in the company, they will be rateable. As to the cuts made at the outset of the navigation, (the property being in the company,) they are rateable in respect of them. There may be a difficulty in affixing the quantum of rate; that, however, is not for us, but for the sessions to settle. They will fix that according to the degree of productive value which they may ascertain to arise from the occupation of this particular part of the soil. It seems clear, on the whole, that in this case the company are not rateable for the bed of the river, for they have merely an easement in it. Probably, certain acts which they have exercised might be prima facie evidence of their being owners of the soil; but the moment the statute is looked at, it is quite clear that those acts are referable to the powers they have under the statute, and not to any exclusive right to the possession of the soil. It seems to me, therefore, that they are not liable to be rated for the bed of the river, having only an easement in it, but that they are liable to be rated for the cuts, for they are owners of the soil of them, and derive a benefit from them, either directly in the shape of toll, which they receive from other persons, or indirectly in respect of what they receive from their own customers; and whether they receive it from other persons who pay toll, or receive it from their own customers at the end of the voyage, makes no difference, as the enjoyment of that land is profitable to them in both cases, and for that profit they ought to be rated. As to the remaining question, it will be whether they are owners of the soil on which the locks are placed: if they are, and if they have the land on which the locks are placed in their own use, if they have the right of possession, and receive the profit arising on that, they will be rateable." Lord Tenterden, C. J., "All that we can pronounce is, that we quash the order of sessions; the rate is not brought up before us." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Thomas, 9 B. & C. 114; S. C. nom Rex v. Avon Company, 4 Man. & R. 23. By an act of parliament certain persons were authorized to make the river Avon navigable from B. to H., and to maintain such navigation; and, for those purposes, to clear, scour, open, enlarge, or straighten the river; to dig and cut the banks, to make new cuts, trenches, or passages for water through lands adjoining; and to build bridges, sluices, locks, &c. and to do all other things necessary for making and maintaining the navigable passage, first giving satisfaction to the owners of lands; and commissioners were appointed to settle what satisfaction every person should have for such proportion of his lands as should be cut, dug, removed, or made use of for carrying on the undertaking, and to settle what proportion of such purchase money or satisfaction every person, having a particular estate or interest in any of the premises, should have for his respective interest; and, in consideration of the expenses to be incurred, the undertakers were authorized to take, for their own proper use and behoof, certain tolls. The undertakers made the river navigable. A cut and lock were made in the respondent parish at the expense of the proprietors, who still continue to cleanse the river. No specific toll is payable for passing the lock or cut, but for this purpose they form part of the navigation of the river, and are substituted for the natural river. None of the appellants reside in this parish. The navigation is eleven miles in length; three of which are in the respondent parish. The length of the cut, &c. in that parish is 300 yards. The clear annual income of the whole is 4000*l.* The river was rated at 100*l.* and the cut at 5*l.* This case was argued before Rex v. Mersey, and after giving judgment in that case, Lord Tenterden said, "The question is precisely the same as in Rex v. Mersey, and we are of opinion, that the proprietors of this navigation are not occupiers of land covered with water by part of the river Avon, and are not liable to be rated for the same. We agree with the sessions in deciding that the cut or navigable canal which was actually made by this company upon land purchased by them, and the lock which is erected on such land, are, according to all the authorities, fit subjects to be rated to the poor." (a)

The grant of the "navigation" passes only an easement.

Rex v. The Undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation, 9 B. & C. 820; 4 Man. & R. 728. The 9 & 10 Will. III. gave to certain undertakers authority to make navigable the river Aire, and for that purpose to cleanse and scour the same, and dig and cut the banks. By a subsequent act, reciting that the legal estate and interest in the navigation of the said river, and divers messuages, mills, warehouses, buildings, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, were vested in trustees, they were authorized by deed to sell and convey in fee such messuages, mills, lands, or tenements, belonging to the undertakers, or to convey in fee, by way of mortgage, as well the said navigation as also all or any messuages, mills, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, being the property of the undertakers: Held, that the word "navigation" imported an incorporeal hereditament, and that it authorized the trustees to mortgage in fee that incorporeal hereditament, and the first act having given the undertakers an incorporeal hereditament only in the bed of the river, they were not rateable to the poor as occupiers of the river Aire. Nor are the company rateable for a dam erected to make the river navigable. (3 B. & Ad. 139.)

Rex v. Chelmer and Blackwater Navigation, 2 B. & Ad. 14, 18. The soil of the river Blackwater was not by the statute vested in the proprietors, but only the privilege of using it in the nature of an easement.

6. COMMONS.—RIGHTS OF PASTURE.

6. Commons, rights of pasture, &c.

Land, over which there exists a right of common, which affords a beneficial occupation, is rateable; but the party to be rated must not only be the beneficial occupier, but he must have such a possession as will enable him to maintain an action of trespass, which a mere commoner cannot sustain. In most cases, therefore, where the common belongs to a corporate body, the corporation, and not the members individually, must be rated. A mere right of common is not rateable.

Members of a corporate body, which holds in fee certain common lands, exercising their right of common on such lands, are rateable. (b)

Rex v. Watson, 5 East, 480. Appeal against a rate. Case:—The mayor, &c. of Huntingdon were the owners in fee of lands, which were used as a common of pasture, and stocked by such resident burgesses as thought proper to stock, under certain restrictions. That some of the resident burgesses stocked fully, that others did not, and some not at all. That in the latter

(a) In this case Lord Tenterden, in giving the judgment of the court, observed, "that if there should happen to be in any parish no new cut made, or any profitable building erected, but land should be bought for locks and wears, which are in themselves unprofitable, it might be contended that the company would not be rateable at all for the land so taken. (b) On this case being cited in Rex case, an annual payment was made by those who did stock to those who did not; and that persons omitted were resident burgesses and did stock. In the course of the argument it was observed by Lawrence, J., that the word occupation, properly speaking, implies possession. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is not an incorporeal hereditament. The corporation are the owners in fee of the land, and they dole it out annually, according to the custom, to certain of the burgesses, such of them as take it paying a certain sum to those who do not turn on any stock. Then when the number of those who stock is ascertained, what is there to distinguish them from other tenants in common? Each of them might maintain trespass for an injury done to his occupation in common. It has been decided that a common in gross is a tenement, and it should seem from thence that it is rateable; (a) but without considering that this case steers clear of all difficulty, for I do not consider this as an incorporeal hereditament, but as a corporeal tenement, of which the several burgesses who stock are tenants in common. And we cannot say that an enjoyment of land, which is of such value as that those who do not actually enjoy it, but who might if they so pleased, are entitled to a compensation from those who do, is not something which is rateable; and being rateable, it must be rated in the hands of those who have the beneficial possession." Le Blanc, J. added, "It is improper therefore to call it a right of common; because it is holden in fee by the corporation for the benefit of the resident burgesses. The corporation themselves, as a corporation, have no benefit from the land, but the resident burgesses to whom it is meted out annually by the leet jury. This view of the case avoids the difficulty stated in the argument of rating persons having a right of common running into several parishes: for this is a case of persons having an equitable right to the land, the fee of which is vested in the corporation for their benefit." The rate sent back to be amended by the insertion of the burgesses occupying the land.

Quere, Whether a common in gross be rateable.

Rex v. The Trustees of Tewkesbury, 13 East, 155. Appeal against rate. Before the 48 Geo. III. for inclosing lands in Tewkesbury, and for vesting the after or lattermath of a meadow called Severn Ham in trustees, the burgesses or freemen of the borough of Tewkesbury resident within the borough for the time being, and the occupiers for the time being of certain houses situate within the borough, were entitled to a right of common for a limited number of their own cattle only in the Severn Ham, for a certain period in every year, which right of common was, according to the said act, afterwards suspended by order of the commissioners, and the after or lattermath of the Severn Ham was by the act declared to be vested in certain trustees, for the burgesses or freemen and principal householders of the borough of Tewkesbury, for ever discharged from all right, &c. which any person could have in the same. The trustees might let and set annually the after or lattermath of Severn Ham, or any part thereof, to any persons at the most improved yearly rent; and also might let the lattermath of Severn Ham in pastures for horses, cattle, and sheep, to different persons, in such manner as they should appoint; or they might lease for term of years; and the rents arising from the lattermath of the said meadow should every year be paid and divided between such burgesses or freemen of Tewkesbury, and such occupiers of houses within the said borough as would have been entitled to rights of common upon the meadow, if that act had not passed, according to their respective rights and interests. On the 12th of August, 1809, the trustees not being able to let the said aftermath together for a sum equal to its value, let it out in pastures at a certain sum per head for horses, cattle, and sheep, to various persons, for 295*l.*, but subject to expenses of between 30 and 40*l.* The several persons who took the aftermath in pastures, enjoyed the same by turning

The trustees of aftermath are rateable where the aftermath was vested in them, and by them let out in pastures at so much per head.

v. Tewkesbury, infra, 145, Lord Ellenborough said, "There each was in possession of a distinct interest in the land, as in the case of a cattle gate, for which he might have maintained an ejectment. And as to cattle gates, see Rex v. Whix- in their cattle from the 12th of August, 1809, to the 13th of February, 1810, and the trustees did not occupy it, unless such letting, &c. amount in law to an occupation by them. No alteration has been made since the passing of the act in the proportion of the poor rates of the parish assessed on the occupiers of the houses there, who were previously entitled to such right of common on the Severn Ham, nor has any deduction been made from the assessments in consequence of the alterations introduced by the act. The question was, whether the trustees were liable to be rated in respect of the after or lattermath? When Rex v. Watson was cited, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "There the corporation could not take in the cattle of a stranger, but here the trustees may contract with any persons to take in their cattle by the year, or by the month, or week; and here not being able to let it altogether, they took in the cattle of different persons at so much a head. Who then can be said to be the occupiers, if they are not in this case?" And afterwards, in giving judgment, he said, "The letting is at so much a head, without any definitive time, or for any definitive portion of the aftermath, nor were the trustees bound to limit the number of cattle, though they might have done so." Grose, J., agreed. Le Blanc, J. "The persons whose cattle were taken in had no definitive portion of the aftermath let to them." Bayley, J. "In the Huntingdon case the portions of those who had a right to stock were ascertained, but here there was nothing to limit the trustees from taking in others." Order of sessions confirmed for rating the trustees.

Where a corporation was seised of certain pasture lands, and appointed a ranger to keep the keys of the gates, clean the ditches, preserve the fences, and impound cattle trespassing thereon; and, at a court held annually, made such regulations concerning their pastures, and the number of cattle each burgess was to turn on, and the sum to be paid in respect thereof, which money, after deducting the expenses of management of the land, was distributed among the burgesses who did not turn on: Held, that the corporation were liable to be rated to the poor, as the beneficial occupiers of these pastures.

Rex v. The Mayor, &c. of Sudbury, 1 B. & C. 389; 2 D. & R. 651, S. C. Appeal against rate. Case:—Richard de Clare, about the year 1250, granted certain pasture land, called Portman's Croft, in the hamlet of Ballingdon, to "his burgesses and whole commonalty of Sudbury;" and Charles the Second, by his charter, under which the corporation now exists, confirmed the said grant to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses. This land is inclosed, and the corporation, consisting of a mayor, six aldermen, and twenty-four capital burgesses, appoint the ranger of the commons, to keep the keys of the gates, clean the ditches, preserve the fences, and impound cattle trespassing. They, at a Court of Orders and Decrees, annually make such regulations concerning their commons as they think proper, and give a public notice of them by the common crier; and for the year when the rate in question was imposed, the order declared that every burgess who had a right to turn on his cattle to feed on the commons, should put two head of cattle, and no more, on Portman's Croft. It then appointed the day when the cattle should be turned on, and to fix the price of each head of cattle, which price is always paid by the freemen exercising this right (who amount to more than 100,) to the treasurer of the corporation. The mayor, aldermen, and capital burgesses (being resident) enjoy the same right upon the same terms, and some of them exercised it during the year for which the rate was made. The cattle are branded by the ranger when turned on. The whole of the money thus paid to the treasurer, after deducting the expenses incident to the management of the land, is distributed among the poorer burgesses, who have, but do not, on account of their poverty, exercise a right of depasturing cattle. The mayor, aldermen, and capital burgesses were rated, in their corporate capacity, as the occupiers of Portman's Croft; and the questions for the opinion of this court were, whether there was any rateable occupation of Portman's Croft; and if there were, whether the corporation, or individuals who depastured their cattle upon it, were liable to be rated? Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the corporation were the beneficial occupiers of the land in question. We have been pressed strongly with Rex v. Watson, but that case differs from the present in two important particulars. There the individuals who turned on had the exclusive enjoyment of the land, for the purpose of turning on their cattle. No payment was made by them to the corporation, but to those resident burgesses who had the right to stock and did not exercise it. Here it is clear, from the facts stated in the case, that the corporation retained the exclusive right to the possession of the land. They appointed a ranger, he was their servant, and paid out of their funds; his duty was to keep the keys of the gates, clean the ditches, repair the fences, and impound cattle: all these acts are usually done by the occupiers of land.

The commoners could not insist upon having the keys from him. If the occupation, however, was in them, they would be entitled to have the controul of the gates, and they would be bound to do the several acts in respect of their occupation, which the corporation did by their servant. The corporation received the agistment money paid in respect of the cattle turned on the land; they therefore occupied the land as agisters of cattle. The present case appears to me to fall within the principle of the decision in Rex v. Tewkesbury. The only difference is, that there the common was fed by the cattle of strangers, and here, by the cattle of the members of the corporation. If, however, the exclusive occupation of the land is in the corporation, the principle upon which that case was decided is applicable to the present. The trustees were there considered as taking in cattle to agist, and particular stress was laid by the court upon the circumstance, that there was no letting of any definite portion of the aftermath. Now, in this case, no definite portion of the land is let to any one individual. The corporation do nothing more than take in cattle to agist; they do not even know, in the first instance, how many cattle will come in. For these reasons it seems to me that this case falls within the principle of Rex v. Tewkesbury, and is distinguishable from Rex v. Watson. If it were necessary to overrule either case, I should adhere to the decision pronounced in the former case, which seems to me to furnish a more reasonable rule of construction than Rex v. Watson." Holroyd, J. "This case differs from Rex v. Watson in several particulars. In that case it did not appear that the corporation did any acts upon the land. The temporary ownership seems to have been given up to the three persons mentioned in the case. Here the right of soil is in the corporation; they have the management of the land by the ranger, their servant, who keeps the keys of the gates, and cleans the ditches; at the court mentioned in the case, they annually make regulations with respect to the mode of enjoyment of the commons by the burgesses. The money paid in respect of the cattle turned on, is received by the corporation, though it be afterwards distributed among the poorer burgesses. Many of these acts done by them could only be done in respect of their being in possession of the land. That is perfectly consistent with the exercise of subordinate rights by the burgesses. In respect of any injury done to the land itself, trespass would lie by the corporation, but in respect of any injury done to the right of common, the burgesses could only maintain an action on the case. In Rex v. Watson, the part of the common situated in the parish of St. Mary seems to have been in the exclusive occupation of the three persons mentioned in the case. The objection to the rate was, that those persons were not rated for certain lands in the parish of St. Mary, over which they had commonable rights, which said lands, in the notice of appeal, was stated to be in the respective occupation of the said three persons. The case stated that the mayor, aldermen, &c. of Huntingdon, were the owners and proprietors of large tracts of land within the borough, used as a common of pasture, and stocked by the burgesses, part of which lands, viz. those mentioned in the notice of appeal, was in the parish of St. Mary. Now, that part in the parish of St. Mary was stated in the notice of appeal to be in the occupation of three persons named in the case. Those persons appear, therefore, to have had the exclusive occupation of those lands at the time when the rate was made. During that time the corporation could not do any act upon the land; they could not maintain trespass for any injury done to the land. Here the possession is in the corporation, although there be a subordinate right in others. There was no letting of any definite part of the common to the burgesses, there was no rent reserved, but merely something paid for the agisting of the cattle. For these reasons I am of opinion that this case differs from that of Rex v. Watson, and that the order of sessions must be affirmed." Best, J. "I think Rex v. Tewkesbury furnishes a more just principle of construction than Rex v. Watson, and I should be disposed to overrule the latter case, if it were necessary to do so in the present instance. If A. occupies for the benefit of B., C., and D., A. is to be rated. Here the corporation are the owners as well as the actual occupiers of the common, although they occupy for the benefit of individual corporators, viz. first, for the benefit of the burgesses who put in their cattle; and secondly, for the benefit of the poorer sort, among whom the money received is afterwards to be distributed. The burgesses are nothing like tenants in common: they have no interest whatever in the soil; it is clear that the corporation retained possession by their officer; he could not otherwise impound cattle damage feasant, that being an injury done to the occupier of the land. The corporation are even to decide how many cattle each burgess is to turn on. This shows, clearly, the right of occupation to be in the corporation, although the right of turning on be in different members. It seems to me that this is not distinguishable from the case of persons taking in cattle to agist. The corporation must be considered as the owners, for it is impossible to rate any other person; for before the orders of the court are issued, the individuals who are likely to have any interest are unknown." Order of sessions affirmed.

Rex v. Churchill and Booth, 4 B. & C. 750; 6 D. & R. 635. In the parish of St. Mary, Nottingham, are about 280 acres of meadow, to the pasturage and herbage of which the burgesses resident in the three parishes of Nottingham, even if they are inmates not renting or holding any tenement or hereditament whatever, are exclusively entitled, and to turn in three head of large cattle each at certain periods of the year. There are also 650 acres in the sand and clay fields, fenced off into different sized closes, belonging to different individuals. The burgesses resident in the three parishes, and also the occupiers of ancient messuages in the three parishes, and who, as such occupiers, are severally rated to the poor in their respective parishes for their messuages, but not for such common right, claim, and such of them as choose exercise, the right to turn in three head of large cattle from Old Lammas day to Old Martinmas day in every year, during which period neither the owner of the freehold nor the tenants have, as such, any right to turn in cattle therein; and during that period the pasturage and herbage of the said fields are of the value of 10s. per acre. The several persons named in the notice of appeal had each of them cattle, some three, some two, and some one, in either the fields or meadows during some part of the time the same were commonable, and at the time of making the rate; but none of them were rated for so depasturing their cattle, nor has it ever been usual in the said parish of St. Mary to rate the persons turning into the fields and meadows during the time of their so being open, and the court of sessions refused to quash or amend the rate on account of such burgesses and occupiers of ancient messuages being omitted to be rated, from the impossibility of ascertaining and rating the whole of such persons so turning into the said fields and meadows for their actual occupation and enjoyment, there being upwards of 2000 burgesses entitled so to turn in, besides the occupiers of many hundred messuages, many of whom exercise such right in different modes and at different times, as by turning in one or more head of cattle for a night or a day, and in other ways, and there being no coin small enough to assess some of them if they were liable to be rated only for their actual occupation and enjoyment. Bayley, J. "In order to prove a person liable to be rated, it is necessary to show that he is an inhabitant, or an occupier of lands, houses, &c. The question here is, whether the persons whose names are alleged to have been improperly omitted out of the rate, were individually occupiers of land. The word common is well known to the law, and Lord Coke says, there are four kinds of common of pasture: common appendant, which is appendant to arable land; common appurtenant, for which one must prescribe (in a que estate); common per cause de vicinage, which is but an excuse for trespass; and common in gross, which is so called, for that it appertaineth to no land, and must be by writing or prescription. Land lies in livery, but a right of common in grant. Does that for which it is attempted to rate the burgesses of Nottingham lie in grant or in livery? Each has a right to turn three cattle upon certain fields during a certain portion of the year. It is claimed by them as burgesses, and as occupiers of ancient houses. Could they be enfeoffed of such a privilege? If not, it is plain they have no right to the soil, but merely an incorporeal hereditament, a right of common by prescription, which is not rateable. The order of sessions was therefore right." Hol- royd, J. "It appears to me that the right is vested in the corporation for the benefit of its members. Supposing that there was a possession in law of those fields, so that trespass might have been maintained either by the corporation or the burgesses, I think it must have been by the corporation. But this appears to me a mere incorporeal right, and not within any of the words in the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. Land to which a right of common is attached may on that account be rated at a higher value, but the right of common is not rateable per se." Littledale, J. "The burgesses had a mere right of common, and according to the decided cases that is not the subject of rating. It is said that the exclusive pasture gave them the exclusive interest. I think it had not that effect, and that they could not maintain trespass as persons having the primam vesturam. The right enjoyed by these burgesses could only be claimed by prescription in the name of the corporation. According to Com. Dig. Prescription (H.) there may be a prescription for sole and several pasture, so as to exclude the owner of the soil, as appears also by Hoskins v. Robins, 2 Saund. 324, and under such circumstances the persons enjoying the right may grant it to others. But in this case no such grant to others could be made by the burgesses; the exclusive right was in the corporation, and they had it but for a limited time, and could only take it by grant or prescription. The burgesses could not take it by either of those modes, which shows that they had a mere privilege of turning on cattle, in respect of which they were not rateable. The order of sessions must therefore be confirmed."

Rex v. Chelsea Waterworks, 5 Bar. & Ad. 156; 2 Nev. & M. 765. The company were rated for the soil occupied by their pipes, and the ranger of the park for the herbage. See ante, 139.

Ranger of a park rateable for herbage, and the water company for their pipes under it.

Wayleave, when not rateable.

Wayleaves not.

Rex v. Jolliffe, 2 T. R. 90. The lessee of a right of way (i. e. a wayleave) over the land of another, paying for it so much per ton for the goods carried over it, is not rateable as an occupier, such wayleave being a bare right of passage, which is an easement and not a grant of the profits of the land, and an easement is not rateable; the land having been before rated in the hands of the occupier of that land. Nor for the right of navigation, (R. v. Thomas, post.)

Wayleave (being a bare easement) not rateable.

Rex v. Bell, 7 T. R. 598. The dean and chapter of Durham granted certain leases of lands for twenty-one years, reserving to themselves the right of granting waggon-ways over the demised premises, paying damages for the spoil of ground. The chapter then leased to the appellants, &c., certain waggon-ways over these premises, making satisfaction to the original lessee for spoil of ground; they constructed these ways as most convenient to themselves, and prevented all persons, excepting such as were authorized by themselves, from using or going upon these ways; built bridges, put timber all along the way, built two houses by the sides, erected gates, which they locked and opened only when their waggons were travelling. The ground through which the way was made had been let to tenants, who received an annual compensation from the appellants, and these tenants are rated in amount as they were before the way was made. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "I entirely agree with the opinion given in the case, (a) but this case is very distinguishable from that. The question here is not respecting the quantum of the rate, but merely whether the defendants are or are not possessed of property that is rateable to the poor, and on that point there can be no doubt. One ground of argument is, that because the dean and chapter could only grant a wayleave, therefore nothing more than a wayleave passed to the defendants; but we are not to inquire into the titles of the occupiers. If a disseisor obtain possession of land, he is rateable as the occupier of it, without going through the different parts of the case which show an occupation of the ground by the defendants; it is sufficient to say generally that they clearly appear to be the occupiers. Therefore I am of opinion that the order of sessions must be confirmed." Ashhurst, J. of the same opinion. Grose, J. "It is impossible to read this case without seeing that the defendants have the exclusive occupation of this ground. It is stated in the case that the defendants have enclosed the ground of the extent of five or six acres, thereby excluding 'the lessees of the dean and chapter and their undertenants, as well as all other persons,' that they have placed gates across the way, erected a bridge, and built two houses on it, which are occupied by the servants of the defendants. They were therefore properly rated as the occupiers of this ground." Lawrence, J. of the same opinion. Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. The Mayor of London, 4 T. R. 21. The defendants were rated for the barge-way and toll-gate in Hampton Wick, Middlesex. The appellants, by an act of parliament, purchased an ancient barge-way or towing-path within H. W. upon the Thames bank, and certain ancient tolls payable in respect of horses drawing barges along the same. The appellants leased the herbage of the way and path for a sum which was appropriated to the navigation; the lessee occupied and paid rates for the herbage. The old tolls were discontinued, and new tolls were taken for all barges navigating between London Bridge and the City Stone, according to the quantity of tonnage; $1\frac{1}{2}d.$ per ton was payable and paid to the appellants for every barge towed along a certain part of the barge-way, and H. W. is within that limit, and the tolls were collected elsewhere, and not at H. W. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The difficulty has arisen from not considering what is rated. It is not a rate on the tolls, but the close of land called the barge-way, and the toll-gate. Now the questions are, first, 'whether the property be or be not rateable?' second, 'who should be rated for it?' First, the subject-matter of the rate is real property; it is land, tenement, or hereditament, and it is liable to be rated unless it be so circumstanced that there is no occupier on whom the rate can be imposed. But here the city of London are occupiers; for the lessee's interest is confined to the herbage and pasture. And there is no doubt that they are in possession of the actual occupation of this towing-path."

Ferries.

The lessee and occupier of an ancient and exclusive ferry, not being an inhabitant residing within the township in which one of the termini of the ferry is situated, is not liable to be rated there for any share of the tolls of such ferry; for supposing a ferry to be real property, it is not such real property as is mentioned in the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, the occupancy of which subjects the party to the relief of the poor of the place. And all the cases where parties have been held rateable in respect of the occupancy or receipt of tolls (apart from the question of inhabitancy) have been where they at the same time occupied real visible property connected with such tolls in the place where they were rated.

7. TOLLS.—Ferry.

Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East, 330. Case:—The appellant is an inhabitant of Sunderland, which town lies close to the sea, at the mouth of the river Wear, which divides Sunderland from Monkwearmouth-shore. There is an ancient ferry which crosses the river from Sunderland to Monkwearmouth-shore. This ferry, in 1795, was purchased by the commissioners of Wearmouth bridge; and the ferry and the tolls thereof are leased to the appellant at a yearly rent. Two boats ply all the day, and the fare paid for a person passing in the ferry is a halfpenny each way; and of late years for convenience it has been accustomed to collect the money of the passengers as they enter the boat on either side of the river, instead of when they go out, as done formerly. There is a small boat goes during the night; and the inhabitants of Monkwearmouth-shore, who are accustomed as aftermentioned, pay the same fare of a halfpenny as persons not accustomed do, if they go over in this night-boat. The boats, when not used, have always been locked up on the Sunderland side of the water, close to the place where the passengers get in on that side. The ferry has always, until the year 1802, when it was let to T. Wandless, who lived in Monkwearmouth-shore, been let to persons living in Sunderland, and been rated to the poor of Sunderland for the whole of the ferry dues: and it has at different times been also rated to the poor of Monkwearmouth-shore; but nothing was ever paid to that township until Wandless took the ferry, when the parish of Sunderland having raised his rate, in consequence of his having given an additional rent, he objected to pay, and appealed to the sessions in July, 1805, but the case was abandoned by the respondents, and Wandless's rate was amended, and reduced to half of the tolls of the ferry; and the ferry has since been continued to be rated to Monkwearmouth-shore for one-half of the tolls or ferry dues. The place where the ferry lands in Monkwearmouth-shore is of little or no value of itself, in case it was not used in the ferry-landing. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., (first stating that the case of Williams v. Jones was governed by this,) said, "The rate is here imposed on the tolls merely of the ferry: and the question is, 'whether the proprietor of the ferry, who is not an inhabitant of the township in which he is rated, be liable to be rated for such tolls received by him there?" And this being a question upon the construction of the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, it is material to look to the words of it. By that statute the parish officers, by consent of two justices of peace, are directed to raise a competent sum for the relief of the poor by taxation of 'every inhabitant, parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwoods in the said parish.' Now tolls (a) do not come within any one specification of occupancy described by the statute: they are not lands, nor houses, &c. If, therefore, the owner be taxable for them at all, it must be as an inhabitant of the parish out of which they arise: but there is no case in which the word inhabitant in that statute has been held to mean any other than a resident within the parish. In the cases which have occurred of rating in respect of personal property, such as Rex v. Liverpool, and Rex v. Collison, cited in Rex v. Jones, (8 East, 451, 455 (n), 457 (n),) residence was considered necessary to constitute inhabitancy. But we are reminded of cases where tolls arising from navigable canals, to which the tolls of a ferry are assimilated, have been held rateable, without any reference to the question of inhabitancy: and the Wickham case is much relied on, where a corporation was held rateable for market-tolls: but they were the lords of the soil where the market was held, in respect of which they were rated for the tolls. In Rex v. Cardington, the rate was specifically upon the sluices, on that which was local and visible property, and producing profit within the parish; and all the cases where tolls have been held to be rateable, when they are examined, will be found to have proceeded on that ground. But there is no case where tolls detached altogether from local real property have been held to be rateable per se. When, therefore, we are called upon to decide such a question for the first time, I am always disposed to go to the fountain-head, which is the act of 43 Eliz.; and looking at the words of that act, I do not find any of them which extend to rate any person not being an inhabitant of the place, nor the occupier of any of the specific kinds of property mentioned in the act. And not finding any description in the statute which applies to the case of this appellant, I cannot hold him to be rateable for these tolls." Grose, J. of the same opinion. Le Blanc, J. "The appellant is rated specifically as the lessee of the ferry for half of the tolls or ferry-dues in the township of Monkwearmouth-shore; and it is found he is an inhabitant of and lives in Sunderland: and it is not stated that he is the occupier of any property in Monkwearmouth-shore: and that brings it to the simple question, 'whether a person residing out of the township be rateable there for the tolls of a ferry, which tolls arise and become due to him for carrying passengers and cattle from the one shore to the other, one of which lies in the township?' The case of the owner of the packet-boats, Rex v. Jones, comes very near to that of a person who has an exclusive right of carrying passengers and goods in a ferry-boat; but the packet owner was only held to be rateable for his profits in the parish where he resided, and where the boats were kept, and produced the profit to him; and he was considered not to be rateable in any other place to which the boats sailed where he was not resident." Bayley, J. "This person is neither an inhabitant of the township within the meaning of the statute, nor an occupier of any of the species of property mentioned in it. In a statute which mentions inhabitant as well as occupier, inhabitant must mean resident, otherwise it would for this purpose mean the same as occupier. In all the cases of tolls, it will be found that the persons rated were the occupiers of lands within the place, in respect of which the tolls in the whole or in part were payable. In Rex v. Cardington, the party was rated for the sluice, of which he was the occupier, which sluice was real property; and canals are real property: they are land applied to a particular purpose, and the tolls are the profits arising from that use of the land, and are given to the proprietors as a compensation for the use of it in that manner. Here the appellant was not an inhabitant of Monkwearmouthshore, and he was not an occupier there of any real property, for which he was rateable." Order of sessions quashed.

The owner of a ferry, residing in a different parish, but taking the profits of the ferry on the spot by his servants and agents, is not rateable for such tolls in the parish where they were so collected and where one of the termini of the ferry was situated, and on which shore the ferry-boats were secured by means of a post in the ground; the soil itself at the landing places being the king's common highway; and the owner of the ferry having no property in or exclusive possession of it.

Williams v. Jones, 12 East, 346. Williams was the proprietor of Porthacethwy ferry, and of the tolls thereof. It was an ancient ferry across an arm of the sea, the straits of Menai, and the king's highway from London to Holyhead. There are five landing-places in the parish of Llandisilio, used by the ferry-boats on landing; which landing-places have, for four years, been repaired by Williams, and there is a post fixed in the ground at one of them, to which the ferry-boats are usually moored. The arm of the sea is navigable for all the king's subjects: and they have always of right landed at the several landing-places at their pleasure: and the proprietor of the ferry never had the exclusive use of any of the said landing-places; but has the exclusive right of conveying by his boats, persons, cattle, and carriages, for hire, from a part of the king's highway lying in the parish of Bangor, to another part of the king's highway, lying in Llandysilio. The ferry-boats have been worked by the proprietor's servants; and the tolls paid to his servants, sometimes upon the arm of the sea, a little before the arrival at the landing-places, and at other times upon the landing-places in Llandysilio, after the person paying the same have landed; and the proprietor's servants have paid over the tolls to his agent, residing in Llandysilio. This agent has never been rated; and has paid over such tolls to another agent at Beaumaris, out of Llandysilio. Williams never inhabited Llandysilio. Some observation was made upon the post driven into the soil; but the court considered that this did not essentially vary the question; for the owner of the ferry was not found to have any property in the soil of the highway; and supposing that he had a right to make such a special use of the highway, for the purpose of securing his ferry-boats, that did not make him the occupier of the highway; nor give him any exclusive possession of it; nor could he maintain trespass for any injury done to the soil at the landing-places, which were common to all the king's subjects to land and pass upon. After judgment had been delivered in Rex v. Nicholson, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., declared the opinion of the court, that the decision of this case necessarily followed that of the other, the question in both being substantially the same.

Rex v. Eyre, 12 East, 416; 1 Nol. P. L. 127. The defendant was assessed as "lessee of the tolls of the Key Bridge" at Tewkesbury at the rent bonâ fide paid. Case:—By 48 Geo. III. c. 62, trustees are appointed for rebuilding the Key Bridge across the Avon in Tewkesbury, and for making convenient roads thereto. It enacts, that out of the first monies arising by the tolls, or out of the first money which should be borrowed upon the credit thereof, the trustees shall repay sums advanced thereon with interest; and all the money which should come to their hands for the purposes of the act should be applied in erecting the toll-houses, and to other purposes relating entirely to the bridge and its avenues, and for no other purpose. "That as soon as the purposes of the act should be carried into execution, and the principal and interest borrowed be repaid, all the tolls imposed should cease, and the new bridge and the approaches leading thereto should thereafter be repaired by such persons as were by law liable to repair the same." The tolls are leased to the appellant. It was not proved that the appellant made any profit on the tolls; on the contrary, it is believed, that the lessee has a most unprofitable taking, and that he will not even clear his present rent. The court observed that the case was imperfect, in not stating either that the lessee was the occupier of any toll-house or dwelling-house within the parish, which was the proper subject-matter of a rate, or that he was an inhabitant of the parish, and in not finding whether the lessee did receive any profit from the tolls beyond the rent which was applicable to public purposes, but merely stating that it was believed that he did not. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "As the Court had so recently decided that tolls per se were not rateable, and as the appellant was rated merely as lessee of the tolls, and for nothing else which might have given them a corporeal quality and locality within the parish, such as for a sluice or the like; and as it did not appear that he was an inhabitant of the parish, or made any profit of the tolls, there was nothing stated in the case to raise any question. And though it should turn out to be the fact (which was suggested from the bar) that there was a toll-house (a) attached to the bridge where the appellant dwelt, yet as the sending the case back to the sessions to be re-stated would probably only lead to their inserting as a fact what at present they only stated as matter of belief, that the lessee derived no profit to himself from the tolls, it was better for all parties to quash this rate, and if at any future time the parish thought they could make out a better case against the lessee, they might rate him again."

Fishery.

Fishery.

Rex v. Ellis, 1 M. & Sel. 652. The defendant was rated in Westbury-upon-Severn, as lessee of all those fishings of the halves and halven-doles, with the appurtenances to the halves due and accustomed within the river Severn, between certain limits within a manor bordering on the said river under an annual rent. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The rate has been confirmed by the sessions; we must therefore see that they have done wrong before that we determine that their adjudication ought to be quashed. I will not assume that a fishery, as an incorporeal hereditament, is the subject of a rate. The question then is, whether there be any land connected with this fishery so as to be the subject of rate. What is the thing granted? In 1625, the king grants 'all that our fishery of the halves and halven-doles with the fishings called Unlawater, with the appurtenances to the halves due and accustomed.' I could have wished that the sessions had explained to us, if any lights were afforded by the evidence, the meaning of the term "halves and halven-doles," which is not very familiar to us. It has been treated in argument as if it related to half of the river, and the grant being 'with the appurtenances to the halves due and accustomed,' is in favour of the construction of the half ad filum aquæ, which, according to Lord Hale, belongs, by the constant custom of the country, to the lords of the manors on either side of the river; in support of which custom he cites the Lord Barklay's case. But whatever its meaning may be, I think from the grant of 'the fishings with the appurtenances to the halves and dues accustomed,' it appears distinctly that these halves and halven-doles are of the nature of land, or some local limit within which the fishery connected with the soil is to be exercised. I cannot consider it otherwise than as a grant of something territorial. I do not found my opinion on this being a sole right of fishery, or coming within any particular description of fishery under which the soil must pass: but I think that under the circumstances we ought not to quash the order of sessions, unless we are satisfied that the sessions could not, upon any reasonable ground, conclude that by this grant of halves and halven-doles, &c., some territorial right was conveyed. A grant of soil was also inferred from the grant of royal fisheries, as the right to them is in general appurtenant to the soil, and also of the reservation of a rent, and the manner in which the right had been enjoyed." Bayley, J. added, "A mere incorporeal fishery is not within the statute."

The lessee of halves with fishings in the river Severn, was held rateable, as possessing an interest in the soil.

Market Tolls.

Market Tolls.

Rex v. Bell, 3 M. & Sel. 221. The Earl of Egremont is lord of the manor of Cockermouth, and owner of the soil of the streets of the town of Cockermouth. He, or his lessees, have from time immemorial collected and received certain tolls of corn sold in the market; the toll has, however, been hitherto collected at the commencement of the market out of every sack brought and exposed for sale. The earl, or his lessees, also receive payments or stallage there from persons using stalls, and exposing upon them such things for sale as are usually sold on stalls; and the earl, or his lessees, take the sweepings of the streets. The market is a market by prescription, and is holden in the public street and highway in the town of Cockermouth, where the sacks of corn are set down for sale, and the tolls are there taken. The tolls of corn are a handful out of each sack; Bell is the present lessee of them, and pays a yearly rent of 50*l.* to the earl, and as such lessee takes the tolls of corn in the market; but he is not an inhabitant of the township of Cocker-

The lessee of market tolls in gross not incident to the soil, is not rateable to the poor in respect of his occupancy thereof.

(a) Upon this point see Rex v. Snowden, 4 Bar. & Adol. 713; 1 Nev. & Man. 459, S. C. post, 154.

Market Tolls.

mouth, nor possessed of any property except these tolls. He is rated for "corn tolls." He is not the lessee of the stallage or sweepings, other persons are, who are rated for them. Lord Ellenborough, "I cannot say, upon this statement, that the appellant is an occupier of land. Would he not be equally entitled to the toll, although the sacks were not set down in the market, but were upheld on the shoulders of those who exposed the corn to sale? There is nothing to give this toll a corporeal quality. Bayley, J. "Bell is assessed in the rate for corn tolls, which, it is plain from the statement of the case, were mere market tolls, and not incident to the soil. In Heddey v. Welhouse. (Moor, 474, cited in 2 Str. 1239,) the distinction is well taken; for it is said, if the king grant a fair or market with toll certain to one and his heirs, to be holden in land, which is borough English, and the grantee die, the heir at common law shall have the market and the toll; but the younger son shall have the stallage and pickage with the soil, by the custom." Holroyd, J. "These tolls would be equally payable if the soil had belonged to another."

The lessee of toll traverse and of a toll house (which he occupies), is not rateable for the tolls, but for the toll house only.

Rex v. Snowdon, 4 Bar. & Adol. 713; 1 Nev. & Man. 459, S. C. The mayor and burgesses of Newcastle claim a toll for goods brought into the town in consideration of repairing the streets. The appellant, who was not an inhabitant of St. Nicholas, was the lessee of the toll house in that parish. The toll house is occupied by the appellant's collector, who receives the tolls in the street and not in the house. The appellant was rated for the "toll house and tolls collected there." It was contended that this was a toll traverse. Parke, J. "Assuming it to be a toll traverse, the lessee is not the occupier of any part of the soil in respect of which the toll arises." As to his liability, as occupier of the toll house, Parke, J. said, "that occupation makes him liable to be rated in respect of the profits of the toll house: but if that were pulled down, or he did not occupy it, he would be entitled to receive the tolls. Assuming this to be a toll traverse, it would be paid for passing over the soil of another." And the court decided that he was rateable for the house but not for the tolls.

Manor and Quit Rents.Manor and Quit Rents.

Rex v. Vandewall, 2 Burr. 991. The lord of the manor was charged for the manor itself, (exclusive of the demesne lands,) consisting of quit rents, fines for renewal of copyhold, and other casual fruits and profits. The lord was not an inhabitant of the parish. Lord Mansfield, "The rents and profits of the manor are not rateable to the poor, which," he said, "was so clear that there was no need to enter into any reasoning about it." Lord Kenyon, in Rex v. Alberbury, observed "the case of the quit rents went upon the objection of double rating the same property, in the hands of the landlord as well as the tenant." (a)

8. TITHES.Tithes.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, The parson, vicar, and occupiers of "tithes impropriate, and appropriations of tithes," is to be rated by the express terms of the act. If it were not for the express enactment it would be otherwise, because in general no incorporeal hereditament or mere easement, however valuable, is rateable to the poor. Chanter v. Glubb, 4 Man. & Ryl. 334; 9 Bar. & Cres. 479, S. C.; 4 D. & R. 253; 2 Bar. & Cres. 713; 2 Man. & Ryl. 378; 8 Bar. & Cres. 327. And see Bird v. Higginson, 4 Nev. & Man. 505; 6 Car. & P. 608; 1 Harr. & Wol. 61; which establish that no legal interest in an incorporeal hereditament passes by demise or contract not under seal. A rent charge is not rateable.

The occupier of the tithes is to be rated. And when they have been granted or demised to another by deed under seal or by statute, the grantee is such occupier. If tithes have been extinguished by statute, then the vicar is rateable in his character as vicar, the rent in lieu of tithes being part of his local visible personal property in the parish. And this differs from rent paid to an inhabitant landlord, because it is not previously assessed in the hand of the tenant, as the rack rent generally is.

Rex v. Turner, 1 Str. 77; 1 Bott, 126. The vicar appealed against a rate for tithes, for which the sessions discharged him. By the court, "The vicar is chargeable by 43 Eliz., and the sessions hath only power to moderate, not discharge." Order of sessions quashed.

(a) See as to the same point Carth. 14, and Comb. 264.

A parson who lets by parol, or written contract not under seal, to each parishioner his own tithes, is properly the occupier, and ought to be rated. (16 Vin. Abr. 427. And see Chanter v. Glubb, 4 Man. & Ryl. 334; 9 B. & Cres. 479.)

Parson who lets his tithes by parol should be rated.

Rex v. Lambeth, 1 Str. 525; 8 Mod. 61. The parson lets his tithes to farm; the farmer agrees with the tenant of the land that, in consideration of his paying so much, he shall retain the tithe and gather in the whole crop without dividing. Which of the two is chargeable to the poor rate, as occupier of the tithes, was the question. The sessions discharge the lessee of the parson, and tax the tenant of the land. But by the court: "The order must be quashed. The farmer of the tithes is prima facie liable to the poor rates; and therefore unless he can throw that charge over upon another, the tax must be made upon him. The tenant of the land in this case can never be said to be the occupier of the tithes; for he is either a person who buys the tithes, or else he is to be taken as only excused from paying any; and nobody can say, but that though the parson thinks fit to excuse a parishioner, he will still remain in point of law the occupier of the tithes. This agreement being only by parol cannot enure as an under-lease of a thing that lies only in grant. Suppose it was the case of underwoods, which are sold standing, and the vendee grubs them up; can it be imagined that makes him the occupier? Or suppose the tenant sells the whole crop standing, will that make him less the occupier of the land? If it should, it would be impossible for the officers of the parish to know whom to charge. We must take this tenant of the land to be like any other buyer of the tithes, since he has no more title to them than any stranger whatsoever; and when the parson or his farmer receives a sum of money in lieu of tithe, that is in law a receipt of the tithe: with this only difference that it is not tithe in kind. In the case of a composition (as this is) or a modus, it was never thought but that the parson was chargeable as occupier of the tithe; therefore there being no colour to charge the tenant of the land, the order of sessions must be quashed."

The farmer of tithes, who holds the same under a deed and lets the tithes again is prima facie liable to the poor rate.

Chanter v. Glubb, 9 B. & C. 479; 4 Man. & Ry. 434, S. C. The plaintiff was lessee for years of the tithes of the parish of Haillard under a grant by deed from the impropriator. He agreed by parol with the respective occupiers of lands from year to year, and they retained their tithes. The agreement was prospective, and had no reference to the produce of the year. The plaintiff was assessed upon a highway rate in respect of his occupation of the tithes. During the argument, Lord Tenterden said, "The case of Rex v. Lambeth, (1 Str. 525,) shows that the parson, though he agrees that the tenants shall retain the tithes, is the occupier within the 43 Eliz. c. 2. If there is no distinction between the words of that statute and the highway acts, that authority is decisive against the plaintiff." And his lordship afterwards added, "In strictness of language there cannot be an occupier of tithe, tithe in its nature not being the subject-matter of occupation. Giving, however, a reasonable construction to these words as used in the highway acts, we must understand the occupiers of tithes to be the person who receives the tenth part of the produce of the land. Here the plaintiff was that person, and was therefore properly assessed for the repair of the highway." Bayley, J. "It is very desirable that in questions of this description there should be certainty, and that nice distinctions should not prevail. Here the money payment is the substitute for the tithe. Where the owner of the tithe grants out and conveys any of the tithe to another, that other is the occupier. Where the right continues in himself, he is the occupier. The plaintiff was therefore the occupier in the present instance." Littleton and Parke, Js. concurred. Judgment for defendant.

The lessee by deed of lay impropriator is rateable, though the occupiers retain their tithes.

So also in Rex v. Wilson, 5 Nev. & Man. 119, Patteson, J. observed that a vicar who has made a lease of his tithes (i. e. under seal) is not rateable.

Rex v. Joddrell, 1 Bar. & Adol. 403. The tithes of a parish had been extinguished by an act of parliament, and a corn rent given to the rector in lieu of it; and it was held that the rector was rateable for the tithes.

If tithes are extinguished the vicar is liable for the rent.

Tithes.

But if not extinguished, the occupier of the land is occupier of the tithes and rateable.

The rector is not liable, when the rent is to be paid "free of all taxes."

Such exemption must be express; not implied from extinguishment.

If one be entitled to the tithe of all fish caught in the parish, he is rateable in respect thereof.

In the preceding case the vicar was liable in respect of the rent, and the occupier of the land could not be rated as the occupier of tithes, because they were extinguished. Therefore where by a similar act the tithes were not extinguished, but the statute directed the occupiers of the land to pay an annual rent, the occupiers are rateable for the tithes, the tithes being transferred to them by statute; and tithes are not extinguished, because the land and the tithes are in the same hands. (a) (Rex v. Great Hambleton, 1 Ad. & Ellis, 145.)

The rector is in some instances exonerated from this burthen by an arrangement for the extinguishment of tithes in an Inclosure Act. Thus, where by such an act it was provided that a certain corn-rent, "free from all taxes and deductions whatsoever, except land-tax," should be issuing out of the lands to be inclosed and other lands in the parish, and be paid to the rector in lieu of all great and small tithes, &c., it was held that this corn-rent was not liable to be assessed to the relief of the poor. (Mitchell, Clerk, v. Fordham, 9 D. & R. 335; 6 B. & C. 274.)

So where a private inclosure act enacted that there should be issuing and payable to the vicar out of the lands a yearly sum, "free and clear of all rates, taxes, and deductions whatsoever," it was likewise held that the vicar was not rateable to the poor in respect of the yearly sum paid to him. (Chatfield, Clerk, v. Ruston, 5 D. & R. 675; 3 B. & C. 863.)

Where by an inclosure act it was provided that the tithes of a certain parish should be abolished, and that in lieu of them the commissioners should award to the rector a certain annual rent, equal in value to a certain portion of the lands in the parish; to be paid by the owners of those lands in such proportions as the commissioners should award; it was held that the rector was liable to be rated to the poor, in respect of this rent or annual payment, the act not having expressly exempted it from that burden. (Rex v. Boldero, Clerk, 4 B. & C. 467; 6 D. & Ryl. 557.) As to the proportion, see Rex v. Joddrell, 1 Bar. & Adol. 403, and other cases, post.

Rex v. T. Carlyon, 3 T. R. 385. The appellants were the proprietors of one-tenth of all fish caught and brought on shore within the parish, for which they and their tenants were rated. The only question made was concerning the rateability of fish, being a property yielding a certain annual profit. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This question is decided by the express terms of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, which, after mentioning parsons and vicars in the number of the

(a) These cases confirm the observations which were made in the last edition of this work. The case of Rex v. Lambeth does not expressly decide the question, whether an incumbent, who grants a lease of his tithes, is still liable to be rated in respect of those tithes; or whether the burden is transferred with the right to take them upon his lessee. The legislature in making tithes eo nomine rateable, might studiously have it in view to include tithes, whoever might be the owner, knowing that if they were in lay hands they could not be reached by the words "parson or vicar" (see Rex v. Lacy, 5 B. & C. 709; 8 D. & R. 457); and as they are capable of being demised, and are in law a tenement, there seems no reason why the person to whom they are demised should not be regarded as the occupier for the purposes of the poor rate, in the same manner as the occupiers of lands are held liable to the rate in respect thereof, and not their landlords. In Rex v. Turner, 1 Bott, 126, ante, 154, 155, where the vicar had let out his tithes to the several persons from whom they were payable, and the sessions found that he was not the occupier: the court held that those persons ought to pay the rate on the tithes, though Parker, C. J., thought the vicar ought to have been considered the occupier. Admitting that a mere parol agreement between the incumbent or tithe owner and the tithe payer, for a sum of money in lieu of tithe, passes no interest in the tithe itself, but only enures by way of retainer or discharge, the lessee, by deed, stands in a very different situation: he takes the interest of his lessor, becomes the beneficial occupier, in the sense in which the tenant of land paying rent is a beneficial occupier, and is on the same principle rateable. In the above case (Rex v. Lambeth), it is said, the farmer of the tithe is primâ facie liable, and it is also implied that this primâ facie liability can only be got rid of by showing that he holds by parol only. The inference is, that if he holds by deed duly executed, he is the person to be rated in respect of the tithe, and not the incumbent or impropiator; and this conclusion is warranted by the principles upon which rateability is determined in all other cases. See 1 Eagle on Tithes, 19.

persons who are to contribute to the relief of the poor, enumerates (among other things) tithes impropriate and appropriations of tithes, in respect of which the rate is to be made, and indeed the spirit of the law coincides with the words of this statute; for the legislature intended that when rates were made, every person should contribute according to the benefit which he received within the parish. Here the parties receive a certain benefit arising from the tithe of fish in this parish, and run no risk whatever. Then it is said that only property which is visible should be rated; but I think it is carrying the rule of exemption too far; for oblations and other offerings which constitute the rectorial or vicarial dues are rateable." Buller, J., "Supposing the fishermen are not rateable, Rowls v. Gell (post, 163,) governs this, for here the persons entitled to the tithe of fish run no risk, and their profits are certain, and for that they are rateable."

Oblations and other offerings are rateable.

9. MINES.—Coal. (a)Mines.

By the express words of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, every occupier of lands, &c. "and coal mines," is rateable. The express mention in this statute of "coal mines" has been considered to be a virtual exception of all other mines. The adventurers or occupiers of metallic mines, &c. are therefore not rateable. (See the supposed reason why the adventurer was exempted, Rowls v. Gell, Cowp. 451, post, 163.) Nor the owner, though an inhabitant of the parish, if he receives a money rent; but when he receives a portion of the raw mineral without incurring expense or risk, he is then rateable, and it seems as the occupier of so much land. It is difficult to understand how the owner could be said in this case to be the occupier of land, and even if he be the occupier of land, he is the occupier of a mine, which is virtually excepted out of the statute.

Whether a particular excavation is a mine or a quarry, depends on the mode of working, and not on the mineral produced.

Rex v. Parrott, 5 T. R. 593. Case:—The appellants are in possession of the colliery, (for which they are rated,) under a lease, by which they were bound to work the colliery, and to pay a sixth part of the money produced by the sale of the coals, without any deduction for the expense of working; upon an average of the last three years, the appellants paid 300*l.* 15*s.* 7½*d.* as a sixth part of the produce of the coals sold, and that they lost two and a half farthings on every ton of coals; the colliery always was and still is a losing adventure from the first of their taking it; and they must have known it at the time they took it; and their inducement for taking it was, that when they had worked out the coal in this colliery, they would be able to get at coal of their own, which was adjoining; and this was a cheaper way of getting at it than any other which they could have adopted. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is said that this burthen is to be laid where the benefit arises; but that rule cannot hold in a variety of instances that might be put. Suppose a landlord makes so hard a bargain with his tenant, that the latter derives no benefit from the farm, must not the tenant be rated to the poor? The landlord certainly is not liable. This case differs from Rowls v. Gell in this respect; that was the case of lead mines, which are not rateable under the statute of Eliz., and there the question was, whether or not the lessee were rateable for certain annual profits which he received without any risk on his part? Of the decision in that case it is not necessary for me to say any thing at present.(c) I will form my opinion upon that question when it arises again. But here the property is rateable under the express words of 43 Eliz. c. 2. It appears in the case that there has been a clear profit of 1000*l.* a year since the lease was granted; and the question is, whether the appellants, who are occupiers of these mines, which it is admitted are rateable property, are or are not liable to be rated in respect of this property? Their objection is, that they have made an unprofitable bargain with the lessors; but we cannot examine into that; it being sufficient to make them liable, that they are the occupiers of rateable property." Order of sessions confirmed.

The lessee of a coal mine rateable, although he derive no profit from the mine.

Rex v. Bedworth, 8 East, 387. J. W. was assessed for a colliery, as of the annual value of 200*l.*, at 5*l.* Case:—The colliery was demised for a term of years to W., at 200*l.* annual rent, whether coal should be gotten or not: and the coals were totally exhausted, and the mines ceased to be worked. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "In that case (Rex v. Parrott, ante, 157,) the subject-matter itself was profitable, and produced value to the owner, though the immediate occupiers derived no profit from it. But here the mine itself is exhausted, the subject-matter of profit is gone, although the rent, which was no doubt calculated upon the probable average produce of the whole term, be still payable. But with respect to the parish, he is only rateable for the concurrent annual value during the period for which the rate is made; and when the thing which he occupies no longer affords any such concurrent value, the subject-matter of the rateing is gone."

Other Mines. (a)

Iron mines not
rateable.

Rex v. Cunningham, 5 East, 478. A rate upon "iron and coal mines" was quashed, because iron mines are not rateable, and ought not to have been rated jointly with coal mines.

Lead mines not
rateable.

Governor and Company for smelting Lead v. Richardson, 3 Burr. 1341; 1 Bla. Rep. 389. The defendant had distrained for the poor rate assessed on the occupiers of the lead mines lying in Alston. The plaintiffs were lessees from Greenwich Hospital; they worked the mine, but did not live in Alston; the profits of the hospital that year amounted to 1900*l.*, but those to the plaintiffs were precarious and uncertain, and some years they gained nothing; no lead mines had ever been assessed, except in an instance or two since making this distress. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question is no

(a) Coal mines. The occupier of coal mines is rateable to the poor at the sum for which the mine would let, subject to outgoings. The lessee of coal mines is rateable for the amount of royalty or rent which he pays, and in neither case is any allowance to be made for money expended in rendering the mines productive. (The King v. Attwood, 9 D. & R. 328; 6 B. & C. 277.) Coal mines alone being expressed in the statute, it has been holden that mines of other minerals are not within it, and cannot be rated. (Lead Smelting Company v. Richardson, 3 Burr. 1341; 1 Bla. Rep. 389.) Consequently the occupiers of a lead mine (idem.) or iron mine (Rex v. Cunningham, 5 East, 478), are not rateable for them, nor for an engine erected for the purpose of drawing the water from an iron-stone mine, if used for no other purpose (Rex v. Bilston, 5 B. & C. 851; 8 D. & R. 734, S. C.); nor are the landlords who let them to the occupier liable to be rated for the money rent (Rex v. Bishop of Rochester, 12 East, 353; Rex v. Wellbank, 4 M. & Sel. 222), or rent in the smelted metal of the mines (Rex v. Earl of Pomfret, 5 M. & Sel. 139), which they receive for them. But the owners of mines are holden to be rateable for the portion of the ore raised, which they receive by agreement from those who work in the mines; in lead mines called lot and cope (Rowls v. Gell, Cowp. 451); in tin mines, toll tin and farm tin (Rex v. St. Agnes, 3 T. R. 480; Rex v. St. Austell, 5 B. & Ald. 693; 1 D. & R. 351), or the like (see Rex v. Baptist Mill Company, 1 M. & S. 612); although they receive by compromise from the tenants, not the ore itself, but the estimated value of it in money (Rex v. St. Austell, supra); for here is a reservation of part of the thing demised, which operates, not as a render, but as an exception out of the demise. (See Co. Lit. 47 a, 142 a.) In the case of coal mines, the occupiers of them are liable to be rated for them as long as they continue to work them, whether they produce a profit or not (Rex v. Parrott, 5 T. R. 593); but they are not rateable for them before they are worked and productive (per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Rex v. Bishop of Rochester, 12 East, 353); nor after they cease to be worked (Rex v. Bedworth, 8 East, 387). Stone quarries or lime works (Rex v. Alberbury, 1 East, 534; 1 Bott, 223); slate works (Rex v. Woodland, 2 East, 164; 1 Bott, 228); a potter's clay pit (Rex v. Brown, 8 East, 528), and the like, are sometimes considered as mines, and sometimes as land rendered additionally productive by a particular mode of using it; and the manner of working is the criterion whether it is a mine or quarry.

more than this: whether a lessee of lead mines, whereon no rent is reserved, other than a certain proportion of the ore to be raised, is rateable to the poor under the 43 Eliz.? Now nothing can be clearer than that these mines are not within the letter of the statute; for the legislature could never intend by the word coal mines to comprehend other species of mines. If they had meant to include them, they would either have enumerated them, or used the general word mines. So that the expression coal mines expressly excludes mines of any other sort, as much as if they had been excepted. And there was a very good ground of exempting them; as from the nature of working them they are liable to more hazard and expense than coal mines are. And at that time, all copper, lead, and tin mines, in Derbyshire, Cornwall, and Mendip in Somersetshire (which are the only counties where works of that kind were then established,) were governed by particular laws; whereby any stranger, conforming to the ceremonies thereby required, was at liberty to work those mines without any reward to the owner of the soil. And as all these undertakings were attended with infinite hazard and expense, and often ruined the projectors, it is no improbable conjecture that the legislature meant for this reason, and in order to encourage them to proceed in undertakings of this public utility, to except them from any other burthen or imposition than those that the miners' law had imposed. Indeed, if a man has taken a lease of land, with privilege to dig for mines, he may be rated for the land. But that is not the present case. And where the legislature have not imposed a tax, this court cannot do it by construction. For example, the fees of a physician or lawyer are not made liable by the act, and therefore cannot be rated." Mr. Justice Denison was of the same opinion. By Mr. Justice Wilmot. "Another thing which convinces me that the legislature meant only to include coal mines is, that in stat. 31 Eliz. c. 7, concerning cottages, they have used the words coal mines and all other mineral works; which plainly shows they never understood that coal mines would comprehend other sorts of mines."

Rex v. The Bishop of Rochester, 12 East, 353. A lease of 30th of May, 1805, was made between the Bishop of Rochester and other trustees, and A. Surtees, whereby the trustees demised "all the mines, veins, &c., wastes of lead ore and other minerals, and also all the seams of coal then open or discovered, or which should or might, during the time therein mentioned, be opened or discovered, in the township lands called Nuckton, in the parish of Hunstonworth, with full liberty to dig and search for pits, &c.; to hold the demised premises for 21 years, yielding and paying therefore yearly, during the said term, unto the said lessors, their heirs, &c., for and in respect of the said lead ore and other minerals, the clear yearly rent of 100l." There were also reserved, by way of rent, certain proportions of such lead ore as should be gotten from and out of the said mining grounds. There was also a separate rent reserved for the coals when wrought, and a rent for damages done to the ground tenants. The lessees were bound to pay all taxes parliamentary or parochial. No coal mines had been wrought within these grounds. The lessees had other lead mines in the neighbourhood, but had gotten no ore from under the grounds mentioned in the lease, and consequently no proportion of lead ore had been rendered or become due to the lessors. The lessors were rated in 50l., being a moiety of the rent of 100l. reserved by the lease, and which was a fair proportion for that part of the mining ground which is in the parish of Hunstonworth; and the lessors, if liable at all, did not object to the fairness of the apportionment. The rate was: "Lord Crewe's trustees for certain annual rent paid them by Easterby, Hall and Co., for the liberty of opening the mines within their lands, spoil of ground, &c., 50l.—Rate, 8l. 15s." None of the lessors reside or have any dwelling-house in the parish. The lessees were not rated in respect of the demised mines. Lord Ellenborough, "The trustees can only be rated as inhabitants or as occupiers within the parish. We have so recently (Rex v. Nicholson, ante, 150; Williams, v. Jones, ante, 152;) put a construction upon the word inhabitant in the statute of Elizabeth, as meaning a resident within the parish, that it is unnecessary to discuss the matter again; and the fact of such inhabitancy is negatived by the case. Neither are they occupiers of the property for which they are rated: so far from it, that they cannot maintain trespass for any injury done to property which they are supposed to occupy: and even if they were the actual occupiers of coal mines, they would not be rateable for them before they were worked and productive. (See Rex v. Bedworth, ante, 158.) But this is no more than a contract with tenants for the payment of a certain rent for ores supposed to lie under the surface; and if the tenants should open the ground and raise the ore, reserving a certain proportion of ore to the ground landlords; there is no occupation of any thing within the statute. If hereafter the tenants should open the ground and raise the ore, the trustees will then be entitled to certain proportions, and such profits may come within a different rule, as lot and cope: upon which no question at present arises. Grose and Bayley, Js., agreed. Le Blanc, J. "If the trustees were rateable at all, it must be as occupiers of the mines, or some proportion of them; but here they are rated as for a rent eo nomine, for which, if they were rateable, every landlord might by the same rule be rated for his rent." Order quashed. And see Rex v. Tremayne, 1 Nev. & Man. 194, S. P.

Landlords not resident within the parish, having leased lead mines and other minerals, with liberty to the tenants to dig, &c., reserving a certain annual rent, and also certain proportions of the ore which should be raised, are at any rate not assessable to the relief of the poor for such certain rent on ore being raised, whatever the question might be as to the proportion of ore reserved when in fact any should be raised. (a)

The landlord of the mine is not rateable where smelted ore is reserved as rent.

Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret and others, 5 Maule & S. 139. Lord Ellenborough, C. J., delivered judgment. "The appellants were the owners of the lead ore in certain lead mines within the township; not owners of the soil of the wastes in which the mines are situate, but merely entitled to the lead, copper, and iron contained in the veins below the soil. By a lease of the 31st of July, 1811, the appellants leased to Messrs. Alderson all their mines of lead and lead ore, with certain smelting mills and other premises therein described, and with proper powers for working the mines for twenty-one years, yielding and paying to the appellants a certain pecuniary rent therein mentioned, and also yielding and paying, rendering and delivering, at or in the smelting-mill or place situate within the manor of Healaugh Old Land and Healaugh New Land, where the same should have been smelted, one full fifth part, dole, or share of all the best ore, earth, lead, and one full fifth part, dole, or share of all the slag or slag earth lead that should be smelted from the ore raised from the mines and premises, the same to be delivered to the appellants free and clear of all dues, duties, costs, charges, and expenses, and from the poor-rates, and all other parliamentary and parochial taxes, &c., or in respect of the said lead or lead ore so to be delivered as aforesaid, or in respect of the said mines and premises. The lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessees to deliver the fifth dole or share as often as the quantity smelted should amount to 400 pieces, or at the end of every four weeks, at the option of the lessors. The rate was imposed upon the appellants in respect of the duty lead reserved by the above lease. This case was argued before us with great ingenuity and learning, and all the authorities that bear upon the point were cited in the course of the argument. The counsel in support of the order of sessions relied on Rowls v. Gell, Cowp. 451; Rex v. St. Agnes, 3 T. R. 480; and Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, 1 Maule & Sel. 612; and contended that this case was not substantially different from that of Rowls v. Gell, which had been recognized and followed in the two other cases, and that we ought not to depart from the principle there established upon nice and subtle distinctions. We are of opinion, however, that the present case is substantially different from all of them, and that a decision against the present rate will not break in upon the principle or overturn the authority of any one of them. In all those cases the rights of the parties rated, who were the owners or lessees of the mines, and of the adventurers or miners by whom the mines were worked, depended upon the particular custom of the place; and by that custom the parties rated were entitled to and received a certain portion of the mine or mineral in its primitive mineral state; and the Court, with perhaps some degree of refinement, considered the parties entitled to and receiving such portion of the minerals as being occupiers of a portion of the mines, that is, occupiers of land within the terms of the statute of Elizabeth; and in the case of the Baptist Mill Company, made, in part of the foundation of their judgment, that the adventurers did not stand in the relation of tenants to the owner of the mine, but in that of mere workmen. It is true that in Rowls v. Gells, the mineral underwent some sort of process before it was delivered to the plaintiff, for the case states that the duty of lot was the 13th dish or measure of lead ore got, dressed and made merchantable, which we understand to mean, made merchantable by scouring or dressing, a process thereby separating the ore from the other matters dug up with it from the mine, but not altering in any degree its original and native quality or character. The plaintiff in that case was also rated for cope, which is explained to be a small pecuniary payment; but no notice was taken of that circumstance in the argument or judgment, nor could it have been effectually taken, because if the plaintiff was rateable for the lot, he would of course have some rateable property within the parish, and consequently his action of trespass could not be maintainable. In the case of Rex v. St. Agnes (post, 163), the party was entitled to toll and farm tin, which are stated to be certain portions of the tin gotten. In the case of the Baptist Mill Company (post 164), the party was entitled to a definite portion of the calamine stone found or gotten within his district. In the present case, the rights of the parties rated, who are the appellants, and those of the persons by whom the mines are worked, depend upon the terms of a written contract, a lease; by the terms whereof the appellants have demised to others the whole of their mines and veins of lead and lead ore; and therefore they cannot be said to be the occupiers of any part, unless the render or reservation of one-fifth part of the lead to be smelted from the ore raised from the mines, can operate as an exception of a portion of the mines, or of the ore raised from them. A reservation of a part of the thing demised cannot properly operate as a render, and it may be admitted that it operates as an exception. See Co. Litt. 47 a, 142 a. But this is not a reservation of any part of the thing demised; it is not a reservation of any part of the ore, or of the mineral, in its natural and primitive state, but of something of a quality, name, and character, entirely different,—of a metal, produced from that mineral, by the laborious and expensive process of smelting, in which the native mineral is mixed with another matter, viz. with coal or charcoal; and by the effect of fire upon both, a metal is obtained, which is to be considered, for this purpose at least, as entirely different from either of the two, and rather as a manufacture of art and labour, resulting from the use and application of those materials, than the original earth itself. This lease puts the parties unequivocally in the character of landlords and tenants. The reasons upon which the Court relied in Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, do not apply to this case; but it is brought substantially within the principle of the case of Rex v. The Bishop of Rochester, 12 East, 353. For these reasons, we are of opinion that the appellants were not liable to be rated for the lead rendered to them under the lease.

Rex v. Welbank, 4 M. & Sel. 222. The defendants were rated thus: The trustees under the will of G. Browne for 2000*l.*, annual rent paid by the Arkengarthdale and Derwent Mine Company, for two-thirds of the Arkengarthdale lead mines, and other minerals and fossils (except coal), within the parish of Arkengarthdale, and also in respect of their being owners and occupiers of the moors and wastes within the manor of Arkengarthdale. Amount, 2000*l.*; assessment, 150*l.* (being 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound.) Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This rate appears to be ill on this single ground, that it is a conjoint rate in respect of two things, one of which is not rateable. The rent is clearly not the subject of rate, the other may or may not be. But it cannot be good as a conjoint rate." Le Blanc, J. "If these trustees had been rated in a large sum in respect of their being the owners and occupiers of the moors, commons, and wastes, equal to the profits they derive from the mines, perhaps the Court might have said, we will not enter into the question of proportion; but here the rate is imposed in respect of two distinct properties, namely, the rent, and the surface of the land."

Rex v. Tremayne, 4 B. & Ad. 162; 1 Nev. & Man. 194, S. C. The owners of certain lands granted to adventurers for twenty-one years a liberty to dig for manganese, and drive adits, &c., receiving 1*l.* 15*s.* for every ton of manganese raised during the term, free of all expense of raising and Where trustees were rated in one gross sum for rent of mines, and also in respect of their being owners and occupiers of the moors and wastes, the rate was held bad.

Where the owner, without rent, receives 35*l.* for every ton of manganese raised, he is not rateable.

dressings: all other mines and quarries were excepted. The adventurers opened a mine, and erected buildings, &c. at their own risk and expense; and they are in the exclusive occupation of them. Considerable quantities of manganese had been raised and sold by the adventurers, and 1*l.* 15*s.* regularly paid to Mr. Tremayne, the owner, for every ton so raised; and for this Mr. Tremayne was assessed. The form was: "For manganese dues." During the argument in support of the rate, it was urged that Tremayne had reserved every thing but a liberty to dig. [Parke, J. "What portion of the soil does Tremayne occupy?"] He occupies the land that produces the ore. [Parke, J. "He has no right to any portion of the rude ore;" and afterwards added, "The decisions relied on, proceeded on the ground that a certain portion of rude ore was reserved to the lord. If Tremayne, as is contended, is the occupier of the mine, then as such he is not rateable."] Argument: In Rowls v. Gells (post, 163), part was a pecuniary rent. [Parke, J. "That distinction was not pressed on the attention of the court, and the principles on which such property is rateable were not so well understood as they are now."] Without hearing the counsel on the other side, Denman, C. J. said "The rate cannot be supported. Here the landlord receives a rent, and is not the occupier of the soil, as in Rowls v. Gells. (a) In Rex v. St. Austell, (b) the landlord, by the express terms of the grant, was to be paid, not by money, but by the produce of a part of the mine, unless he elected to be paid in money: here he is paid by a sum of money in proportion to the weight of manganese raised, but he has no right to any portion of the ore. If we had any doubt we would permit the rate to stand, that the party rated might bring an action; but we have no doubt whatever, the order of sessions must therefore be quashed." Parke, J. "A party can only be rateable as the occupier of land. Here Mr. Tremayne is not the occupier of the soil; he receives a money rent. The case falls within Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret. (c) It is said that no interest in the land passed, but a mere authority to the grantee to dig. That may be so; and in that respect the case resembles Rex v. St. Austell (post, 165), but then it would follow that Tremayne is himself the occupier by his agents; and if so, as the owner of mines, he is exempt from rateability by the statute of Elizabeth and the nature of the property, and he could not be rated unless for dues. This case is distinguishable from Rowls v. Gells; (d) Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company; (e) and Rex v. St. Austell; (f) because here the owner is not entitled to any portion of what may be called the soil. The ground of the decisions in those cases was, that the reserved ore was a portion of the soil, and that the party entitled to it was therefore the occupier; but here, if he was not entitled to that portion of the soil, he is not the occupier; and then this is like the case of Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret, (c) where the reservation was not of a part of the soil, but of something different; and is distinguishable on that ground from Rex v. St. Austell, and the other cases, where a portion of the mineral was received." Taunton, J. "I entirely concur. The distinction is very subtle; but the cases may perhaps be reconciled by distinguishing between a reservation of a rent and a reservation of part of the soil itself. In the latter case the lessor has been considered as occupying that part of the soil which he has not reserved. Here there is a pecuniary rent reserved, and no reservation of any part of the soil. If we were to hold that Mr. Tremayne was rateable here, we should be shaking a well-established principle, that a landlord is not rateable for his rent. And, again: if Mr. Tremayne is to be considered as the occupier of the soil of the mine, and the lessees as his agents, he is not liable to be rated, because coal mines are the only mines mentioned in the statute of Elizabeth, which has therefore been construed to exclude all others." Patteson, J. "I am of the same opinion. The rule is very clearly laid

Rowls v. Gell, Cowp. 451. Rowls was lessee under the crown of all lead mines, with their appurtenances, within Wirksworth, with the lot or cope, and was assessed for the same in the rate of 500*l.* a year. The duty of lot payable to the plaintiff, as lessee of the crown, is the thirteenth dish or measure of lead ore, got, dressed, and made merchantable, at all the lead mines within the soke; and cope is sixpence for every load or nine dishes of lead ore raised at such mines. These duties are paid to and received by the plaintiff without any risk or expense in working the mines; and in that year wherein they were assessed, amounted to the clear sum of 500*l.*; but they are uncertain, and vary every year. All persons have a right to dig for and get lead ore in the said soke and wapentake, conforming to the custom there; and the miners are entitled to a certain quantity of land above and on each side of such mine. Lord Mansfield, C. J. delivered the resolution of the court. "The poor's rate is not a tax on the land, but a personal charge in respect of the land. The present is a personal charge by reason of the annual profits which the lessee of the crown receives out of the land, and which is not charged at all before to the poor. In general, the farmer or occupier of land, and not the landlord, is liable to this tax. For it arises by reason of the land in the parish, and the landlord is never assessed for his rent, because that would be a double assessment, as his lessee had paid before. Lead mines are not within the statute of the 43 Eliz. They are in themselves uncertain, and may prove unsuccessful to the adventurers. Taxes, therefore, upon the adventurers, would be hard, and they are therefore excused. But he, who in case they do prove of value, receives a stipulated benefit from the profit or value of them, is not excusable on the same ground, and therefore is expressly charged to the land-tax, as that falls upon the landlord. He is alike liable to the poor-rate for his visible real property in the parish; though, where the poor-tax is a charge on the lessee, the landlord doth not pay in respect of his rent. Where the adventurer or lessee of the mine pays nothing, it is no double tax in any light, because the lord pays, not for that which the lessee or adventurer is excused from paying for, but the lord pays for his own. It is not a mere casual profit, but an annual revenue, if any; and very different from the casual profits of a manor, which are not annual; for there may be none for years. But if the mine produces profit to the miner, the lord's share is certain, annual, and an annual rent is paid for it constantly. The miner is obliged to pay certain proportions to the owner of the land. What reason then is there to exempt these proportionable revenues? It makes no difference to the adventurer; it doth not prejudice or benefit him. But as such obligatory payment is in respect to the land, the landowner ought not to receive it clearer or neater than any other part of his estate, when he is at no trouble, expense, or possible risk. Therefore we are all of opinion that the plaintiff is liable to be rated for this property."

The lessee of a lead mine under the crown, with the lot and cope, is rateable in respect of the lot and cope.

The reason why mines are not in general rateable.

Rex v. St. Agnes, 3 T. R. 480. This was an appeal against a rate because Andrews and Donnithorne were not rated for their tolls of tin. The sessions quashed the rate. J. P. Andrews, as trustee of J. Enys, is entitled to a certain dish or measure arising out of certain lands and tin bounds in St. Agnes, called toll and farm tin; which toll is one-fifteenth part of all the tin gotten in the lands of J. Enys, within the parish of St. Agnes; and which said farm tin or due is one-twelfth part, after the said fifteenth part is deducted, for toll of all such tin so gotten within the tin bounds in the parish; and which said dues or duties are due and payable by the laws and customs of the Mines.

The lessees under the lord of the manor of lot and free share of all calamine raised within the manor, are liable to be rated to the poor, as occupiers of land in the parish where the manor lies; none of them being resident in the parish.

Stannaries of Cornwall, free and clear of all risk and deductions whatsoever; but they are uncertain, and vary every year; yet for many years last past have produced a considerable sum annually. And N. Donnithorne is entitled to a certain dish or measure called toll tin or dues, arising out of certain lands in St. Agnes, and due and payable in the manner before stated, and which toll varies, and is uncertain, but also produces a considerable sum annually. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said he approved of Rowls v. Gell and Rex v. Maddern, though these two persons would not be precluded from objecting to their being charged in any future rate on any ground they might think proper. But they were not parties to this case, and could not make any objection to the order of sessions, which was confirmed.

Rex v. Baptist Mill Company, 1 M. & S. 612. The defendants were rated in the parish of Rowberrow, for "lot, toll, and free share of the calamine, and for calamine yard and barn;—amount 9*l*." The sessions amended the rate by expunging "the calamine yard and barn," and assessing the "lot, toll, and free share of the calamine." They were lessees of a lot, toll, or free share of all calamine, or lapis calaminaris, raised in the parish of Rowberrow, in the proportion of one part in four; they are not, nor were at the time of making the rate, in the occupation of any land or buildings whatsoever within the parish of Rowberrow, unless the court shall be of opinion, as the sessions were, that the lot, toll, and free share above mentioned, are to be considered as land; all the lessees reside in Bristol; they run no risk, nor incur any expense whatever, and have, since the commencement of the lease, received a quantity of calamine, of considerable value, as the lord's lot, toll, or free share. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If these lessees of lot, toll, and free share are rateable at all, it appears to me they must be rateable as for property falling under the description of land. There appears to me to be a demise of a specific portion of the produce of the land, or in other words, land itself, free from risk or uncertainty; it is by the express terms of the finding stated to be an interest without risk. We might, otherwise, have been pressed with the question, whether the naming coal mines in the statute, was, according to the rule, expressio unius exclusio alterius, to all intents an exclusion of other mines; or was only put for example, as the naming a class in the statute of circumspecte agatis (2 Inst. 487): for certainly the judges who have held it to amount to the exclusion of other mines, have generally coupled it with this reason, that other mines are subject to risk. Now here the portion of calamine is divested of risk; it is the clear profit to which the lord is entitled, independent of any contingency; the whole is raised by the labour of the adventurer, and, when raised, the lord may be considered as working with the adventurers by the hands of the labourers; but, when raised, the lord's share redounds to him. That constitutes land, and may be fairly construed as such within the meaning of this statute. The case of Rowls v. Gells (ante, p. 163), and the other cases, do not admit of any distinction comprehending this case. This is not merely a demise of a personal chattel, of the ore after it is gotten, but of the ore which is to be gotten, and which is part of the solid mass of the land; therefore, under that description, it is assessable in the hands of the occupier." Le Blanc, J. "I concur in opinion with my lord, that this property is rateable to the poor. In Rowls v. Gells, and Rex v. St. Agnes (ante, p. 163), the rate was confined to the person in respect to the toll-dish of lead and tin raised; here the owner of the land is entitled to a certain portion of the ore when raised, which he lets, or allows persons to stand in his place as to that share: and we will not inquire whether this were a legal demise, for he authorizes them to receive, and they do receive it. They stand, therefore, in the situation of the lessee in Rowls v. Gells, and the person entitled in Rex v. St. Agnes. But subsequent cases have been cited, in which it is supposed that the authority of Rowls v. Gells and Rex v. St. Agnes has been disturbed; which supposition is only raised by laying hold of particular expressions of the court to be found there. The cases of Williams v. Jones, and Rex v. Nicholson are totally different; for those were the profits of a ferry, arising out of a right to convey passengers over a river: it was impossible in those cases to say that the persons were occupiers of any thing but the boat and tackle in which the passengers were conveyed, in the same manner as a stage-coachman is the owner of his coach; it was therefore impossible to make the doctrine of Rowls v. Gells bear on those cases. Viewing all the cases on the subject, and the principle upon which Rowls v. Gells was decided, and likewise the public convenience, as it regards this species of property, and not seeing that the original construction on the words, occupier of land, may not comprehend a person so far an occupier as to receive a portion of the land discharged of any risk, I cannot say that this company is not rateable."

Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion. I cannot distinguish this from the case of granting a share in the land, which is not co-extensive with the entire interest. It is not doing any violence to this lease to consider the lessees under it as occupiers of land. I lay out of consideration all the cases in which it has been holden that adventurers are not liable." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Austell, 5 B. & Ald. 693; 1 D. & Ryl. 351. T. Carlyon, Esq. appealed against the following assessments:—Rates on tin and copper dues, and water-courses: T. C. for Crinnis copper dues—annual return, 4080*l.*; amount taken at two-fifths, 1632*l.*; assessment at 3*s.* in the pound, 244*l.* 16*s.* The sessions struck out this assessment. Mr. Carlyon was not an inhabitant of St. Austell, nor the occupier of any land or other property therein, unless he was deemed to be such occupier in respect of the dues: by indenture made 12th January, 1811, he granted unto Rowe, &c., full and free liberty to dig, work, mine, and search for tin, tin ore, copper, copper ore, and all other metals and minerals whatsoever, in that part of his lands called Crinnis, in the parish of St. Austell, and the same to take to their own use: and within the limits of the set thereby granted, to make adits, shafts, &c., and to erect sheds, &c.: habendum for twenty-one years: yielding and delivering upon the grass, unto T. Carlyon, one full eighth part or share, or dish, of all tin, tin ore, copper, copper ore, lead, lead ore, and other metals and minerals which should, by virtue of the said indenture, be found and brought to grass within the limits thereby granted; the same having been first made merchantable and fit to be smelted and fairly divided, and laid out upon the grass at their cost and charges. It contained a covenant to pay or deliver unto T. Carlyon, or his toller or agent, the full and just one-eighth part, share, or dish therein reserved; or pay the same in money, at the election of T. Carlyon, at such best price as the same could be sold for, within two months at farthest, after such metals should be returned and sold. The lessees were to pay all rates and taxes imposed upon the tin, &c.; and the money which should arise from the sale thereof, or the dues thereby reserved, or upon T. Carlyon, in respect thereof, and indemnify him from the same; and would effectually work the premises in the most proper and effectual manner, with a sufficient number of labouring miners, unless prevented by water or other inevitable impediment. By virtue of this grant, the mine had been worked ever since the date thereof, by Rowe, without expense or risk on the part of T. Carlyon. Works had been made, and houses built by the adventurers at a great expense; and the mine and all workings had always been, and still are, in the sole occupation of the adventurers. The mine is now declining; but considerable quantities of copper ores had from time to time been raised from it: the whole of which, after undergoing several processes at an expense varying from 1*s.* to 6*s.* and 7*s.* in the pound, and even to 15*s.* when cleansed for the purpose of separating them from earth and other substances, and rendering them fit to be smelted, but by which process the original and native quality of the ores themselves is not altered, had from time to time, before the same were calcined or smelted, been sold or disposed of by the adventurers, without any controul or interference by Carlyon. No part of the ores raised had ever been rendered to Carlyon in kind; but in lieu thereof, one-eighth part of the money, arising from the sales of the ores, had been hitherto paid to him. He had been from time to time rated to the poor of St. Austell in respect of such one-eighth part of the money, and had paid the several assessments. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that in this case Mr. Carlyon is liable to be rated for the

The reservation of one full eighth share of all tin, tin ore, &c.; the same having been first spalled, picked, or otherwise made merchantable, and fit to be smelted, renders the owner rateable although the clause contained a power either for payment in ore, or the amount thereof in money, which had been acted upon; and the owner had received it in money.

dues in question. I am unable to distinguish this case from Rowls v. Gell (ante, 163), and Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company (ante, 164), and I think, therefore, that we ought to decide conformably to those authorities. Notwithstanding all that has been urged upon this subject, I cannot distinguish between the cases where a party takes an interest under a specific contract, as in this case, and where the adventurers work under a custom previously existing throughout a district. The case is distinguishable from Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret (5 M. & S. 139, ante, 160), in two respects; first, because there was an actual demise in that case of all the mines, under which the possession, both of that part which was worked and that which was not worked, passed to the lessees; but here there is an express reservation of part. In the second place, the share reserved to the lord in Rex v. Earl of Pomfret was of smelted lead; but here the reservation is of part of the native mineral. On these grounds, it seems to me that we ought to decide in favour of the rate; and I do that with the less reluctance, because it is still open to the party to institute an action against the person who may levy for the rate, and so to bring the question before a higher tribunal." Bayley, J. "We ought to lay out of the question the circumstance of this being a failing mine. For it is a beneficial and useful property to the person on whom this rate has been made; and it was held in Rex v. Parrott (5 T. R. 593), that a coal mine, whether profitable or not, is still rateable. In Rowls v. Gell it was first decided that a party was rateable for lot and cope. It is said, indeed, that the party rated there was a lessee. That distinction makes no difference, for if the lot and cope had not been rateable in the hands of the original proprietor, it would not have been so in the hands of his lessee. The true ground of that decision was, that the party was there considered as an occupier of the land. Rex v. St. Agnes (ante, 163), proceeded on the same ground; and in Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, (at the time of which decision this court were peculiarly familiar with the words of the act of parliament,) it was determined that the lessees under the lord of the manor of his lot and free share of calamine were liable to be rated as occupiers of land; and the decision went on the ground that the lord of the manor would, but for the lease, have been rateable for it also, for the court considered him as occupying the land by the hands of the adventurers. The latter were to work the mine, and he was to receive part of the ore gotten, and the court considered him as joint occupier with them. In Rex v. The Bishop of Rochester (ante, 159), the mine was let; and whether it was worked or not, still the bishop was completely out of possession of it, and the adventurers worked for their own exclusive profit. There the rent reserved was a money-rent, and the relation between the parties to the contract was that of landlord and tenant, and all that the bishop of Rochester had was the reversion of the land. But in this case the adventurers have not the sole and exclusive occupation of the mine; they have only the sole and exclusive privilege of working it. This is not the conveyance of any interest in the mine till it is actually worked. It is a privilege only to dig for ore, and then on the terms of leaving a certain portion of that ore in a fit state for the landlord. It seems to me, therefore, that, according to the authorities to which I have referred, Mr. Carlyon must, in this case, be considered as the occupier of land, and, therefore, that he is liable to the present rate." Holroyd, J. "In the view I have taken of this case, I entirely agree with the rest of the court. The case of Rowls v. Gell, although it was doubted by Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Parrott, seems to me to have been well decided. It was confirmed by Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, from which I cannot distinguish this case." Best, J. "If it were true that we must either overrule Rex v. The Baptist Mill Company, and the cases confirming the decision, or the case of Rex v. The Earl of Pomfret, I should be inclined to support the former. But it is not necessary, inasmuch as there is a material distinction between them. Here it seems to me to be clear that Mr. Carlyon is an occupier of land. All that the adventurers take under the indenture, is a license to enter and dig and take away the minerals. But when they have so done, and the minerals are brought to grass, a division of the ore between them and the landlord takes place. This, then, is the same as if, instead of working for wages, they worked on condition of being paid by a certain share of the produce." Order of sessions quashed.

Quarries.

Limestone mines are not rateable.

Mode of working interior of mine or quarry.

Rex v. Sedgeley, 2 B. & Ad. 79. The Earl of Dudley was rated as the owner and occupier of lands in Sedgeley, containing strata of limestone, and also of the works, by and out of which the limestone is raised. The strata of limestone under these lands lie in a sloping position, and one stratum distinct and a considerable distance from the other, in the same manner as coal, ironstone, &c. The strata frequently crop out or terminate at the surface, and deepen in the opposite direction. Those parts of the strata which cropped out or terminated at the surface were worked by the appellant and his predecessors, in quarries, by day-light or open work, following the course of the strata as far as was practicable. The continuation of these strata, which were being worked at the time the rate was made, lie forty or fifty yards below the surface of the ground, and are worked in large excavations by means of pit shafts, steam engines, &c., in the same way as coal, ironstone, and other minerals, and no part of the limestone is now gotten in quarries or by open work. The produce is in part drawn up the pit shafts and in part sent off by an underground level or tunnel. The only difference between these lime-works, and coal and ironstone mines, is the position of the strata, the material gotten out, and the greater excavations in the former than in the latter. The only way into these mines or works is down the shafts or through the tunnel, which is wholly underground, a great part of it being upwards of fifty yards below the surface of the ground, the deepest part being at its junction with that part where the limestone is gotten. The limestone is gotten in large excavations made in the direction in which the strata run, which excavations communicate by headways or gate roads with the bottom of the shafts, and the works are lighted by candles or lamps, no part being open to day light. The working requires experience, and is carried on by persons who are brought up to the occupation, and are called limestone miners or limestone getters, as often one as the other. The limestone is conveyed along railroads from the part of the works where it is gotten, through the gate roads, one part to the bottom of the pit shafts, and the other part to the level or tunnel. That which is taken to the bottom of the pit shafts is drawn up by the steam engines, and the other part is sent off in boats along the tunnel. By far the greater portion of the lime stone gotten by the appellant is sold in its raw state to the iron-founder for smelting iron, but a small portion (which by agreement is taken at a hundredth part of the whole) is burnt into lime by the appellant on his own land. There is no difficulty in finding the limestone, the pits being sunk, engines erected, and levels and tunnels made, and the mines or works opened and in operation. The profits of the appellant are certain, though subject to variations in consequence of frequent breakings off of the strata, and their being thrown into different directions, these increase the difficulty and expense of working, and render a fresh opening necessary. Limestone strata were lately found and worked in an adjoining parish to Sedgeley, at a depth of more than a hundred yards below the mines of coal and ironstone. The coal and ironstone in that case were first gotten, and afterwards the limestone was worked by means of the same pit shafts which were sunk down to it. "Mines of limestone" are expressly mentioned in local acts of parliament in the neighbourhood. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We are of opinion that this property is rateable. I take it to be now established as law that the expression of coal mines in the 43 Eliz. has the effect of excluding all other mines, according to the maxim 'expressio unius.'" And then after adverting to the dicta when this rule was established, and the inconvenience of departing from it, unless positively wrong, his lordship added, "the only remaining question will be whether the property in limestone which has been rated is properly a limestone mine; and this perhaps is rather a question of fact than of law. The description of the manner in which this stone is obtained and raised, namely, by sinking shafts perpendicularly down to the stratum, which lies considerably below the surface of the ground, and then working the stratum by roads and gateheads, with the necessary provision for air and raising the stone to the surface by machinery or carrying it under ground to a tunnel, is the exact description of the present usual mode of mining; of the mode used in obtaining coal; and of the mode used in obtaining ironstone. Ironstone obtained in this manner has been held not to be rateable: why then should limestone be? what difference is there between the two? the only difference that has been suggested is, that ironstone contains a quantity of metal and is procured for the sake of the metal it contains. But, if the existence of metal be necessary to constitute a mine, salt-works, from which salt is obtained in the way that this stone was obtained, will not be mines; nor indeed will coal-works be mines, though in the statute itself they are so called. And to deny the character of a mine to the works in question would, as it appears to us, be to depart from the ordinary and proper meaning of that word in the English language." Order of sessions confirmed.

Salt works.

Whether a mine or quarry is a question of fact for the sessions only.

Rex v. Dunsford, 4 N. & M. 349; 1 Harr. & Woll. 93, S. C. The appellant was rated for a stone quarry; it was freestone, and brought out through a level; the stone was raised by cranes and rollers; no steam engine was used, nor are there any air tunnels. Lord Denman said, "The case of Rex v. Sedgeley is quite binding; but the question here is whether the sessions have taken it as a guide. It is a question of fact. The principle of law is that the mode of getting, and not the nature of the article, constitutes mine or no mine. But it seems to follow that the application of the principle to the facts must be made by the sessions. If they had said this was a mine, I should have considered myself bound by the finding. They have confirmed the rate and called the property a quarry, but have also stated the facts and put the question whether this excavation is exempt. They have studiously avoided any finding. The answer of the court is, we will not decide the question of fact. The sessions must decide whether applying the rule of Rex v. Sedgeley this excavation is a mine or not." Little-dale, J. concurred that this was a question for the sessions. "I do not see how a court, as a matter of law, can say whether the mode of operation is such as to constitute the excavation a mine; that depends on a variety of circumstances. I see no difference between this quarry (for it seems to me to be clearly a quarry, though doubtful whether it is a mine,) and a common open quarry, except that it is underground and approached by a level; and I do not know how we as a matter of law can say this is a mine." Williams, J. concurred. Case sent back to the sessions.

Lime works, in Rex v. Alderbury, 1 East, 534, slate works, in Rex v. Woodland, 2 East, 16, potters' clay pits, in Rex v. Brown, 8 East, 528, were held rateable, but no question was made whether these excavations were mines or not.

Clay pits worked as Mines not rateable.

Clay pits worked as mines are not rateable.

Rex v. Brettell, 3 Bar. & Adol. 424. Appellants were rated to the poor for clay pits, which were excavations underground, from whence glass house pot clay, and fire-brick clay were extracted. A perpendicular shaft was sunk from the surface of the land for the purpose of raising the clay out of the strata, which was done by a steam engine and other mining apparatus. The excavations were like those which are made for working coal and metallic mines, and the mode of raising the clay was the same as that used in a coal mine. Held that the pits so assessed were clay mines and therefore not rateable. Lord Tenterden, "I see no reason for departing from the opinion which I delivered in Rex v. Sedgeley (ante, 166). The only difference between that and the present case consists in the character of the commodity obtained; the mode of obtaining it is the same. Now that case establishes that in order to determine whether an excavation in the earth constitutes a mine or not, we are to look to the mode in which the article is obtained, and not into chemical or geological character. Here, as in Rex v. Sedgeley, the substance is obtained by what in the ordinary and indeed in every sense of the word is mining. That being so, these clay pits are mines, and consequently are not rateable to the relief of the poor." Lit- tledale, J. "I think we are bound by Rex v. Sedgeley, and that the mode in which the substance is obtained decides the question." Parke and Patte- son concurred.

Clay Pits, &c.

UNDERWOODS SALEABLE.

The occupier of "saleable underwoods" is rateable. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1.

*Underwoods
(ante, 103.)*

Rex v. Mirfield, 10 East, 219. The woods which were the subject of the rate were underwoods, which were usually cut down once in twenty-one years, and then, and not before, were profitable to the appellant. That these under- woods had not been cut for ten years, and were then standing to complete the twenty-one years' growth. And the question was, whether these woods were saleable underwoods, and liable to be rated every year according to the annual average, or only when cut down and sold? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. delivered the opinion of the court, after consideration, that saleable means such as are intended for sale, in contradistinction to such as are to supply the land with estovers for fuel, and other purposes of the estate; and are therefore rateable at all times according to their value, in exact proportion with the rest of the property in the parish. If they were rateable only in the year in which they are cut, they would contribute a very different sum from what they would do by contributing annually." His lordship here illustrated it by figures, and added, "As to the rating it annually, the objection to this is, that the property ought not to be rated until the produce of it has been severed from the land, and until it has supplied the occupier with the means of paying. But it is not necessary that any of the profits should have been actually reaped or taken from the property during the period for which the rate is made; but the property is at all times rateable according to the improvement in its value, or in the rent which might fairly be expected from it. Instances continually occur in which the occupier is rated, though he has derived no profit during the period for which the rate is made. A new tenant upon an arable farm reaps none of the produce till the autumn, and yet he must pay up to that autumn, according to the value of his estate. He must pay beforehand for the future probable produce. His farm is constantly in a progressive state towards producing profit, and he pays for that progress. So underwoods are annually improving in value, and the rates the occupier pays is for that profit. This may be hard upon tenants for life; but if the law has thrown this burthen on the property, they must take it with that burthen. We think the law has so thrown it, and the property is liable to be rated at all times when rates are made."

Saleable under-woods are rateable at all times, and not only when they are cut.

Rex v. Ferrybridge, 2 D. & Ryl. 634; 1 B. & C. 375. Appeal against a rate in respect of woods and plantations. The appellant is the occupier of 650 acres of land. In 1785 and 1786, 340 acres of it were planted with oak and ash closely intermixed with Scotch firs and larches. At different periods portions of the firs and larches were cut down for the purpose of thinning the plantations, and some of these thinnings were sold under the name of fir and larch poles, but the greater part were used in the erection of buildings. Con- siderable thinnings of the firs and larches have been made within the last four years, and produced a profit; many of them were of the height of from thirty to forty feet, and contain from ten to twelve cubic feet of wood, and were thirty years old. This wood is cut without reference to size, in order to allow room for the ash and oak to spread. The purpose of introducing firs and larches into those plantations being to keep the same thick and sheltered, and to make a profit by cutting the firs and larches from time to time, when the oak and ash by reason of their growth require more space. Fifteen years ago, eighteen other acres, and five years ago, seventeen other acres of the said land were planted in a like manner. The eighteen acres have been thinned by cutting out a portion of the firs and larches, but no profit was derived by such thinning. The seven-

Firs and larch planted with oaks for the purpose of sheltering the lat- ter, and cut from time to time, as the oaks grow larger and requir- ed more space, but when once cut not growing again, and some of them yielding a profit by sale, are not saleable under- woods, the pri- mary object of planting them be- ing to protect the oaks, and not de- rive a profit from them per se by sale.

teen acres have not yet been thinned. The roots of the firs and larches which are cut die in the ground and produce no shoots. The whole of the land so planted hath been always rated to the relief of the poor. Bayley, J. "The stat. 43 Eliz. does not throw the charge of maintaining the poor on the occupiers of every species of property, but only on the occupiers of property of certain particular descriptions there specified, and amongst others it speaks of the occupiers of saleable underwoods. The legislature does not use the word "Underwoods" (a) per se, but "Saleable Underwoods:" and they have not in this or any former statute affixed any definite meaning to the term "Underwood." If they had done so, we should feel ourselves bound to adopt that as the meaning of the word in construing the present act. It has been said that all wood comes within the description either of timber or underwood, and therefore, that as firs and larches are not timber, they must be considered as underwood. It is not necessary to decide whether this be correct, because by the statute of Eliz. saleable underwoods only are subject to be rated to the relief of the poor. It may however be observed, that if all wood which is not timber be underwood, it would follow that horse-chesnuts, limes, plane-trees, and aspens would come within that description. Yet surely it would be a perversion of language to call such trees underwood. Generally speaking, that term is applied to a species of wood which grows expeditiously and sends up many shoots from one stool, the root remaining perfect from which the shoots are cut, and producing new shoots, and so yielding a succession of profits. It is probable that this is the description of coppice and underwood to which the statute of Eliz. applies. But it is not necessary to decide that, inasmuch as that statute also requires that it should be saleable underwood, and the word saleable in Rex v. Mirfield has been held to denote such as is intended or destined for sale, in contradistinction to such as is to supply the land with estovers for fuel and other purposes of the estate. It does not therefore come within the description of saleable underwood, unless the prospect of deriving a profit by sale was the main object of the proprietor when the plantation was made. There are some species of wood, such as hazel, which are valuable only as underwood, and which must have been planted originally for the purpose of acquiring profit by sale. But of all plantations fir is perhaps the least valuable, being chiefly, I believe, intended for protection rather than profit. It is found as a fact in this case, that these firs and larches were planted principally for the purpose of affording protection to the oak and ash. The latter were the most valuable. The firs too were cut only for the purpose of thinning the plantation. Some indeed were sold, but the greater part were used in the erection of buildings on the estate. Here the trees when cut were thirty feet high, which to be sure does not accord with one's notions of underwood. Nor could they have been planted with a view to a profit by sale, for if so the cuttings would have taken place with reference to their size; but here, the cuttings were made in fact merely for the purpose of thinning the plantations, and with reference to the main object, the encouragement of the growth of the more valuable trees. It is quite clear therefore that profit was not the sole or even principal object for which the firs and larches were originally planted; and if so, they are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of the 43 Eliz. It seems to me, that it would be most mischievous if property of this description was liable to be rated. It is an object of national policy to encourage the growth of timber. The grower of timber gives up a present profit with a view to future advantage, and it is fit that he should be encouraged to do so. If this be rateable property, then according to Rex v. Mirfield it must be rateable annually to the relief of the poor, though it should not happen to be cut more than once in twenty years. The grower therefore will be subject to an annual charge long before he can derive any profit. That would operate as a great discouragement to the growth of timber; and I cannot therefore think that the legislature meant to subject property of this description to such an annual charge. The object of the statute was to subject to the rate all such property only as yielded a succession of profits. I am therefore of opinion that whether this be underwood or not, at all events it is not saleable underwood, and therefore not rateable to the relief of the poor." Holroyd, J. "I am also of opinion that the firs and larches mentioned in this case are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of those words, as used in the 43 Eliz. The word "underwood" must be there taken to be used in its popular sense, unless it be shown to have been used differently by the legislature in that or other statutes. According to its popular meaning it signifies coppice, as distinguished from haut bois. Admitting however that these firs and larches were underwood, I am clearly of opinion that they are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of the statute of Eliz. The general subject of rate in that statute is property yielding renewable profits; for even coal mines when worked may be said in some sense to yield a succession of profits. Underwoods cut at stated periods do yield a succession of profits from time to time, though not annually. This is clearly not wood of that description, for when it is once cut, the root is destroyed, and there is no succession of profit. In order to ascertain whether these be saleable underwoods, the object for which they were planted and the mode of management ought to be taken into consideration. It appears that, upon one occasion, even though eighteen acres were cut, no profit whatever was thereby produced; and that is a strong circumstance to show that the cuttings were not made with a view to sale, but to encourage and preserve the oaks and ashes. I am therefore clearly of opinion that these firs and larches are not saleable underwoods within the meaning of the statute of Eliz." Best, J. "In the reign of Eliz., underwood was probably more generally used for fuel than at present; it yielded also a profit at certain intervals, though not annually. The legislature too have not merely used the term underwood, but have qualified it by the term saleable, thereby meaning that species of underwood which is generally produced for the purposes of sale, which is cut down at stated periods, produces new shoots, and thereby yields, at certain intervals, profits coming as nearly as possible to annual profits. It appears that the cuttings did actually yield some profit, but they are not necessarily rateable on that account. The property ought to be of that description for which the owner is likely to derive a profit. It has been argued, that as these firs would be titheable, they are therefore subject to be rated to the poor; but that by no means follows; for by the 45 Edw. III. c. 3, gros bois of the age of twenty years, in respect of which the clergy had claimed tithe under the name of sylva cædua, is expressly exempted from tithe. Now, gros bois means timber; and by the common law includes oak, ash, and elm; and by the custom of the country, in particular places, many other species of trees. Every species of wood which is not timber by the common law or by custom, is titheable. By the statute of Eliz. no species of wood but saleable underwood is liable to be rated to the relief of the poor. It has been said that sylva cædua and underwood are synonymous. In Ford v. Rackster (4 M. & S. 137), however, Lord Ellenborough, delivering the judgment of the court, says ' Sylva cædua and subbois, or underwood, are not it should seem from 45 Edw. III. synonymous; for subbois is stated to be comprehended in it, not to be it itself, or to be the same thing with it. Sylva cædua seems to comprehend, vi termini, besides underwood, all such wood as is occasionally cut, either in body, branch or root, with the statutable exception only of grosbois, properly so called, when it is of that age at which it is by the 45 Edw. III. exempt from being tithed, i. e. of twenty years or upwards.' Underwood therefore is one species of sylva cædua, and possibly the firs and larches may be sylva cædua, though not underwood. It is however unnecessary to decide in this case whether these firs be underwood or not. It is sufficient to say that they are not saleable underwoods, and therefore that they are not rateable to the relief of the poor." Order of sessions confirmed.

7. Exemption from Rates.

7. Exemption from Rates. (a)

Property, which may be the usual subject matter of a rate, is often exempted by express provision, and when the rates are so exempted, the land is so also; and when the value of land, &c. which had previously been rated, is enhanced in value by improvements carried on under acts of parliament, it is frequently provided that the rates shall be imposed according to its former and not according to its improved value. The following cases are examples of each of these classes.

Rex v. Calder and Hebble Navigation, 1 B. & Ald. 263. By 9 Geo. III. the proprietors were empowered to take certain duties "which should at all times thereafter be exempted from the payment of any taxes, rates, assessments, or impositions whatsoever." There was no express exception of the site as navigation, as land. The proprietors had built a house, which was occupied by their servant, and for which they agreed to pay a proportion of the rate, resisting only the rate upon the land covered with water and the towing path, from which the proprietors derived no emolument, but the rates, &c. It was held that the company were not rateable for the land; some doubt was entertained whether tolls were at that time held to be rateable eo nomine, it was not the intention to exempt them only; but as Abbott, J. observed, "It appears that the rates and duties form the only profit arising out of the land. These the legislature has expressly exempted from the payment of the poor rate, and the only profit of the land being exempted, it would be a strong thing to say that the land itself should still continue subject to the rate. At the time of passing this act tolls eo nomine were considered rateable, but I can find no instance in which the tolls having been rated, the land has also been rated in respect of any other profit;" and after alluding to the oldest case on tolls, Rex v. Wickham Market, 3 Keble, 540, and Rex v. Cardington, Cowp. 581, he added, "if, as it appears from these cases, by the word 'tolls' may be meant the thing in respect of which the tolls are received, the exemption of tolls by the legislature is an exemption of that in respect of which they are receivable."

Rex v. St. Peter, Worcester, 5 B. & C. 473; 8 D. & R. 331. By 31 Geo. III. c. 31, s. 77, it was enacted, that the company should be rated to all parochial taxes in respect of their lands, &c. in the same proportion as other lands lying near the same should be rated, and as the same lands would be rateable in case the same were the property of individuals in their natural capacity. By 38 Geo. III. c. 31, s. 20, it was enacted, that the company should be rated to all parochial taxes in respect of the lands used by them for the purpose of the said navigation, in the same proportion as other lands and buildings adjoining or lying near the canal should be rated; but it was further enacted, that it should be lawful for the company to agree with any owner of lands adjoining their lands, taken for the purpose of the said navigation, for an exemption from all rates and taxes in respect of such lands, and for charging the same upon the adjoining lands of such persons; and in all such cases the parochial taxes, rates, &c. which might be thereafter charged upon or payable in respect of the lands so taken for the purposes of the said navigation, should be rated and charged upon such adjoining lands, and upon the owners and occupiers thereof, and the lands of the company should be exempted and discharged therefrom. Bayley, J. "This case is perfectly clear. It is in effect decided by the Grand Junction Canal Company's case, and Rex v. St. Mary's, Leicester. (T. T. 57 Geo. III.) These cases establish this principle, that unless there is some clause of exemption in the act of parliament, land taken for the purpose of a canal will be rateable, not according to the value of the land when it was taken for a canal, but according to the value which it has acquired from being used for a canal. But canals are supposed to be of public benefit, and therefore some canal acts have clauses of exemption, so as to leave land upon the same footing in this respect, as it was when taken for a canal. It has been argued, that the true construction of the clause of exemption is that the rates are to be equally laid upon all the property assessed, and that it is only confirmatory of the common law in that respect; but in construing statutes, we are bound to give statutable effect to the words used, and so construing them, I think that the effect of the clause is to exempt the company from being rated for the increased value of the land by the canal."

Rex v. Grand Junction Canal Company, 1 B. & A. 289. A canal act directed that the company should be rated for all lands and buildings in the same proportion as other lands and buildings lying near the same, and as the same would be rateable if they were the property of individuals in their natural capacity; and a subsequent act directed that all rates and assessments upon the personal estate of the company should be assessed in every parish in proportion to the length of the canal in such parish. The Court of K. B. held that the company were liable to be rated for their lands, &c. only at the same value as other adjacent lands, and not according to the improved value derived from the land being used for the purposes of the canal. Bayley, J. "It has been urged, that the legislature only meant to regulate the proportion in which the canal was to be rated to the other lands adjacent, as, for instance, if those lands were charged with three-fourths of the rack rent, then the canal also was to be three-fourths of the value, and so on in any other case. Now it would have been quite useless to introduce any provision to that effect, for in all cases that mode must be adopted." Abbott, J. observed, "that the rate was bad in point of form, as the statute directs it to be made on the rates and personal estate of the company, and the present rate was on the canal."

Lands and buildings of canal company, when not rateable by improved value.

8. Rating under Local Acts. (a)

Besides the general provision in the statute of Elizabeth, local statutes are frequently passed, either enlarging or limiting the general statutes, and where the local act uses different language from the 43 of Eliz., the local act is not to be construed as if the language was the same. "The 43 Eliz. uses language applicable generally to the kingdom at large. The 9 & 10 Will. III. (local act) having in its view the town of Hull only, would naturally suit its expressions to the state and circumstances of that place: and where we find a deviation from the language in the stat. of Eliz. the presumption is, that the deviation was intended, and that a different system was thought better for Hull, and that the language therefore proper for such system was used." C. J. Abbott. Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 D. & R. 359. One ground of appeal in the above case was, that persons non-resident in Hull, but having shops and stock in trade, were not rated. Also, that the overseer had omitted owners and part-owners of ships, which were registered at Hull, and usually traded to and from that port, and were within the port at the time when the rate was made. The 9 & 10 Will. III. (local act) enacted, that the rates should be raised by taxation of every inhabitant, and of all lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriation of tithes, and all stocks and estates within the town. Upon this, C. J. Abbott, in giving judgment, said, "It was most properly admitted in argument that 'stocks and estates' must include all stock in trade and personal property. 'Stocks' could have no other meaning, and 'estates,' placed as it is in the clause, must extend to personal estates. This statute, therefore, has these two effective words, which are not to be found in the stat. of Eliz., and these two words remove from this case all distinction between residents and non-residents; under the stat. of Eliz. there is no word applicable to personal property: and it was only on the ground of his being an inhabitant that any owner of personal property could be rated for it, because there is no word to include him except the word inhabitant. Under that statute, therefore, there was necessarily a distinction between residents and non-residents, because the resident for his personalty within the place, the non-resident not. The distinction, however, under that statute applied only to those kinds of property which the statute did not specify: for the occupier of lands, houses, &c. and whatever the statute enumerated, was rateable, whether he were resident or not. In this statute, 9 & 10 Will. III., what was defective in this respect in the stat. of Eliz. is supplied: the rate is to be not only upon every inhabitant, but upon all stocks and estates. Lands, houses, and tithes, are all rateable according to the general principles of rating, whether the occupier be resident or not; and it is impossible upon this act to say that lands within the town shall be rated, but that stocks and personalty shall not. The stocks and personalty are not rateable elsewhere, they have all the benefit of the town, and there can be no reason, therefore, when there are words sufficient to include them, they should not be included. We are therefore of opinion that the stock in trade, and ships yielding profit, are liable to be rated."

Rex v. Manchester Waterworks, 3 D. & R. 20; 1 B. & C. 630. The facts of the case will be found in the judgment of the court delivered by Bayley, J. "The question in this case was, whether the company of proprietors of the Manchester and Salford Waterworks, in respect of their trunks, pipes, and other apparatus for supplying the towns of Manchester and Salford with water, were occupiers of what, within the meaning of the stat. 32 Geo. III. c. 69, is a tenement. By that act, the commissioners thereby appointed are authorized to ascertain the sum to be raised by rate or assessment on the several inhabitants of the town of Manchester and Salford, and to raise such sums from time to time, by rate or assessment, upon all the tenants and occupiers of all messuages, houses, warehouses, shops, cellars, vaults, stables, coach-houses, brewhouses, and other buildings, gardens or garden ground, and other tenements in the towns of Manchester and Salford. The statute does not adopt the language of the 43 Elizabeth, 'lands and houses,' but enumerates the different properties which I have specified. It does not use the word 'land,' which is used in the statute of Elizabeth, but it uses the word 'tenements,' which the statute does not use. The decisions, therefore, upon the statute of Elizabeth will not govern this case, unless the word tenements here is used in as comprehensive a sense as the word lands there. This is an act for cleansing, lighting, watching, and regulating the streets, lanes, passages, and places within the towns of Manchester and Salford; and a chief object appears by the recital to be, to provide for the peace, security, and accommodation of the inhabitants of the towns and of persons resorting to and passing through them. The occupier of any messuage, dwelling-house, warehouse, or other building, or of any other tenement within either of the towns, of the yearly value of 30*l.* is a commissioner. The word 'tenement' occurs in this part of the act, and is altogether associated with words which denote buildings. Section 39, which gives the power of rating, directs the commissioners to ascertain every year the sums to be raised by rates on the inhabitants of Manchester, and by rates on the inhabitants of Salford, as if inhabitants were to be the persons rated; and in addition to such words as denote buildings, and the general words tenements, introduces the words 'gardens and garden grounds, and other tenements.' By sect. 40 the demand of the rate is to be left at the dwelling-house or tenement occupied. And by section 43, it is recited, that several messuages or dwelling-houses, warehouses, or other buildings or tenements in these towns, are let out in lodgings or tenements to divers tenants, and that it would be difficult to rate the occupiers, or recover their rates, and provision is made for rating the landlord of every such messuage, &c. of the yearly value of 4*l.* 10*s.* or upwards, which shall be so let. These are some of the instances in which the word tenement is used in this act; and from these instances and the object of the act, it may be collected in what sense it uses that word. The omission to use the obvious and general word 'lands,' and yet introducing 'gardens and garden-grounds,' implies, that 'lands' in general were not intended to be rated. The object of the act was, to give security and accommodation to the residents and to their property. The inhabited houses, therefore, and every thing connected with residence or trade, as they were to have the advantage, were to be liable to the charge. The houses, warehouses, shops, and all other buildings, were to be rated, because they all had protection. But why were gardens and garden grounds to be included, if lands in general were not? Possibly, because the produce thereof was of value, and was a probable object of depredation, and the general lighting and watching of the towns would give so much additional protection to this species of property, as might properly make it the subject of charge. Gardens, therefore, and garden grounds, may, on this account, be distinguished from other descriptions of land, and may be subjected to this charge, whilst land in general is exempt. Pasture ground, for instance, stone quarries, and other kinds of real property, though included in the 43 Elizabeth, as affording income, and supplying, therefore, the means of contribution, are omitted in this act, because such property derives no equivalent or material protection from it. Upon the ground, therefore, that this statute does not use the comprehensive word land, and uses the word tenement in a very limited sense only, and not in a sense to include the property in question, we are of opinion that this property was not liable to be rated, that it ought to be expunged from the rate." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Mosley, 3 D. & R. 385; 2 B. & C. 226. The lord of the manor was rated under the same act for market sites and profits. The market was held in the open street, and it was contended that this was a tenement. But the court said, "The meaning of the word tenement, as used in this act, had been under their consideration on a former occasion; and that they were satisfied that it was intended to be applied to those things only which were ejusdem generis, with those particularly enumerated, and was not intended to be used in the larger sense sometimes given to it; that the subject of the present rate, not being of the same nature as any of the descriptions of property specified in the act, was not liable to be rated." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Trustees of the Streets of Shrewsbury, 3 B. & Ad. 216. This was an appeal against a paving rate, assessed on appellants as occupiers of gas pipes. Case:—The company was established, and empowered to break the soil and lay pipes, &c. by 1 Geo. IV. c. lvi. By the paving act of 1 & 2 Geo. IV. it was enacted, "that the charges and expenses of lighting, paving, cleansing, watering, watching, widening, altering, improving, and regulating the said streets, squares, highways, lanes, and other public passages of the town of Shrewsbury, and otherwise putting this act into execution, shall at all times be borne and defrayed by the tenants or occupiers of all the houses, shops, malt-houses, granaries, warehouses, coach-houses, yards, gardens, garden ground, stables, cellars, vaults, wharfs, and other buildings and hereditaments, not only within the outer gates and walls of the said town of Shrewsbury, but also within any part of the said town which the river Severn encompasses, meadow and pasture ground excepted." And the trustees under the act were empowered to make rates upon the tenants and occupiers of all such messuages, houses, shops, malthouses, &c. (as before, with the same exception,) for the purpose of defraying those expenses. In pursuance of the power so given, the company were rated as above mentioned. They have no property within the outer gates and walls, or within any part of the town encompassed by the Severn, except the pipes and apparatus specified in the assessment. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "It was admitted that if this had been a poor rate under the statute of Elizabeth, there could have been no doubt that the Gas Light Company would be liable; nor can there be any doubt that the word 'hereditament,' in its large and extensive and ordinary sense, will include the ground and soil in the several ways, lanes, and other places in which the pipes and apparatus belonging to this company are fixed. But it was contended, that the term as here used, was to be construed with reference to the words among which it was found, and must be applied to hereditaments of the same kind as those particularly enumerated, such as coachhouses, gardens, and so on; and reliance was placed on a case decided not long ago, Rex v. The Proprietors of the Manchester and Salford Waterworks (ante, 174), where the word used was 'tenement,' which is also a term of very large import. In that case it was held by the court that the word should be restrained in construction to tenements of the same kind as the particular ones before enumerated; but there is in this act a circumstance which was not found in the other, the exception, namely, that the act shall not extend to meadows and pastures. Now it is certain that meadows and pastures would have fallen within the meaning of the word 'hereditament,' if they had not been excepted; it was argued, therefore, that this special exemption of meadows and pastures showed that the other word had been previously used in its larger sense. On the other hand it was contended, that these words had been introduced merely ex majori cautela. Upon the best consideration we have been able to give this case, we are of opinion that we ought not to consider the exception of meadow and pasture ground as made only for greater caution, but are bound to look upon it as introduced by way of special exception, and so to construe the clause: and, consequently, every thing not so specifically excepted must be understood to fall within the general liability. We therefore think that the court of quarter sessions were wrong in striking out the company's name from the rate, and that the rate on them ought to have been allowed." Order of sessions quashed. See also Brown v. Lord Granville, 10 Bing. 70, the import of the word building in a local act for paving.

Land adjoining the canal, which has not been converted into a wharf, cannot be rated as such, although timber is permitted to be landed there.(a)

Rex v. Regent's Canal, 9 D. & R. 760; 6 B. & C. 720. By the act under which the company was established, it was provided that lands, whether covered with water or not, and dwellings, wharfs, &c. belonging to the company, should be rateable to the poor, the lands according to their quality, and the dwelling houses, wharfs, &c. according to the nature and respective uses thereof, in like manner as lands, houses, wharfs, &c. of a similar kind in the several parishes where they were respectively situated. The company had, on the margin of a large basin, a piece of land adjoining the private yard of a timber merchant. This piece of land next the basin consisted of natural ground; it was not faced with brick or timber, and the ground below the water gradually sloped down to the bottom of the basin. The timber merchant landed his timber upon this piece of land, and it was there marked and measured by the revenue officers. No acknowledgment or rent was paid to the company for this privilege of landing the goods there, but their rates and duties were increased, a greater number of ships entering the basin in consequence of this privilege: held, that this piece of land was not a wharf within the meaning of the act of parliament, and was not liable to be rated as such to the relief of the poor.

Rex v. Maddermarket (ante, 118). By a local act inhabitants were rateable for money out at interest: but it was held that money vested in the stocks is not within the statute.

Local act of London Dock Company.

Rex v. St. George, Middlesex, 9 East, 127. By the construction of the local act 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 47, the London Dock Company are liable, even during the first twelve years of their establishment, to be rated for the fair annual value of their warehouses and other works which are finished and productive, though all the works directed by the act be not completed. But such completed works must, under such circumstances, be rated for their value at the rate of 8½d. in the pound, such being the rate calculated upon by the legislature to raise 139l. 8s. 7d. per quarter upon 3966l., the average rental for ten years preceding the act of parliament, on the premises destroyed by the company in making their works: and which quarterly sum the company were, at all events, bound to pay to the parish during the twelve years, or until the works were completed, whether those works were productive or not. But when productive beyond that sum, the surplus is to be taken in the first instance by the company, in order to reimburse themselves what they may have advanced to the parish to make good the deficiencies, before any such productive surplus existed, until the company shall be reimbursed; therefore, until these purposes are effected, a rate made on the increased real value of the dock premises at more than 8½d. in the pound, or a rate of 8½d. in the pound on the old average value of the premises before the erection of the company's works, and below the increased value of the new works, is in either case bad.

(a) Another question discussed at great length in this case was, whether the land was rateable at its improved value.

9. Amount of Rate or Principle of Valuation.

The Court of King's Bench has at all times manifested an indisposition to interfere with the relative proportions in which rates are made upon different persons, or different kinds of property, that being the more immediate province of the magistrates in sessions. The following rules, however, may be deduced from the decisions on this subject:—1st, That the rate must be regulated by the improved value of the property; 2nd, That although the rent reserved cannot be always relied on, yet the annual sum at which the property would let for is the fair criterion of its value; 3dly, That one species of property may be fairly assessed in a different proportion of its rent, from the proportion in which another is assessed in the same rate; and, 4thly, That the court will presume a rate is equal, unless it appear to the contrary.

Re v. T. Mast, 6 T. R. 154. T. Mast appealed against a poor rate for the parish of St. Neot's, in which he was rated at the real annual value of his estate; W. Fowler was rated at 29*l.* per annum, but the real annual value in consequence of improvements made by him was 175*l.*; he occupied, besides, other lands and property in the parish, for which he was rated after the same manner. Gorham was rated in the same way. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The assessment for the relief of the poor should be so contrived that each inhabitant should contribute in proportion to his ability, which is to be ascertained by his possessions in the parish. Every inhabitant ought to be rated according to the present value of his estate, whether it continue of the same value as when he purchased it, or whether the estate be rendered more valuable by the improvements which he has made upon it. If a person chose to keep his property in money, and the fact of his possessing it be clearly proved, he is rateable for that: (a) but if he prefer using it in the amelioration of an estate or other property, he is rateable for the same in another shape. In whatever way the owner makes his estate more valuable, he is liable to contribute to the relief of the poor in proportion to that improved estate; and whatever be the proportion of rating in a parish, whether to the full value or otherwise, the rate must be equally made on all persons; there cannot be one medium of rating for one class of persons, and another for another class. Now here it appears that the appellant was rated at the full annual value of every thing that he possessed, while other inhabitants were not rated at a third of their estates. With regard to the discretion of the justices, if indeed they had confirmed this rate generally, without disclosing to us the grounds on which they proceeded, we could not have quashed the rate, because the inequality does not appear upon the face of it; but they have disclosed those grounds; and, on the case as stated, it is impossible not to say that they have made a mistake. This rate appears so defective throughout, that it cannot be amended." Ashhurst and Grose, Js. of the same opinion.

A person must be rated according to the improved value of his property.

Re v. Miller, Cowp. 619. Lands with buildings thereon, and a well of mineral water thereout arising, called the Cheltenham Spa, were demised to W. M. at a yearly rent of 100*l.* The lands and buildings, independent of the well, were of the annual value of 20*l.* Rent paid for the mineral water 80*l.* And he was rated to the poor at 100*l.* a year. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "Nothing can be plainer than the present case. This is not a rate upon the profits of the well, but upon four acres of land, let to the defendant at 100*l.* a year; and the value arises partly from the buildings, and partly from the spring that produces the mineral water. Therefore, the profits of the spring are part of the produce of the land. In Worcestershire and Cheshire, where there are salt springs, the rent of the land is increased considerably on that account. So here, the consideration of the well increases the rent. It is part of the produce of the land, and therefore, as such, ought to be rated.

The profits of a mineral spring are part of the produce of the land, and therefore the occupier is rateable upon the value of the whole.

(a) This is an erroneous supposition, ante, 117.

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

Land, the annual value of which is improved by a spring of water, is liable to be rated at the aggregate annual value of the land and spring together.

Rex v. The Governor and Company of the New River, 1 M. & Sel. 503. In a rate for Little Amwell, the New River Company were rated for land in Chadwell Mead. They were incorporated June 21, 1619, for conveying water from a spring in Chadwell Mead, in Little Amwell, to London and Westminster; and they supply a great part of the same with water, by a cut called the New River, leading from the spring to a reservoir at Islington, whence it is distributed by pipes over the metropolis, and from which the company receive considerable profit beyond the sum at which it is rated. The water of the New River is derived part from the river Lea, and part from a spring inclosed in a basin in Chadwell Mead, which is the subject of the present rate, and is the freehold of the New River Company, and in their occupation. The quantity of water derived from each of these sources is nearly equal. That part of Chadwell Mead which is occupied by the company, and is the subject of the rate, contains about two acres: it consists solely of the basin in which the spring rises, and so much of the cut from thence called the New River as lies in Little Amwell, where it joins the water taken from the river Lea, and from thence it continues to run with the said water so taken from the river Lea in one joint course to Islington. The land alone, without the spring, and not covered with water, is of the annual value of 5*l*. The whole profits of the company arise from the sale of the water, no part of which is distributed, nor is any money received for it, nor is any due in Little Amwell. If the advantage which the company derive from the use of the spring, may by law be included in the rate upon the land, the land and spring of water together are of the annual value at which they are rated. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is a rate imposed on land, including a spring of water, as being of the aggregate annual value of 300*l*. The case finds 'that the land alone, without the spring, and if not covered with water, is of the annual value of 5*l*.; but if the advantage which the company derive from the use of the spring may by law be included in the rate upon the land, the land and spring together are of the annual value at which they are rated.' Much of the argument against this rate seems to be built on a perversion of the terms of this finding. I am at a loss to discover between this case and Rex v. Miller (ante, 177), any other distinction than that which has been alluded to, viz. that the quality of the two waters is different, the one being a mineral, and the other plain water. It has been assumed, indeed, that in that case all the profits were received in the parish where the land lay: but the case does not warrant any such conclusion; and we know perfectly well that the mineral water in question, in that case, is disposed of in great quantities at distant places. It may be said also, that in this case the owners of the property are also the occupiers, but there the property was in the occupation of a tenant; to which the answer has already been given, viz. that the circumstance is no otherwise material than as it affords a more easy criterion for ascertaining the annual value. Here, then, is land and water inclosed in a basin upon the land, which falls within the legal description of land; and although a considerable portion of the profits of such water is derived from pipes, through which it is distributed to other places, yet it is found that the water has a certain ascertained value at the fountain-head: and in cases of this kind it is enough to ascertain the local value of the property, without inquiring whether it yields a return on the spot. A degree of confusion has arisen from comparing this to the case of tolls upon canals, whereas they are essentially different; for tolls are an incorporeal hereditament, and have no local corporeal existence, so as to be the subject of rate until they become due. Then we have been pressed with the case of Rex v. Sculcoates, where it was holden that the commissioners in whom a drainage was vested were not rateable; but that was so holden upon the principle that where there is not a scintilla of benefit derived from the occupation, the property is not rateable: there the commissioners were merely servants of the public, having no divisible fund in their hands either as trustees or to their own benefit, and deriving no advantage from the drainage; and the only persons benefited by it were the owners of lands in other parishes. In Rex v. Bath it was assumed in the decision that the water was the subject of rate in the parish where it was impounded in the reservoirs; the only question there being, whether the corporation were rateable in that parish to the extent of all the profits received by them, or whether the rate ought not to have been framed with reference to the contributory profits derived to the company in other parishes. Without going farther into the several cases upon this subject, and feeling no disposition to overrule the case of Rex v. Miller, I think there is no doubt that the sessions have come to a right decision. The property is locally valuable in the parish where it is rated, although that value is derived from extrinsic circumstances, and although the profits are actually received elsewhere." Grose, J. "I cannot distinguish this case from the common case of land on which corn grows. In such case the land is assessed according to its value, and that value is estimated according to that which it produces: so here the land produces a spring, and the value of it is to be computed according to the benefit which the spring produces to the company." Le Blanc, J. "The question is, whether in estimating the value of land, something which is peculiar to the land, and makes it more profitable to the occupier than if it were away, can be taken into consideration: and that question has already been determined in Rex v. Miller, which, as it seems to me, cannot be distinguished from the present case. Does it make any difference to the occupier whether he takes the profits of his land by selling the produce on the land itself, or by disposing of it elsewhere? Suppose a man occupying land out of which he digs brick-earth, and converts it into bricks in an adjacent parish, would he not be liable to be rated as for brick land, in the parish where the land lies, in the same manner as if he had sold the bricks in that parish?" Bayley, J. "I think it is clear that the company are liable to be rated for the spring, which is part of the produce of the land. The company have the means of carrying this produce to market, where it affords a beneficial return; and it can make no difference whether they convey it along a canal, or in carts and waggons, or by any other mode. Perhaps it may be fair that in fixing the quantum of rate on this property, respect should be had to the benefit which results to the company in the different parishes through which the water is conveyed. But this observation applies only to the quantum, with which we have nothing to do." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Gloucester, Cald. 262; 1 Bott, 163. The mayor and burgesses were possessed of a house in St. Nicholas, in Gloucester, and erected a machine in a street by the said house for weighing waggons, carts, &c., for which they received 2d. per ton for what was weighed there, but persons were not compellable to weigh their carriages, &c. The steelyard, part of the said machine, was in the said house, which was called the engine-house: the house, exclusive of the profits of the machine, was worth 5l., and the profits worth about 40l. a year: the mayor and burgesses were rated "for the machine-house, 24l.: 1l. 16s." Per Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The nature of the thing shows that the machine is annexed to the freehold; they are one entire thing, and are together rated by the common known name (the machine-house,) which comprehends both. The steelyard is the most valuable part of the house: the house therefore applied to this use may be said to be built for the steelyard, and not the steelyard for the house: the clear profits are undoubtedly rateable, but a liberal allowance ought to be made for wear and tear, labour and attendance." Willes, J. said, "If the machine be appurtenant to the building, its clear profits are undoubtedly rateable. If a billiard table stand in a house, and the house should, in respect of such table, let at a higher sum, it would be rateable, while the table continued there and was so let at the advanced rate." Rate affirmed.

In Rex v. Hogg, Cald. 266; 1 T. R. 721. A house wherein there was a carding machine for manufacturing cotton, being let together with the machine as one entire subject, (the building being worth only two guineas a year by itself, but together with the machine rated at 36l.,) was properly rated as one subject. The engine was not fixed to the premises, but capable of being removed at pleasure. Ashhurst, J. considered the house and engine as one entire subject, and therefore rateable as such. Buller, J. considered them

The Hull Dock Company were held rateable in respect of the tonnage duties received by virtue of statute 14 Geo. III. c. 56, although it appeared that the expenditure in repairs during the period for which the rate was made exceeded the amount of the duties received.

Rex v. The Hull Dock Company, 5 M. & Sel. 394. The dock company at Kingston-upon-Hull were rated for dock and wharf, 2240*l.* in the parish of Sculcoates. By 14 Geo. III. c. 56, for making public quays or wharfs at Kingston-upon-Hull, for the better securing his majesty's revenues of customs, and for the benefit of commerce in the port, for making a dock with works, for the accommodation of vessels using the said port, the dock company were required to make a dock, and also a quay or wharf and other works, and to repair and cleanse them. Duties on ships lading or unlading in the port, and wharfage rates on goods landed on the quay, were granted to the company. Besides the emoluments arising from the dock dues, the company derive considerable emoluments from the rent of warehouses which they have erected, agreeably to the directions of the act. The warehouses are in the town of Hull, and not in the parish of Sculcoates. Two-third parts of the dock are situate within the parishes of the Holy Trinity and St. Mary, in Hull, and the remaining third is in the parish of Sculcoates. In 1814, the dock company rebuilt the lock and entrance basin, under the advice of their engineer. On the 2d of May, 1814, the ships were removed out of the dock, and the execution of the works commenced, and continued until the 31st December last. The expenditure of the company in respect of these works, from the 20th of September, (being the day when the rate was made to commence,) to the 31st of December following, amounted to 5483*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, and the receipts of the company, in respect of the duties and wharfage rates during the same period, amounted only to 2963*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.* The further estimated expenditure of the company in respect of the works, from the 31st of December to the 20th of March, (when the six months for which the rate was made would expire,) would be 1193*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, and the receipts of the company, in respect of the duties and wharfage-rates, would be 97*l.* only. The chief part of the expense was incurred in respect of the lock and entrance basin, which are situate in the town of Hull, but are essentially necessary to that part of the dock which is situate in Sculcoates. The parishioners of Sculcoates have, in assessing the dock company to previous poor rates, annually made a deduction of the company's expenditure in respect of the ordinary repairs of the dock, from the gross annual amount of the company's duties and wharfage rates. The sums stated in the account of expenses were all necessarily expended in making the repairs in question, and provided the dock company is entitled to deduct the same from their gross receipts, there are not any net proceeds whatever for the use of the company. The company did not, in consequence of the rebuilding of the lock and entrance basin, become entitled to any greater or other duties or wharfage rates than they were before entitled to. The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the company were liable to be rated for the six months for which the rate was made. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The act of parliament does not require the company to make a dividend at all events, nor does it say that they shall divide to the extreme limit of the monies received. Suppose an application to be made to this court for a mandamus, to compel the company to make a dividend of the whole balance in their hands, if the company were able to show that the expense of the necessary repairs of the basin for the ensuing year would be likely to absorb the whole or the greater part of this balance, would the court grant such a mandamus? And if the company were in any year to do so improvident an act, as to make a dividend to the uttermost penny, not reserving any thing for prospective demands; as there is a provision in the act, (s. 37,) enabling them to make calls from the proprietors for the necessary purposes of the act, the consequence would be, that instead of reserving out of the funds in hand, sufficient means to cover these expenses, they must call upon the proprietors to refund what they had improvidently distributed among them. The language of the act is, 'that the company shall have power to make such calls of money from the proprietors of shares, to defray the expenses of, or carry on the works authorized by the act, as they from time to time shall find wanting and necessary for those purposes.' So that the company may call upon the proprietors of shares to refund what they have received. There is no question as to the rateability of this property; it has very properly been admitted that it is rateable. The question therefore is, whether a rate can be imposed in respect of property which is generally rateable, but the profits of which, owing to certain incidental and necessary expenses, have been for a time exhausted. As to which it is to be observed, that a rate is not always imposed on property in the particular year in which it makes a productive return, for if that were so, there could be no rate in respect of saleable underwoods and the like property, which are productive only after a series of years, except in those years in which the profits arose. But in Rex v. Mirfield, (10 East, 219, ante, 169,) it was decided, after much consideration, that saleable underwoods were rateable annually, in proportion to their value, though they should happen not to be cut down more than once in twenty-one years. In the present case, the company have no money in hand, but they have a property which upon an average is productive. To hold that in every case where property is rateable, an account is to be taken for the particular period for which the rate is imposed, of the precise amount of its productiveness, and that if there is the smallest decrease, the rate is to be reduced pro tanto, would, in my judgment, be infinitely inconvenient. Every house must then have its separate assessment, in order to let in the particular deductions belonging to each; and this mode of assessment would be open to every species of fraud, because the largest deductions would be attempted to be thrown on periods of the greatest pressure. It appears to me that this rate is well imposed, and that the average profits of the company are not liable to be merged in the partial expenditure of any particular period. I think therefore that this order ought to be confirmed." Bayley, J. "The case does not state that this property, communibus annis, is not productive of profit, but only that during this particular period it was not profitable. It appears that the company are in possession of property which is prima facie, rateable; the rate therefore is well imposed, unless the property is to be exempted on the ground of its not being profitable at the particular period for which the assessment is made. As to which Rex v. Mirfield is a clear authority, that the principle which is to govern is, whether it be profitable communibus annis." Abbott, J. "I think the company cannot relieve themselves from this rate, by showing that on occasion of some extraordinary expenditure during the particular period for which the rate is made, that which would have gone to the account of profits has been otherwise consumed. To hold any such rule, would in my opinion be productive of great inconvenience; for by the same rule I know not what answer could be given to the farmholder or householder, if they were to claim a similar exemption, because of the extraordinary expense which they had incurred in the maintenance or improvement of their house or land." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion. The only doubt which I have entertained has been on s. 22, which obliges the company to repair the dock and other works; and if under that section the specific rates had been, so far as they were required, appropriated to that purpose only, I should have entertained considerable doubt whether any property vested in the trustees could properly be made the subject of rate, beyond the surplus which might happen to remain in their hands, after satisfying the expenses attending the maintenance and repair of the works. But the case is not so, for I find by s. 42 the duties payable by virtue of the act are vested in the company as their own proper monies, and for their use, in consideration of the expenses incurred by them in making and maintaining the works; and by s. 53 they are to take an account annually, and declare what dividend shall be made; so that they stand in the same situation with any other canal company."

Rex v. Tomlinson, 4 Man. & R. 169; 9 B. & C. 163. Upon a recent valuation of the rateable property in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, the occupiers of farms, lands, tithes, and market tolls were assessed respectively upon two-thirds of their estimated net yearly rent, payable to the landlord and the occupiers of houses, potworks, and every other description of building; and the occupiers of collieries and coal mines were assessed upon only one-half of their estimated net yearly rent, payable to the landlord. The lessees of certain water-works were assessed in respect of their water-works and water-pipes upon only one-half of their estimated yearly rental value; but the rate was amended as to them, by assessing them upon two-thirds of such rental value, being in the same proportion as land. The question for the court was, whether, as the occupiers of farms, &c. are assessed upon two-thirds of the rent, the occupiers of collieries and coal mines ought not to be rated in the like proportion upon two-thirds of their rent. Bayley, J. "The question was whether a rate was upon an unequal and consequently an unjust principle. It estimated the value of all property according to the net yearly rent; but it fixed the rate according to two-thirds of the rent in the case of lands, &c., whilst it fixed it according to one-half only in the case of houses and collieries: and whether this made the rate necessarily unequal was the question. It was not disputed but that the sessions were in general the proper judges of value; but it was insisted that if they fixed the proportions by a wrong rule, this court might and ought to interfere. And if the proportions have been fixed by a rule which we can pronounce to be wrong, we are of opinion our interference is requisite. Can we then pronounce the rule acted upon in this case to be wrong? It was almost admitted that there might properly be a distinction in the proportions between houses and land, though it was urged there could not be one between land and collieries; but when the consequences of this admission were seen, the admission was withdrawn. We are however of opinion that there may properly be a difference in the proportion of the annual rent upon which houses and lands are to be rated, it belonging to the sessions to fix the precise proportion. We also think that houses and collieries may be classed together. The rate is to be made on the occupier according to the annual profit or value which the subject of occupation produces; and it makes no difference in the amount of the rate whether the occupier be tenant or owner. In the case of houses, the annual profit or value is always a part only of the annual rent paid to the landlord. Some portion of that rent ought to be set apart to form a fund for repairing or rebuilding, when necessary; in other words, to maintain or reproduce the subject of occupation, a much less part, if any, of the annual rent of land is wanted for either of those purposes, and the whole in some cases, or nearly the whole in others, is annual profit or value. This difference is mentioned by Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Brograve (infra). In the case of collieries also, a part of the annual rent must be appropriated to repair and replace the works and engines, and in that respect they are in the same situation with houses. The sessions were therefore warranted in making a difference in the proportion of rating, with reference to annual rent, between houses and collieries on the one hand, and land on the other; and it is impossible for us to say that the proportion which they have fixed is not the right one. It was urged in the argument that the sessions have fixed the rate according to unequal proportions of the net rent, and it was contended that by the words 'net rent,' was meant the clear annual rent, after every deduction, including therefore the part to be set aside for repairs and reproduction of the subject of the rate, and consequently that the rate was unequal. But we cannot attribute any such meaning to these terms for the purpose of invalidating the rate. We think they mean only that part of the rent which goes into the pocket of the landlord, and which is the rent paid by the tenant, after deducting taxes and charges of collection; and this construction will support the rate. If the rate has been according to different proportions of the clear annual profit or value of the subject of occupation, it would have been otherwise; but annual rent is not annual profit or value. We are therefore of opinion that the order of sessions should be confirmed." Order of sessions confirmed.

In Rex v. Brograve, 4 Burr. 2491; 1 Bott, 112; it was moved to set aside an order of sessions confirming a rate, on the face of which houses were rated at one half of the annual value, and land at three-fourths. But by the court: "Here is no apparent inequality, and we are not to presume it. There may be reason to make a difference between lands and houses. For there are several charges incident to houses which do not fall upon lands, to lessen their yearly value.

Rex v. Sillis, Cald. 522. If the proportions in which real and personal property are assessed be apparently unequal, (viz. one-half of the realty and one-fortieth of the interest of the personalty at 4 per cent.) the court will quash such poor rate.

Rex v. Butler, Cald. 93; 1 Bott, 114. A rate was made, but no difference made in assessing tenements and farms consisting of land and cottages or dwelling-houses; whereas the clear income of the former was at 1*d.* in the pound, to three farthings in the pound of the latter. It had been the custom to rate them nearly in that proportion until 1778, when, at a public vestry, both lands and houses were rated at 1*d.* in the pound, and the same had since continued. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The question before the court is, does the rate upon the face of it appear to be equal or unequal? Unless it is manifestly unequal, the court will presume it equal. Circumstances may vary the value of different estates; and if this plainly appear, then what is said in Rex v. Brograve (ante, 182,) applies: but you take advantage of an obiter saying of the court in that case, when the true legal ground of the authority is decisive against you." Rate affirmed.

Rex v. The Inhabitants of Fakenham, 4 Dougl. 261. Where an act of parliament directs a rate to be made on the occupiers of land, &c., and on all persons using and having stocks and personal estates, &c., in equal proportion, according to their several and respective values and estates, and it appears that the rate was not made in equal proportion, it will be quashed.

Rex v. The Birmingham Gas-light Company, 1 B. & C. 506; 2 D. & R. 735; D. & R. M. Ca. 385. By a rate for the parish of Birmingham, the Birmingham Gas-light Company were assessed in respect of dwelling-houses, shops, buildings, land, and premises, and the trunks, pipes, and other apparatus for the conveyance of gas belonging to the company, being fixed in the ground, in the parish, and the profits therefrom within the parish; the annual value being stated at 800*l.* and the assessment 20*l.* Case:—By the 59 Geo. III. the Birmingham Gas-light Company were incorporated to supply the town with gas, and, with the consent of the commissioners for lighting and paving, to break up the soil of the streets, &c., for laying down pipes and other apparatus for the conveyance of gas from the manufactory to the houses, &c. of the consumers. The company purchased the premises mentioned in the assessment, and placed therein gasometers and other apparatus necessary for the manufacture of gas and coke (part of which apparatus is affixed to the freehold, and part is not), and also, by the consent of the commissioners, broke up the soil in the streets, and fixed therein the apparatus for the conveyance of gas. The company carry on a considerable manufacture of coke and gas upon these premises, and derive a profit from the sale of each of these articles. The coke is conveyed from the premises of the company to the purchasers by carts, and the gas by trunks and pipes. Gas and coke are both manufactured from coal at a great expense of fuel, and the machinery and apparatus necessary for the manufacture of these articles are also very expensive, and require frequent renewal. Stock in trade, and the profits of the manufactories in the parish of Birmingham, are not rated to the poor in this rate. If the court should be of opinion that the profits accruing to the company from the sale of gas are not rateable, or that they can only be rated as the profits of a manufactory, the rate ought to be amended by inserting the sum of 200*l.* therein in lieu of the sum of 800*l.*, and the sum of 5*l.* in lieu of the sum of 20*l.* Abbott, C. J. "The question proposed to us is not, whether the company be rateable for their buildings above ground, or their pipes under ground, but to what amount they are rateable. I am of opinion that the amount in respect of which they are rateable is the sum for which the buildings, trunks, and pipes would let to a person who is willing to carry on the business there. It appears from the statement in the case, 'that the premises, trunks, and pipes, if rated to the poor as other lands in the parish, that is, if the profits arising from the sale of gas are not included, are worth 200*l.* per annum, but

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

An equal rate on lands and houses is not so manifestly unjust that the court will quash it.

But where by a local act land and stock are to be rated in equal proportions, an unequal rate will be quashed.

Under an act of parliament the Birmingham Gas-light Company purchased lands and buildings, and there placed retorts, &c., necessary for the manufacture of gas and coke, and fixed in the streets trunks, pipes, &c., for the conveyance of gas. The company derived a considerable profit from the manufacture and sale of coke and gas. The stock in trade, and the profits of other manufactories in the parish of B. were not rated to the poor: Held, that the company were not rateable to the amount of the profits of their trade, but for a sum equal in amount to that for which the premises would let to other persons willing to carry on the same business.

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

if the profits are included, then they are worth 800*l.* per annum.' I am of opinion that the profits are not in this case rateable. If they were, a blacksmith's forge might be rated, not at what it would be let for, but at the sum which the blacksmith acquires by it. The distinction between the cases cited and the present is, that here the profits rated are those of a manufactory, which are obtained by applying the skill and industry of man to capital brought from a distance for that purpose. They are very different from the profits of canals or of mineral waters, which are natural products arising within the parish, and rendering the land in which they are situate the more valuable. For these reasons I am of opinion that the rate must be amended by inserting 200*l.* as the value of the buildings and pipes, and 5*l.* as the sum to be paid." Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the company ought to be assessed, not at a sum equal to the annual profits of their trade, but at that sum which the buildings, trunks, and pipes would produce to them if let at an annual rent to persons willing to carry on the trade, or that rent which the company would be forced to pay if the premises were not their own property." Holroyd, J. "I am of opinion that the rate ought to be amended, as it is stated that in this parish the profits of other manufactories are not rated. In the case of a canal, the land and the water are rated; and here an attempt is made to rate the pipes and the gas; but that cannot be done. The proper criterion for the rate to be imposed upon these lands and buildings is the rent at which they could be let to a person willing to carry on the business." Best, J. "I think that such a construction ought to be put upon the statute of Eliz. as to include the largest portion of productive property, because I feel that the poor-rate, and various other burdens, press heavily upon the landed interest. This rate, however, cannot be supported; it is an assessment upon the profits of trade. Now that is not a correct mode of assessment. Besides, a rate even upon the net profits of any undertaking must be unjust and unequal in a place where similar profits and stock in trade of others are not generally rated. The profits of this company are very different from the tolls of a canal. When a canal is once formed and filled with water, it produces to the proprietor, without any thing further being done, a permanent profit in the shape of tolls; but the gas company could obtain no profit by merely laying down these pipes for the conveyance of gas through the streets. The gas must afterwards be manufactured by the company at a great expense, and sent through those pipes before they will be entitled to any recompense. The gas company stand, therefore, in the same situation as any other manufacturer who produces by artificial means a saleable commodity. Now the profits of such a manufacturer could not, with justice, be rated to the relief of the poor in a parish where other profits and other stock in trade are not rated. I think, therefore, that the company ought to be assessed at that annual sum for which the premises and pipes would let to a person willing to carry on the trade." Rate amended.

Where some lands are rated according to the rent, in rating other lands according to their value, the poor-rate must be deducted.

Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 5 D. & R. 359; 3 B. & C. 516. The appellants were assessed in respect of profits arising from dock dues and wharfage rates received by them. Their net profits for the year amounted to 8900*l.*, after making a fair allowance in respect of repairs and all other expenses incidental to and necessary for making the property profitable, but without making any deduction for poor-rate, which, according to their assessment, amounted to 2225*l.* In giving the judgment, Abbott, C. J. said, "As to the question, whether the rate upon the company should be according to the full amount of their profits, without making any deduction for the sum they are liable to pay for poor-rate, we think that the rate ought not to be so made. This property is to be charged according to its worth and value, in like manner and in the same proportion as other real property is charged in the same rate. If other real property is charged only at three-fourths, or any other part of its value, after making deductions of the same nature as those which have been made in the case of the company, (a) the company ought to be charged

(a) The proportion here would not be necessarily correct. If the landlord keeps the premises in repair, the rent would be less than the rateable value, for an allowance was made to the company in this case for repairs.

in the same proportion. If other real property is charged according to the rack-rent actually paid by the occupier, and according to a rent so estimated, where the occupier is not a tenant at such rent, there will even be in those cases a virtual allowance in respect of the poor-rate, such rent being in reality only part of the worth or value of the land. The whole worth or value is made up of what is paid in rent and what in rates, and other outgoings. Land intrinsically worth 40*l.* can only pay a rent of 30*l.*, if it is to pay 10*l.* per annum in other ways; and in estimating a rent to the landlord and tenant, look to the value of the thing on the one hand, and the outgoings on the other; and the outgoings must be deducted from the value before the rent can be fairly fixed. Wherever, therefore, the rate is according to the rent, which is generally the case, an allowance is virtually made for the poor-rate; and if this rate is made according to the rent, the company should have the allowance. The mode of estimating the allowance is a different thing; that suggested in the case is clearly wrong, for if 2225*l.*, the present rate, is deducted from the 8900*l.*, the rate upon 6675*l.* only, will leave part of the rateable proportion of 8900*l.* (a) free from rate. The allowance must be so made that the sum upon which the annual rates are made may, with the amount of the rates, make up the 8900*l.* The sum, according to the present rate, will be 7120*l.*, and the sum to be paid by the company will be 1780*l.* The process of calculation must be adapted to the amount of rate. It is sufficient for us to propound the rules, leaving the process of calculation to others."

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

Rex v. Attwood, 9 D. & R. 328; 6 B. & C. 277. The appellant, Attwood, was proprietor and occupier of a coal mine, upon which he had expended 10,000*l.* in planting the mine and setting it to work. It had been at work one year and a quarter, and the value of the whole coals raised did not exceed 5000*l.* The full value of the annual produce, after deducting expenses of working, amounted to 428*l.* 9*s.*, at which sum it was rated. The other appellants were rated for other mines upon the annual sums paid by them for royalties or rent. Abbott, C. J. "We are all of opinion that the owner and occupier of a coal mine should be rated at such sum as it would let for, and no more. As to the other points, the first was, that the rate should not be imposed upon the coal produced, because that was part of the realty. It is the first time that such a proposition has ever been submitted, although many coal mines in various parts of the country have constantly been rated, and the argument in support of it is wholly untenable. The legislature has expressly made coal mines rateable, and they must be rated for what they produce, viz. the coals. Slate quarries and brick earth are also exhausted in a few years, but nevertheless the rate is always imposed upon that which is produced. The other argument was, that the rate could not be imposed until the expenses of planting the mine had been recouped. But I cannot discover any distinction between expenses incurred in bringing a mine to a productive state, and in building a house. The attempt to distinguish them is perfectly novel; and if a house is to be rated as soon as built and occupied, it must follow that a coal mine is rateable as soon as it is set at work and produces coals, although it may happen that the expense of sinking it may never be recovered. If the tenant of a mine expends money in making it more productive, that is the same as expending money in improving a farm or a house, in which cases the tenant is rateable for the improved value." Order of sessions amended (c) as to the rate upon Attwood, and confirmed as to the residue of the rate.

Rent the criterion without reference to the sum expended in rendering it so profitable.

Rex v. The Trustees of the Duke of Bridgwater, 4 Man. & R. 143; 9 B. &

The occupiers of a canal, who are also carriers, are rateable only according to the tonnage.

(a) It will be observed that the court were of opinion that the assessment of 2225*l.* on the company was too large, and ought to be reduced to 1780*l.* This latter sum only thus became payable out of their profits, and ought to be deducted.

(b) This was before the 41 G. III.

(c) Attwood was rated at the full annual value, which would include both the landlord's and tenant's profit. The other appellants were rated only according to the rent, and therefore the rate on Attwood was reduced to the sum it would let for.

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

Rent not a certain criterion of value.

Actual rent a criterion, unless it can be clearly shown that it is too small. Interest of a mortgage paid by the lessees is in substance rent. The annual value communibus annis, and not in a particular year, is the criterion.

C. 68. In this case the defendants were rated in proportion to the full amount of the gross receipts as owners as well as occupiers of land taken for the canal, towing paths, warehouses, wharfs, &c.; whereas the occupiers of farms and premises in the same parish were rated only in proportion to the rent paid by them respectively. Bayley, J. in delivering the judgment of the court, said, "The same principle of rating must be adopted whether the party be owner and occupier, or occupier only. I lay out of consideration the fact of the trustees being carriers, because their occupation only is to be considered. The profits of carrying goods are the profits of their trade. The tonnage is the profit of the land occupied by them. The principle of our decision in this case is, that the same rule is to be applied to all occupiers, and that the rent or sum at which the land will let, is the criterion of the value of the occupation." (Rex v. Adames, 1 Nev. & M. 662; 4 B. & Ad. 61, post, 189; Rex v. Joddrell, 1 B. & Ad. 404, post, 191.)

Also in Rex v. Skingle, 7 T. R. 549; 1 Bott, 218; 1 Nol. P. L. 225; on an appeal against a poor rate, the ground of the appeal was, that William Hill and John Bull were under-rated, the lands in their occupation being now of a greater annual value than the rent reserved by the lease, and the rate was made according to the rent: but the court were of opinion that the case was too clear for argument, and that the rate ought to be regulated according to the improved value. So tolls are to be rated according to the annual value at which they might be let, though prima facie actual rent is the criterion, but not absolutely so. (1 Bar. & Adol. 932, 933.)

The King v. Chaplin, 1 Bar. & Adol. 926, H. T. 1 Will. IV. This was an appeal against a rate of the parish of Tetney, wherein the appellants were rated in the sum of 14*l.* 19*s.* 10½*d.* upon the annual rental of 299*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* as occupiers of lands taken from the Louth canal towing paths, &c. with the profits arising therefrom. Rate confirmed. Case:—By 3 Geo. III. c. 39. commissioners were empowered to make a navigable canal from the river Humber to the river Ludd, and to continue the same to the town of Louth, and for that purpose to borrow money upon the security of the tolls. The commissioners borrowed 28,000*l.* at 5*l.* per cent., and expended the same in making the canal. This act was repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 30, and the canal, with the soil thereof, and the towing paths, locks, and appurtenances were by the last act invested in commissioners, who, in pursuance of a certain provision therein, demised the canal and soil thereof, together with all the tolls, dues, proceeds, and forfeitures imposed and authorized by that act, to the appellants for a term of forty-eight years from the 24th of June, 1828, subject to the payment thereout of the interest on the above sum of 28,000*l.* in default of which payment the commissioners might require the collectors to pay such interest out of the money that might then be in or might thereafter come to their hands; and the collectors were to be allowed such payment in account with the lessees, the tolls being appropriated in the first instance to the satisfaction of this charge. The canal passes through twelve parishes, and one fifth of the whole extent lies in the respondent parish of Tetney. The lessees are further liable to all the expenses of maintaining and repairing the canal and its works, collectors' salaries, &c. (The case then went into details as to the expense of the canal, the receipts, and the mode of collection.) The annual earnings of the whole canal are 3418*l.* 8*s.* of which the proportion corresponding to the length of the canal in Tetney, namely one fifth, would be 683*l.* 13*s.* 7*d.* The annual earnings of the canal in Tetney are 788*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.* or three thirteenths of the earnings of the whole canal, upon which three thirteenths the present rate was imposed. If the court should be of opinion that the rate ought to be imposed on one fifth instead of three thirteenths, the rate was to be reduced accordingly. The appellants claimed deductions on account of the following sums: 1400*l.* being the interest on the mortgage debt of 28,000*l.*; and 341*l.* 16*s.* 9½*d.* as the reasonable profit to a tenant to occupy, at ten per cent. on 3418*l.* 8*s.*; a further deduction on account of average annual expenses for repairs, &c. which on the whole canal amounted to 881*l.* and of which 163*l.* were incurred in the appellant parish; and a further sum on account of poor's rates and other parochial taxes, which on the whole extent of the canal amounted to about 100*l.* If the court should be of opinion that the appellants were entitled to any of these deductions the rate was to be reduced accordingly. The preamble of the 9 Geo. IV. recited that the commissioners under the former act having borrowed the said sum of 28,000*l.* and having incurred considerable expense, and being in want of funds, entered into an agreement with C. Chaplin, Esq. (for the good of the navigation, and as the only means of raising the necessary funds,) that the canal and navigation, subject to the orders of the commissioners as in the act mentioned, with all the tolls arising from the said navigation, and all the estate and interest of the commissioners therein, should be vested in the said Mr. Chaplin, his executors, &c. for ninety-nine years; and he thereby agreed to accept the trust, do the works to be ordered by the commissioners, pay all the interest of the money borrowed, at five per cent., by half-yearly payments, and make some other advances. The statute then recited, that doubts had been entertained as to the authority of the commissioners to make such agreement; that the said C. C., and those claiming under him, had, after the making of the said agreement, and on the faith of it, expended considerable sums (in particular, two sums of 7000*l.* and 4000*l.*) on the navigation; that the agreement was entered into by the commissioners bona fide for the benefit of the public, and was in fact beneficial to the public at the time it was made; and the benefit accruing therefrom to the said C. C. and those claiming under him had not been disproportioned to the risk run by the said C. C.; that the agreement had been acquiesced in by all parties for nearly fifty-one years, and it would be for the benefit of the public that the same should be sanctioned for the remainder of the said term of ninety-nine years, but subject to a reduction of the tolls of the navigation by one half, as to some articles, and one third as to others. The commissioners under the new act were therefore empowered to grant to the persons entitled to the beneficial interest under the above agreement, and their executors, &c. a lease of the navigation and tolls for forty-eight years, being the residue of the term of ninety-nine years in the agreement mentioned; provided that the lessees for the time being should be subject to all the payments, rules, regulations, &c. mentioned in the former act. Under this enactment the demise stated in the case was made. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The rate must go back to be amended. In cases of this kind, which have hitherto occurred, the canal has been in the hands of the original proprietors, and the object has been to ascertain what it would be worth to let, which has sometimes been difficult. But here the canal is actually let, and therefore there is no occasion to speculate on that point. The 1400*l.* interest is in effect a rent, though there is no actual payment to the lessors. The tolls are appropriated to the purpose stipulated by them, and in case of default they may call upon the collectors to make good the payments out of the monies in their hands. It was contended that this was a beneficial lease; but taking the several recitals of the act 9 Geo. IV. c. 30, together, I think that does not appear. The commissioners in the first instance assigned the canal to Mr. Chaplin for the good of the navigation, and as the only method for raising the money necessary for putting it into repair; and the act recites that he and those claiming under him did in fact lay out considerable sums of money upon it, that the bargain was beneficial to the public, and is likely to be so if continued; and it states that the benefit as yet derived from it by the lessees has not been disproportioned to the risk originally run; but lest the lease should become too beneficial during the remainder of the term, the tolls are reduced. I think then there is no ground for saying that the 1400*l.* is not such a sum as may be properly considered the value of the navigation, and as three thirteenths of the profits arise in the parish of Tetney the rate must be laid on three thirteenths of 1400*l.*" Littleton, J. "I am of the same opinion as to the argument which is drawn from the amount of present earnings. It might as well be said that where a farm is let, the year's profit on each particular crop is to be taken into consideration in fixing the rate. In the case of a property so lately let, the actual rent is the best criterion of value; perhaps it might be otherwise, if the letting had been ten or twenty years ago, and it appeared that the profits had very materially increased or diminished since." Taunton, J. "The tolls of a canal, like the profits of land, are to be valued at what they would let for communibus annis, and it has I believe been held (a) that no difference is to be made, because in one particular year there was a loss. In ascertaining what a property is worth to let, the best criterion in general is what it actually does let for. When, therefore, in this case, the value was estimated from the earnings of a single year, a wrong basis of calculation was taken. Here is a rent spreading itself over a period of forty-eight years, and the produce in one is no proof what the average will be. Here in point of form there is no rent, but a payment of interest; it is however in the nature of rent. Instead of the lessee's paying 1400*l.* a year to the proprietors, and their handing it over to the mortgagee, the lessee pays it to the mortgagee at once." Patteson, J. "Where the land is not actually let, it becomes necessary to calculate what a tenant would pay for it where it is let. The actual rent is the criterion, unless it can be clearly shown that that is too small; but that is not ascertained by enquiring whether the property was more or less beneficial in a particular year." Rate to be amended.

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

The machinery is rateable in addition to the mine rent, as constituting the improved annual value, if the whole would let for the entire sum assessed.

Annual value part only of annual rent.

Rex v. Lord Granville, 4 Man. & R. 171; 9 B. & C. 188. The defendant was lessee and occupier of a coal mine or colliery. In this year he paid royalty to his landlord for a mine rent upon the coals raised the sum of 802*l.* 8*s.*, which sum was a fair mine rent for a tenant to pay upon the quantity of coals raised in that year. The defendant some time since erected several steam and other engines in the colliery, which are used solely in draining the mines and raising the coals to the surface; he also laid down a railway, which is solely employed in facilitating the carriage of the coals. This forms the machinery with which the mines were worked, and without which there could be no coal raised and no mine rent, and it was assessed at 187*l.* 10*s.*, in addition to the above sum, making together 989*l.* 18*s.* It was calculated that this latter sum would be a fair rent for the whole colliery and machinery, if now let to a sub-tenant. Bayley, J. "I have no doubt that the defendant ought to be rated for his engines and railway. Whether the sessions have made proper deductions we are not to decide. The only point for our consideration is, whether the defendant ought to be rated for the engines and railway. If the owner had occupied the mine, he would have been liable to be rated according to the improved value of the property; and where the owner of a mine fixes an engine, or otherwise by expenditure of his capital raises the value of his property, he will be rateable for the value of the property so improved by his expenditure. If it be leased to a tenant who is to incur the same expenditure of erecting an engine, the owner will receive a less royalty; but as a greater quantity of coal will be raised, the tenant will be thereby remunerated for his expenditure, and I think the tenant being the occupier, is liable to be rated for such improved value." Littledale, J. "It is immaterial, with reference to rateability, whether the landlord or tenant erect an engine or lay down a railway. The bargain between the landlord and tenant may be varied on that account, but the occupier of the property is rateable in respect of its improved annual value." Parke, J. "The question left to us is, whether the defendant be liable to be rated for improvements? I think he clearly is. It is found by the sessions that the value of the property is raised by the improvements from 802*l.* 8*s.* to 989*l.* 18*s.* Whether the amount of the rate is precisely what it ought to be, it is not for us to determine. The sessions seem to have estimated the value according to the sum at which it would let to an undertenant. That perhaps may not be the correct principle on which such property ought to be rated. The annual value is part only of the annual rent: some portion of that rent should be considered applicable to repairing and replacing the engines. In Rex v. Tomlinson (ante, 181), this distinction was taken. The only question for us however is, whether it be right in principle to rate the lessee in respect of an annual value increased by reason of improvements made by himself? I think he was properly rated for the improved value." Order of sessions confirmed.

In Rex v. The Oxford Canal Co., 4 B. & C. 74; 6 D. & R. 86; 3 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 56, S. C.; the same principle of rating was directed to be observed with respect to the canal tolls, Abbott, C. J. saying, "As to the amount, it appears that other lands are rated according to the amount which would be obtained by letting them at a rent: this company therefore must be rated according to the same rule."

Rex v. Oxford Canal Company, 5 Man. & R. 100; 10 B. & C. 163. In fixing the amount of the rate for which the company was liable, the sum paid by the proprietors for the poor rate, the expense of collecting the tolls, of repairing the banks of the canal, and of supplying it with water, ought to be deducted from the gross profit. Upon this point, during the argument, Bayley, J. observed, "There can be no doubt the poor rate, the annual repairs, and the expenses of collecting the toll must be allowed. The sum which remains after making such deductions constitutes the net profit." Parke, J. "In strictness, all the profits ought to be rated, but inasmuch as tenants' profits in respect of other lands in the parish are not rated, the tenants' profit in respect of land occupied by the canal company ought not to be rated." It appeared that the annual repairs of that part of the canal situate in the parish amount to 20*l.*, the annual repairs of the whole line of the canal amount to 4000*l.*; and in reference to the question whether in fixing the rate there should be deducted that proportion of the whole sum expended in repairs, which the length of the canal in the parish of Foleshill bears to the whole line of the canal, or whether only the expense of repairs incurred in that part of the canal situate in Foleshill, Bayley, J. said, "The rate is to be in proportion to the value of the land in the parish where the rate is made: therefore all expenses incurred in repairing that part of the canal in that parish must be allowed." Littledale, J. "The banks in one parish may require more repair than in another, or there may be locks which require frequent repair; so that it may happen that a given part of a canal may yield no profit whatever." Counsel further urged that a deduction must also be made for the expense of supplying water for the canal. It is analogous to the expense of manure used in the cultivation of land. Without the supply of water, the canal can produce no profit whatever. The fair rent of land, is the value of the land after deducting the expenses of cultivation. Bayley, J. "There must undoubtedly be an allowance made upon that account; the quantum will be the question for the sessions. We can only lay down the principle. We never fix the quantum, unless the sessions tell us the principle upon which they have fixed the quantum, and their calculation appears to be erroneous." (See Rex v. Joddrell, 1 Bar. & Adol. 403, post, 191.)

Rex v. Adames, 1 Nev. & M. 162; 4 B. & Adol. 61. By a rate for the parish of Pagham the appellant, who was the owner and occupier of lands lying within a district of the parish called Pagham Level, was assessed at 312*l.* 14*s.* which was the amount at which the land would let for, making no allowance for the sewers' rate, which is a landlord's tax. Cur. ad. vult. Parke, J. "The question for the opinion of the court in this case, is in effect whether an occupier of lands in a district of the parish of Pagham which is liable to be flooded, and is protected from floods at a certain occasional expense (for that is the nature of the sewers' rate), ought to be rated at the same sum as the occupier of lands of similar quality and of equal annual produce, lying in the same parish, but not liable to the same expense. We are of opinion that he ought not. It is obvious that the average annual net profit of one description of land is not the same as that of the other; and both upon principle and authority we think the rate ought to be made in proportion to that profit. The statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, requires the churchwardens and overseers to raise competent sums, by the taxation of every occupier of lands, according to the ability of the parish: nothing is expressly said as to the principle upon which the rate should be made, but it is implied that it must be made with equality, and with some reference to the subject of occupation. Now it is quite clear it ought not to be made according to the profit derived by the occupier himself; for if that were so, the rate must vary according to the nature of the occupier's interest. An occupier who is tenant at will at rack-rent, and therefore receives a less share of the annual profit of the land than one who is tenant for years at a small rent, and still less than one who is a tenant in fee

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

In estimating the value of the tolls upon which the rate is to be made, deductions for repairs, expenses of collections, and other charges must be made from the gross amount of tolls received.

Reason for not rating all profits.

The expenses of the canal in each parish to be deducted.

Also of supplying water.

9. Principle of Valuation, &c. simple, and pays none at all, would be rateable at a less sum, a proposition which was never yet contended for. Again, it is quite clear that though the occupier is the person who nominally pays the tax, it is in reality paid by the beneficial owner, and is a charge upon the land. In proportion as the average tax which the tenant has to pay is greater, in the same proportion will he give less rent to the owner. Ultimately in the long run, this will always be the case; though when the tenancy is for a term more or less long, the burthen upon the landlord is postponed for a greater or less period. This being so, it follows that in order to make an equal rate, the nature of the occupier's interest must be disregarded, and the rate imposed according to some value of the subject of occupation. Usage and convenience have established this value to be not that of the estate or property itself, but that of the profit which is or might be made from the estate or property; and as it would be very difficult and extremely troublesome to ascertain the precise value of that profit during the time for which each rate is made, and in case of occasional profit both troublesome and unjust, (Rex v. Mirfield, 10 East 219, ante, 169; Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 5 M. & S. 394, ante, 179,) to make a rate for a large sum at one time and a small one or none at another upon the same land, the rule has been to assess according to the annual profit of the land; or, where the produce is not matured in one year, then upon an average of years, from which profit deductions are allowed for all the expenses necessary to its production. It is not material whether the whole or a certain aliquot part of that net profit be rated, provided all lands of the same description are rated equally upon that aliquot proportion of the profit; and in practice it is usual, and it is most convenient, to rate lands at the rack-rent which they would pay to a landlord, or some certain portion of it, the tenant paying all rates, charges, and outgoings; which is in effect rating according to a part of the net profit only; but provided it be the same aliquot part in all cases, it makes no difference. Further, if the subject of occupation be of a perishable nature or require an annual expense to secure its existence, an allowance ought to be made on this account, for the total annual profit is not the net annual profit; a part must be set aside for the restoration and maintenance of the subject of occupation. It is on this principle that buildings have been permitted to be rated at less in proportion than arable and other land. The cases, especially those of a more recent date, in which the principle of rating has been more fully discussed and considered, will be found to have established this rule of rating, which is, in other words, that all lands are to be assessed in proportion to the net rent which a tenant at rack-rent would pay, he discharging all rates, charges and outgoings. It may be sufficient to refer to the following authorities in support of this position. (Rex v. The Birmingham Gas Light and Coke Company, 1 B. & C. 506, 2 D. & R. 735; Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516, 5 D. & R. 359; Rex v. Attwood, 6 B. & C. 277, 9 D. & R. 328; Rex v. Trustees of the Duke of Bridgewater, 9 B. & C. 68, 4 Man. & R. 143; Rex v. Tomlinson, 9 B. & C. 163, 4 Man. & R. 169; Rex v. Lower Mitton, 9 B. & C. 810, 4 Man. & R. 711; Rex v. The Oxford Canal Company, 10 B. & C. 163, 5 Man. & R. 100; Rex v. Joddrell, 1 B. & Ad. 403) It remains only to apply the principle to the present case, and there can be no difficulty in saying, that land which requires some occasional expenditure to preserve it from being damaged by water, and to make it as productive as it is, would let for less rent than similar land which requires none, the tenant defraying amongst others that occasional expenditure. In other words, the net average annual profit of both is not the same, and consequently the rate ought not to be the same. In the course of the argument a question was asked, whether land of which the land-tax was redeemed ought to be rated higher than land of the same quality, which is still chargeable with the tax. The answer is, that it ought not: the annual net profit of both is the same, though such annual profit in the latter case is liable to a tax from which it is by law exempted in the former. The rate in the present case must therefore be amended. I must add that this is the judgment of myself and my brothers Littledale and Patteson, who heard the argument. Lord Tenderden was of a different opinion." Taunton, J. then said that he concurred in the judgment delivered.

Rex v. Joddrell, 1 Bar. & Adol. 403. This was a rate for the parish of Yelling, which had been enclosed under the 59th of Geo. III., by which the tithes were extinguished and a compensation made in lieu thereof. This rate was made on the amount of the rack rent which the farms were letting at and were worth to let at the time. E. Bull, the occupier of one farm, was assessed at 226*l.*, which was the rent paid by her without any deduction. E. B. was not assessed in respect of the corn rent or compensation for tithe paid to the rector for the same, amounting to 93*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* The appellant, the rector, is assessed in 368*l.* in respect of the gross payments for compensation for tithes, amounting to 452*l.* 2*s.* ½*d.* and that the deduction in the assessment allowed the rector (to wit) 83*l.* 2*s.* ½*d.*, which is the amount of parochial dues levied on 451*l.* 2*s.* ½*d.*; it was objected that the farms should have been assessed in the amount of the rent paid to the landlord, added to the amount of the compensation paid to the rector, such being the actual value of the land to let at rack rent: and also that the appellant was assessed at such a sum as with his poor rate made up the full gross amount of the corn rent, the profit accruing to the occupiers beyond the amount of the rate, and beyond the amount of the interest of capital employed, and of expense of cultivating lands, including compensation for the farmer's trouble and labour and superintendence, ought to have been included in these assessments: and also the corn rent was not worth 368*l.*, the appellant being liable in respect of such sum to the payment of land tax and ecclesiastical dues beyond the parochial rates, and having further to do or provide for the duties of the incumbency. Cur. adv. vult. Parke, J. "This was a question between the rector of a parish and the farmers in it, as to the extent to which he on the one hand and they on the other ought to be rated. The tithes in the parish were extinguished, and the rector had a corn rent or compensation in their stead. He was rated to the full extent of all he received, with the deduction only of what he paid for parochial dues. He claimed as additional deductions the amount of his land tax, the amount for what he paid for ecclesiastical dues (which would include tenths, synodals, &c.), and a compensation for performing or providing for the duties of his incumbency. The farmers were rated at the bonâ fide amount of the rack rent at which the farms were letting, or which they were worth to let, the tenants paying the corn rent or compensation for tithe; and the rector contended that they ought to be rated in addition upon that corn rent or compensation they paid him, and upon their share of profit beyond the rent. The great point to be aimed at in every rate is equality, and whatever is the proportion at which, according to its true rateable value, any property is rated is the proportion in which every other property ought to be rated. The first thing upon every rate therefore is to ascertain the true rateable value of every property upon which the rate is to be imposed, and the next to see upon what proportion of that value a rate is in fact imposed. In the case of land, the rateable value is the amount of the annual average profit or value of the land after every outgoing is paid, and every proper allowance made, not however including the interest of capital, as the sessions have done, for that is a part of the profit. Tithe is an outgoing, and therefore the corn rent or compensation for tithe in this case is not to be added to the amount upon which the farmer is rateable; and in respect of that proportion of the annual profit or value, which consists of tithe or corn rent, the rector is himself to be assessed. We think therefore that the sessions were right in overruling the first objection. The second objection was, that the farmer's share of profit ought to have been rated, or, which is the same thing, that the appellant should have been rated proportionably less, and that objection should in our opinion have prevailed. Of the whole of the annual profits or value of land, a part belongs to the landlord in the shape of rent, and part to the tenant; and whenever a rate is according to the rack rent (the usual and most convenient mode), it is in effect a rate on a part of the profit only. It must therefore in the next place be ascertained what proportion the rent bears to the total annual profit or value, and that will show in what proportion all other property ought to be rated. If, for instance,

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

By act of parliament the tithes in a parish were extinguished and the rector entitled to a corn rent, for which he was assessed to the full amount less the parochial rates. The farmers who paid the corn rent were rated upon the amount of their rack rent. Held, that the tenants ought not to be rated for a sum made up of the rack rent paid to their landlords, and the corn rent paid to the rector; but that they were properly rated on the amount of the rack rent only. And also, that the rate was unequal, as the farmer was rated not for the full value of the land which comprized the landlord's and tenant's profit, while the rector was rated for the full value of his corn rent. And, that in estimating the amount at which the rector ought to be rated, the land tax ought to be deducted from his corn rent, provided the tenants of the other lands in the manor paid the land tax without being allowed for it by the landlord, but not if such allowance was made. Held also, that allowance ought to be made to the rector for ecclesiastical dues, which were a charge upon the rectory, but not for the expenses of providing duties of incumbency.

9. Principle of Valuation, &c.

the rent is one half or two thirds of the total annual profit or value of land, the rate on all other property should be on a half or two thirds of its annual value. In this case it is clear that there was a share of profit received by the tenant upon which there has been no rate, and in that respect the farmers were assessed in a less proportion of the true annual profit or value than the appellant. The sessions were therefore wrong in disallowing this objection, and they ought to ascertain the ratio which the rent of land bears to its average annual profit or value, and assess the appellant for his tithe rent in the same ratio. The last objection was, that the appellant ought to have had the land tax, ecclesiastical dues, and expenses of providing for the duties of incumbency deducted. As to the land tax, that is always in practice paid in the first instance by tenants, and whether it is to be deducted or not in this case must depend upon the answer to a previous question, whether the tenants in the parish deduct it from the rent specified or not. If they do, the landlord pays it in effect out of the rent he receives, and the appellant, to be on the same footing, must do the same; in that case it must not be deducted in making the rate on him. But if the tenants pay the specified rents and the land tax besides, then they have in effect not been rated upon that proportion of the annual profit or value with which the land tax is paid, but upon a part of the residue only, after deducting the land tax. Upon this supposition the appellant must also be rated in a proportionate part of his profit, after deducting the land tax. The ecclesiastical dues ought to be allowed, because they are payable by the appellant in respect of his rectory, and the profits of the rectory constitute the only fund out of which they can be paid; but the expenses of providing for the duties of incumbency ought not to be deducted, because those duties are personal, and ought to be performed personally by the incumbent. The last objection therefore ought to prevail in part. The case must, for these reasons, be sent back to the sessions, who must amend the rate, acting as nearly in conformity to the principle here laid down, as their means of investigation will admit, a precise and accurate application of it is we are well aware impracticable.

10. Where Property to be rated.

In parish or parishes where property lies.

10. Where Property to be rated.

It has been observed, and the words of the 43 Eliz. are to that effect, that real property, whatever may be its kind, if it is rateable, shall be rated in the parish where it is situated. Thus all who occupy real property within the district, though dwelling elsewhere, come within the act. So that if a man occupies lands in the several parishes of A. B. and C., and reside in the parish of D., he is liable to be rated in all the four parishes; in A. B. and C. for the land he occupies in each respectively, and in D. as an inhabitant; Jeffrey's case, 5 Co. 66; 1 Bott, 122; but he cannot be rated for personal property which is not within the parish where he is an inhabitant. Rex v. North Curry, 4 B. & C. 953; 6 D. & R. 424.

Coal mine extending into several parishes to be rated in each, the shaft or entrance be only in one parish. Rex v. Foleshill, 1 Harrison, 71; aliter as to Mineral Spring, id. 73.

In ordinary cases, therefore, no difficulty can arise upon this subject; but where there is an unbroken occupation extending through several parishes, and the profits arising from such occupancy are received in one or more of the several parishes, and not in due proportions in all, the respective claims of the several parishes for poor rates do not appear so susceptible of a satisfactory adjustment. Accordingly, the reports present many cases in which this question has arisen, upon the rating of canals, gas-works, &c. It was formerly holden that navigations and canals were rateable in those parishes only in which the tolls were payable; but it is now settled that these companies are rateable to the poor in every parish through which their canals or works pass, in proportion to the profits which the land occupied by them in such parish yields. Thus where a canal passed through several parishes, in which the tonnage dues varied, it was held that the company were rateable to the relief of the poor of each parish for the amount of tonnage dues actually earned there, and not for part of the whole amount earned along the whole line of the canal, in proportion to the length of the canal in that parish. Rex v. Inhabitants of Kingswinford, 1 M. & R. 20; 7 B. & C. 236. In like manner, the main pipes of water-works are now holden to be rateable in the several parishes in which they are laid. Rex v. Mayor of Bath, 1 East, 609; Bott, cont. 91; Rex v. Rochdale W. W. Co., 1 M. & S. 634; Bott, cont. 106.

The cases on this subject, somewhat abridged, are as follows. It will be perceived that in some of them the question whether tolls are rateable, and in what manner they may become so, is also discussed and determined.

Rex v. Palmer, 1 B. & C. 546; 2 D. & R. 793. S. Palmer was charged for a wharf and buildings situate in Fornham All Saints, adjoining the river Lark, and occupied for the purposes of navigation of the said river, and the towing paths, sluices, &c. within the parish of Fornham All Saints, and the tolls arising therefrom due at Fornham All Saints. By 11 & 12 Will. III. s. 1, H. Ashley, Esq. was empowered to make navigable the river Lark, and after making satisfaction to the land owner, to have the cuts, towing paths, &c. and to receive for the freight of goods, at such place adjoining the river as he should think fit, certain tolls, and a proportionate toll according to distance. Mr. Ashley made the river navigable from Mildenhall to Fornham All Saints, a distance of twelve miles and a half. Half the channel, the towing path and the half of one sluice and two locks are in Fornham All Saints. The towing path is separated from the adjoining lands by a ditch. The appellant is not an inhabitant of Fornham All Saints. She is the owner under a distinct title of a wharf or coal-yard, of about four acres, lying in that parish, and adjoining the extremity of the navigation, in which wharf are several warehouses; different portions of this yard are allotted to the coal merchants who use this navigation, to the number of fourteen or fifteen. They pay no rent, but keep division fences. Large quantities of coals are carted at once from the boats, and not deposited in the coal-yard; but it is necessary for the accommodation of the wholesale dealers using the navigation, that they should have a place to deposit their goods, but the appellant is not bound to provide such place. The buildings and the outer fences and walls inclosing the wharf and the towing paths, locks, and sluices, are repaired by the appellant, and were erected by her or her ancestors. Up to 1816, the appellant was rated on a rental of 17*l.* for the coal-yard, and no rate was imposed upon the profits of the navigation. The annual value of the coal-yard as mere land, is not above 3*l.* Since 1816, she has been rated in Fornham, "for tolls arising from the navigation and warehouses," at 250*l.* per annum. The tolls becoming due, and received by the appellant for goods landed in the parish of Fornham All Saints, equal the amount of the assessment. Abbott, C. J. "I entertain the greatest reverence for the opinion of the learned judges who decided those cases. (a) It must be recollected, however, that when those cases came before the court, it had not been decided that tolls per se were not rateable. This is now fully established by Rex v. Nicholson. The proprietors of a navigation are, therefore, rateable only as the occupiers of the land, or land covered with water, for their tolls, as profits arising out of that land so used. They are rateable, therefore, in every parish through which the canal passes, in respect of the land there situate, and so used for the canal. The true principle of rateability is this: the land is to be rated to the relief of the poor in the parish where it is productive of profit to the proprietor, and in proportion to that profit, which may be considered as in the nature of a rent received by the proprietor for the use of his land within the parish. This is very different from the case of a sluice. In that case the tolls become due for the use of a sluice itself, and the proprietor must contribute to the relief of the poor in that parish where the sluice is situate. The proprietor of a navigation is to contribute in respect of the profits of land, extending probably through many parishes; and he is to pay to each of those Decisions as to tolls being rateable, and in what proportion in each parish.

The proprietors of an inland navigation are rateable to the relief of the poor in every parish through which the navigation passes, as occupiers of the land situate in each parish, used for the purpose of the navigation; and therefore, where the proprietors of such a navigation, which extended through different parishes, were rated in one for the entire amount of their tolls, the rate could not be supported.

10. Where Property to be rated.

The proprietors of a navigation extending through several parishes are to be rated in an intermediate parish, not in respect of the riverage becoming due in that parish for goods landed there, but in respect of the profits of the land used for the navigation situate within the parish.

Rex v. Woking.

parishes in respect of his land locally situate within it. Here, the whole land occupied by the canal contributes to produce the entire amount of the tolls, and the proprietor of the navigation ought not to have been assessed at that amount in any one of the parishes through which the canal passes. The rate, therefore, cannot be supported, and the order of sessions must be quashed."

Rex v. The Earl of Portmore, 1 B. & C. 551; 2 D. & R. 798, S. C.; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 422. Defendants were rated, as proprietors of the river Wey, upon the tolls earned within the parish. By an act of Car. II. "for preserving the navigation of the river Wey," the soil of the river and of the banks, &c., and the locks, &c., were vested in certain persons, to be used and navigated by them only, and not by any other person, without their leave. The defendants are the proprietors of the river and navigation, and liable as such to be rated. They are not themselves carriers upon the river, nor the owners of any vessels navigated thereon; but every vessel navigated thereon is navigated by their leave, which is uniformly granted. The persons licensed to navigate any vessel, pay the proprietors of the navigation a certain riverage for every ton of goods. The navigation extends from Guildford to the Thames, through several parishes, and among others the parish of Woking, and many tons of goods annually pass through that parish, to and fro, in vessels using the navigation to different places of destination; but the goods annually landed within the parish do not yield riverage to the amount in respect of which the defendants are assessed. The question was, whether the proprietors were rateable, except upon the amount of the riverage arising from the goods landed within the parish. It was admitted, however, that, according to the principle laid down in the preceding case, the proprietors were liable to be rated in Woking in respect of the profits of their land, situate within that parish; and if so, that the riverage payable on goods landed there would not be the correct measure of those profits. And see Rex v. Woking, 5 Nev. & Man. 395, S. P.

Rex v. Barnes, 1 B. & Adol. 113. The Hammersmith suspension bridge is at one end in the county of Middlesex, and the other in the county of Surrey. It was erected by a company, and the surplus receipts are divided among the shareholders. The gate at which the tolls are received is on the Middlesex side, and the company paid to the poor rates on that side; but upon being assessed on the other side, where no tolls were taken, they appealed, and the sessions granted a case. Bayley, J. "This is a very clear case. The proprietor of land is liable to be rated to the relief of the poor in the parish where the land lies. The Hammersmith Bridge Company have, in the parish of Barnes, land used by them for the purpose of facilitating the passage over the Thames, and they are entitled to receive from all persons passing their bridge certain tolls. Then what is the character of their occupation of that land? It is a valuable occupation in respect of the money which the land produces to the company, by being appropriated to the purpose of facilitating the passage over the Thames, for which passage they receive tolls. The quantum is a question for the sessions. All that we decide is, that the land is rateable property in the place where it is situate. There the profit is earned, though the money may be actually received elsewhere." Littledale, J. "The tolls are payable for passing over the bridge, not for passing through the toll-gates. The gates are put up merely to prevent persons passing over the bridge without paying the toll." Parke, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Proprietors of the Navigation from the Trent to the Mersey, 2 D. & R. 752; 1 B. & C. 545. The appellants were by an act of 6 Geo. III. empowered to purchase lands to them and their successors, for making a navigable canal from the Trent to the Mersey. And to take, for their own use, for tonnage and wharfage, for all goods conveyed upon the canal, rates not exceeding one penny halfpenny per mile for every ton, which rates were to be paid at such places near the canal as the company should appoint. All persons had liberty to navigate with boats upon the canal, upon payment of such rates. A part of the canal, in length about one mile and fifty-two yards, comprising the land for which the defendants were rated, passes through Findern. The company have no other property in the township, except the canal and towing-path. No tolls are received in the township, nor do any tolls become payable, the company not having so directed; the company receive annually a much larger sum than that in respect of which they are assessed, for tolls for the passage over that part of their canal which lies in Findern. The canal company derive very considerable annual profits from the canal. The counsel being asked whether they could distinguish this case from those which had decided the principle, that a canal is rateable to the relief of the poor in every parish through which it passes, according to the value of the land covered with water; they confessed their inability to distinguish it from Rex v. Milton. Understanding that the court decided no more than that the company were rateable merely as occupiers of lands in Findern, and did not recognize the principle to have been carried farther by Rex v. Milton. It was observed, that this was the first time since canals had been established in this country, that any attempt had been made to rate them as so much land covered with water. Per Curiam. Is not that the only correct mode of rating them, according to the statute which imposes the rate upon "every occupier of lands." Unless they are rated in this form, they cannot be rated at all. The cases which have been decided establish this principle, namely, that the occupier of lands in every parish is liable to be rated in respect of the land which he occupies in each; and if a canal passes through several parishes, the undertakers are rateable in each and every parish through which the canal passes, according to the quantity of land occupied. The Trent and Mersey Canal Company occupy the land which the water covers in the township of Findern, and are rateable in respect of such occupation.

Rex v. Kingswinford, 7 B. & C. 237. The proprietors of the Dudley Canal Navigation appealed against a rate made in the parish of Kingswinford, whereby the company were rated at 25*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* The land occupied by the canal in this parish was twelve acres, two roods, thirty-six perches, and is one twelfth part of the land occupied by the company for the whole canal, which extends through seven parishes. The total amount of tonnage received by the company for the last year on the whole canal, after deducting expenses, is 5670*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, one-twelfth part of which is 472*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* and the rate thereon 9*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.*, to which amount the sessions reduced the rate. The tonnage received during the same period for goods carried on that part of the canal which is situate in Kingswinford, after deducting expenses, is 1208*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.*, and the rate on that sum was 25*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* Bailey, J. "It seems to me that in amending this rate the sessions have not adopted the correct rule. The canal company are to be rated under the 43 Eliz., as occupiers of land in Kingswinford. Tolls eo nomine are not rateable, but if the subject-matter out of which the toll arises be one mentioned in the statute, as the object of a rate, then that may be rated by name, and the tolls which constitute its profit may be thus made to contribute to the relief of the poor. A canal company therefore is rateable in respect of the land which they occupy in every parish through which the canal passes, and for that value which the land there produces. When there is a long line of canal extending through different parishes, although the money collected for tonnage in all the parishes constitute one common fund out of which all the expenses are to be borne, still the proportion which those expenses may bear to the tolls collected, even in cases where the rates are the same along the whole line, may vary in different parishes. The traffic on the canal may be greater in some parishes than others, or the rates may be unequal, and thus the net profits, which constitute the value of the land used for the canal, may vary in different parishes. There are twelve miles in length of the canal in this parish. Assuming that the different branches of the canal had been made under (a) one act of parliament, I am of opinion that the company ought to be rated in each particular parish in proportion to the profit which

10. Where Property to be rated.

A canal company is rateable in each parish for the profits earned in each, and not upon the entire profits divided by the length of the canal in each parish.

(a) The question raised for the opinion of the court in this case was, whether those parts of the canal which were formed under several statutes were to be considered as a joint concern with another part constructed under 16 Geo. III.

10. *Where

they derive from the land there used by them for the purposes of the canal. If a canal run through six different parishes, and there is the same traffic through the whole line of the canal, every part of the canal will earn an equal proportion of the tolls. But it may happen that in that part of the canal situate in one parish, there may be double or treble the traffic which there is in any other of the six. Why are the other parishes to have any part of the tolls earned in that parish? The land in those parishes contributes nothing towards earning the sum derived in that other parish from the use of the land there. The true principle is this: a canal company is to contribute to the relief of the poor in each parish through which the canal passes, in proportion to the profit which they derive from the use of the land in that parish. If the profit arising from a given quantity of land vary in different parishes, the rate must vary in the same proportion. The whole rate will be payable out of the common fund. But then each parish will receive from the company a sum in proportion to what the land produces in each parish. If in this instance this rule has the effect of making the rate in Kingswinford higher, it will also make the rate in other parishes lower. For these reasons it appears to me that the sessions have not proceeded on the correct principle, but that they ought to have rated the company for the tonnage received on that part of the canal which is in Kingswinford, and the rate ought therefore to be amended by making it 25*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*" Holroyd, J., and Littledale, J., concurred.

Rex v. Monmouthshire Canal Navigation Company, 5 N. & M. 68. By a local act for making a canal, it is enacted that the rates, tolls, and duties, authorized to be taken by the company of proprietors, shall not at any time or times hereafter be charged with, or be subject or liable to, the payment of any parochial rates whatsoever, and that the company "shall from time to time be rated to all parochial rates, for and in respect of the lands and grounds to be purchased or taken, and the warehouses and other buildings to be erected or set up by the said company or their successors, in pursuance of this act, in such and the same proportion as, but not at any higher value or improved rent than, other lands, grounds, and buildings, lying near or adjacent thereto, are or shall for the time being be rated, and as the lands, grounds, warehouses, and other hereditaments, so to be purchased and taken and erected, would have been rateable, in case the same had continued in their former state, and not been used for the purpose of the said navigation or undertaking." Lord Denman, C. J. "I think that there can be no substantial doubt on the first point. The exemption is incorporated in the subsequent acts. This is manifestly distinguishable from the case cited. The next question is as to the construction of the 101st clause, upon which it is contended on the part of the appellants that they are only liable to be rated according to the value of the lands when taken,—that is, that, for all time, the company are only to be rated according to the actual amount, and in proportion to the value of the lands at the time when they were taken. If that had been the intention of the legislature, it would have been better to have put a certain estimate on the lands. It would have been easy to have said that the land shall hereafter be rated at so much per acre. It would be exceedingly difficult at the present time to determine what was the value of the neighbouring lands at the period when the canal was formed. But it is said that the words are clear and explicit on this subject. If they are so, they are, in my opinion, clear and explicit the other way, because the clause provides that the lands to be taken shall be rated 'in such and the same proportion as (but not at any higher value or improved rent than) other lands, grounds, and buildings, lying near or adjacent thereto, are or shall for the time being be rated.' Two periods are here contemplated during which the lands and buildings shall be rated; not only the time of the passing of the act, but also all future time. The standard of rating being the fluctuating value with reference to the adjacent lands, how can it be contended that these lands are to be rated according to the value when they were taken? The clause proceeds,—'and as the lands, buildings, &c. so to be purchased and taken and erected, would have been rateable in case the same had continued in their former state, and not been used for the purposes of the said navigation or undertaking.' It does not say that they shall only be so rated as if the undertaking had never been carried into effect. It is impossible to give effect to the whole of the words, but it is extremely easy to see what the legislature intended, namely, that the company should pay the same rates as a similar description of lands would have paid if those lands had never been taken for the canal. Mr. Greaves has with great ingenuity and industry referred to many cases to show that the time when the lands were taken is the time to look at. But if we attend to the object of those cases, that will appear not to be a fair construction. The court were not considering the question which we are now considering, but only the question of rateability; and though they say that the lands should be liable to be rated only according to their value when taken, that language is to be applied to the liability and not to the rating. The rate is to be according to the value from time to time. The language of the judges is, however, certainly open to the construction contended for. The third point is, that at all events the canal company were only liable to be rated in proportion to such value as the adjacent lands would now possess, supposing the canal and railways had not been made, but the adjacent lands had continued in their former state, and were now used for the same purposes as they were at the time when the lands were taken by the company; and that any increase of value, arising from or depending upon the existence of the canal or railways, ought not to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the value of the adjacent lands for the purpose of fixing the sum at which the canal company ought to be rated. The words of the clause are not such as these, and do not carry that import with them. The term used in the clause is not 'rated,' but 'rateable,' that is, liable to be rated. The company are liable to be rated according to the increase or diminution of value of the adjacent lands. That being so, the question is, whether we are authorized to introduce this condition, that they are only to be rated according to the value of the adjacent lands, such value not arising from the canal. Those are not the words in the act, and there is no reason why they should be inserted. If they were so inserted, the parish and the owners of neighbouring lands would be losers. On the first point the appellants are right; on the two latter the sessions have decided quite correctly." Littledale, J., "With regard to the first point I have no doubt whatever. I do not think it necessary to point out what the effective words of the incorporating clauses are; they seem to me complete to all possible purposes to incorporate the clause. Allusion has been made to a case. That was a very difficult case:—A power was given to make cuts communicating with the canal under particular circumstances; the line of the canal was to be extended, and the question was, whether those powers were to be extended to the new canal. The second point is, that the company were only liable to be rated in proportion to the actual value of the adjacent lands at the time when the lands which they now occupy were originally taken by them; I have not the slightest doubt as to this. The 101st section says, first, that the tolls are to be free from rates; then that the company shall be rated to all parochial rates in respect of the lands to be taken and the buildings to be erected, in such and the same proportion as (but not at any higher value than) lands and buildings adjacent thereto are rated. If this clause had stopped at these words 'are rated,' some doubt might have been raised, whether they were not to be rated according to the value when the lands were taken. But I do not think that even in such a case it is clear that would be so. The words 'are rated' are however followed by the words 'or shall for the time being be rated.' That refers not only to present but future time. The rate must go on from time to time. It is now upwards of forty years since the act passed. I do not see how it is possible to ascertain what the value of the land was when the act passed. I am very clearly of opinion that the true construction is, that you are to take the fluctuating value. With regard to the third question, there is more difficulty. The case states that the value of the property has increased by a variety of means and circumstances. It is contended by the appellants, that the increased value of the adjacent lands is only to be taken from other circumstances, and that the increase of value from the canal ought not to be taken into account. There is some doubt from the words, 'and as the lands so to be taken and purchased would have been rateable in case the same had continued in their former state,' It is said that the meaning of these words is, that the improved value of the lands, supposing that the canal had not been made, is to be taken. That appears to me not to be their meaning. The increased value of the lands is, in my opinion, to be taken—from whatever cause it arises. At the time of passing this act some doubt existed as to whether tolls were rateable per se. The act clearly intended to exempt tolls at all events, and the framers of the act may have thought that though they had exempted the tolls, yet if they had said nothing as to the lands, a doubt might have arisen as to whether those lands, as increased by the value of the tolls, might not be rateable; or whether, if a toll-house were erected on the land, the rate might not be increased on account of the value of the tolls received. The meaning of the latter part of the act is, that the land shall be rateable as mere land. The company have taken so many acres of land, and are to be exempt altogether from the payment of rates on the tolls; but the lands they possess are to be rated at the value of the adjacent lands. There is, however, great doubt (arising from the inaccurate wording of the clause,) as to how the value of the adjacent land is to be estimated. Is the value of the adjacent lands to be taken without the addition made by means of the canal, or with the addition? How are the adjacent lands now increased in value? From two causes; by means of the canal, and by means of other circumstances. The meaning of the clause, I think, is, that the value, as it is altogether, is to be taken. I do not see how it is possible to ascertain how much the value has increased from one, and how much from the other cause. The proper mode of rating the canal is upon the supposition, that instead of the canal being made where it is, it was 100 yards off, and the present value of the land 100 yards off is to be taken as the value of the land upon which the canal is situated." Patteson, J. "On the first point I am with the appellants. The precise ground on which the case cited was decided is not known. There is this distinction between that and the present case, that there the question arose on the 128th section, and the court thought that the incorporating clause in the act of 42 Geo. III. did not extend to that clause. I do not see exactly the reason for the decision, but it is enough to say that the two cases are not alike. With regard to the other points, I cannot make sense altogether of the clause, though, upon the whole, it is more nearly intelligible than those clauses generally are. The intention and object of the act was, that the company should not be rated in respect of the tolls. The discussion in all the cases cited by Mr. Greaves was, whether the premises were to be rated, taking into consideration the value of the tolls. Mr. Greaves has argued upon the difference in the forms of expression used in different parts of this clause; first, there is 'at any time or times hereafter,' then 'from time to time,' and presently for the 'time being.' But what can this last expression by possibility mean, as it is here used, but the same as 'from time to time?' The enactment is, that the lands, warehouses, and other buildings to be erected, (not now erected,) are to be rated as other lands, grounds, warehouses, and buildings, are or shall for the time being be rated. If the clause had stopped there, no doubt could have existed but that the company were to be rated in the same way as if the lands and warehouses were in the hands of any private person; but it goes on to say, 'and as the lands and grounds, warehouses and buildings, would have been rateable if they had continued in their former state.' That is impossible, because the warehouses to be erected cannot be rated in the same way as if they had continued in their former state, for they had no former state, and had not been used before. They are rateable in the same manner as other land, that is to say, as if they were not in the hands of the company. That is the real meaning of the act. To the third question the answer has been given,—that the thing is impossible. No person can possibly tell what is the value of the lands without including the value arising from the canal. The legislature cannot have intended what was impossible." Williams, J. "Upon the question of incorporation I am entirely of the same opinion. No doubt whatever can be entertained. All the words that can be introduced are to be found in the clause in question. Nor is there more doubt on the second point. Mr. Greaves very properly brought under the consideration of the court the several cases that have been decided, for the purpose of inducing us to suppose that the period to be looked at, is the period of the formation of the canal or of the taking of the lands. Those cases depended upon the language of each act. This particular one must depend on, and be regulated by, the language in the particular statute itself. Upon that, it is impossible to suppose that the time of making the canal is the point of time to which we are to look to ascertain the amount of assessment. The property is to be rated from time to time according to the fluctuating value of the adjacent lands. With regard to the third point, almost all the observations as to the second apply, with this, that it introduces another subject more intractable and more impossible, namely, the extinction of the canal by supposition—a state of things I do not know how we are to deal with. The result is, that as to the second and third points we are against the appellants, and therefore the rate is to remain confirmed.” Rate confirmed.

Rex v. Oxford Canal Company, 10 B. & C. 163. The proprietors of the Oxford canal were empowered to take a mileage tonnage for coals and other merchandizes, excepting that they were not to take a tonnage upon coals for two miles measured from L. to B. As to those two miles, the proprietors of the Coventry canal should take all the rates and duties payable by virtue of that act for all coals carried from any part of the Oxford canal within those two miles; and the proprietors of the Oxford canal were to take all the rates payable by an act for making the Coventry canal, for all goods, except coals, conveyed upon any part of the Oxford canal, and afterwards upon the Coventry canal, within three miles and a half of the junction of the two canals. The point of junction of the Oxford and Coventry canals was in the parish of F. That parish contains one mile and nine hundred and sixty-three yards of the Oxford canal, being part of the two miles above-mentioned, and also two miles and a quarter of the Coventry canal, being part of the three miles and a half above-mentioned. By the 33 Geo. III. c. 80, for making the Grand Junction Canal (which it was apprehended would be injurious to the Oxford canal), it was agreed that compensation should be made to them. It then authorized the proprietors of the Oxford canal to take, for all coals that should pass from the Oxford canal into and upon the Grand Junction canal, 2s. 9d. per ton, without regard to the distance the same should pass on the Oxford canal; and for all other goods which should pass from any navigable canal into or upon the Oxford canal, and from thence into or upon the Grand Junction canal, or from the Grand Junction canal into or upon the Oxford canal, and from thence into or upon any other canal, 4s. 4d. per ton, without any regard to the distance the same should pass on the Oxford canal. Cur. adv. vult. Bailey, J. after observing on the 33 Geo. III. c. 80, added “the question is not for what injury the right to receive the new tonnage dues is given as a compensation, or in other words, for what reason the legislature have given that right to the Oxford Canal Company; but what is the legal liability of the company in respect of these dues, when received by them, to contribute to the poor rates. The company are rateable in each parish for the net annual profit of the portion of the canal lying in that parish; in other words, for what the canal in each parish earns, and the tonnage dues are paid by the owners of goods for passing along the canal, and are received by the company for the use of it, though the reason of being enabled to receive them by the legislature was, that their canal was likely to be injured by the new navigation. It is on the ground that these dues are received for the use of the canal, and are earned by the canal, that the company were held rateable for them in Rex v. Oxford Canal Company (4 B. & C. 74.) For the passage of coals therefore along the part of the canal lying in Foleshill, some part of the new dues is received by the company, and in respect of that part the rate is proper. It is true that the consequence is, that for coals passing along that part of the canal, being within two miles from the junction with the Coventry canal, the company would receive more dues, and therefore be rateable for more than those which pass along other parts; for they would receive for such coals the proportion of compensation dues above mentioned directly, and indirectly a part of the tonnage duties on other goods on the first three miles and a quarter of the Coventry canal, for which it is admitted

10. Where Property to be rated.

Corporation of Bath erected reservoirs of water in the parish of A., from which, by pipes, they supplied with water the inhabitants of the parishes of A. and B. : Held rateable in A. for so much of the profit from these reservoirs as they made in A., but not for the entire profits made in A. and B.

Inhabitants means residents.

by their counsel that they were properly rated in the rate in question. This consequence however can make no difference in the construction of the act of parliament, which makes the dues payable by the public to the company for passing along their canal, and which therefore constitute a part of the profits of the portion of the canal through which they pass. The canal earns no part of the original tonnage upon coals carried through the two miles of Foleshill into the Coventry canal, because it receives its equivalent by the tonnage upon other goods for the first three miles and a half upon the Coventry canal; but those two miles contribute to earn the compensation tonnage, and for that there is no equivalent. The rate is therefore to be confirmed in this respect; but the case must be remitted to the sessions to make the several deductions to which the company were held in the argument to be entitled."

Rex v. The Mayor of Bath, 14 East, 609. By a rate for the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb, the corporation of Bath were rated as occupiers of certain springs and reservoirs, at 22*l.* 10*s.* An act, 6 Geo. III. c. 70, for supplying the inhabitants of the city with water, gave the corporation full power to cause water to be conveyed to the city from springs belonging to the corporation; and to break up any public way and any street to drain and collect the water of the springs, and to make reservoirs and engines necessary for distributing such water, &c., and to lay under ground pipes for the same purpose. The act vests the property of all watercourses leading from the springs to the city, and of all reservoirs, pipes, &c. used for the purpose aforesaid, in the mayor, &c. The corporation made several reservoirs in the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb, where the springs are situated, no part of the city, &c. lying in the said parish. The reservoirs are walled in and roofed; pipes were also laid under ground for conveying the water, which first pass through a part of Lyncomb and Widcomb called Holloway, and from thence along the Old Bridge, over the river Avon, through the parishes of St. James and of St. Peter and St. Paul, which two parishes are within the city. All the water flowing from the springs is collected into the reservoirs, from each of which it is distributed by a main pipe and cock, under the charge of an officer of the corporation, who has no residence upon the spot, but goes there to turn the cocks and distribute the water; and from the main pipes it is distributed by smaller pipes to the houses of the inhabitants, both in Holloway and in St. James and St. Peter and St. Paul. The occupiers of the several houses pay a rate to the corporation for the water with which they are respectively supplied, and the amount of this rate is in the discretion of the corporation. The corporation has been in the occupation of the springs and reservoirs, and of the land included within the walls thereof. The annual profits arising to the corporation from the water thus distributed from these springs and reservoirs, amount to 600*l.* in the whole, of which 50*l.* are collected from the occupiers of houses in Holloway, and 550*l.* from the occupiers of houses in St. James and St. Peter and St. Paul; the 600*l.* is paid at the office of the chamberlain of the corporation. The 22*l.* 10*s.* for which the springs and reservoirs are rated, is upon the whole sum of 600*l.* The lands in which the springs and reservoirs are situated are rated separately in the names of the respective occupiers, exclusive of the springs and reservoirs, and the land thereof. The questions were, 1st, whether the corporation are liable to be rated at all in respect of the said springs and reservoirs in Lyncomb and Widcomb: and 2dly, whether they were to be rated to Lyncomb and Widcomb upon the whole of the profits of the water which flows from the springs and reservoirs, or only upon so much of those profits as are collected from the occupiers of houses within the said parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The mayor, &c. of Bath must be rated under the 43 Eliz. if at all, for the description of property within mentioned, either in the character of inhabitants of the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb, or as the occupiers of some of the different kinds of property particularly specified in the act as the subjects of the rate. Under various and late decisions, and particularly that of The King v. Nicholson, it has been established as the sound construction of the 43 Eliz. that the word inhabitants in that act is only satisfied by a residence within the parish. And as there is no doubt that the corporation of Bath are not residents, they cannot be charged eo nomine as inhabitants in this case; and therefore if rateable at all, must be rated as the occupiers of some of the several descriptions of property enumerated in the act. That they are occupiers of the reservoirs which they are empowered to make, and in which the water which they are also authorized to collect, is kept, and that such reservoirs and water kept therein are comprehended within the legal description of land (one of the descriptions of rateable property mentioned in the stat. 43 Eliz.), will not admit of a doubt. This disposes of the first question submitted to our opinion. As to the second question, whether the corporation is liable to be rated in this parish for the whole of the profits of the water which flows from the springs and reservoirs, or only for the profits collected in this particular parish; it should seem to follow as a consequence from what has been said already, that if the corporation of Bath be occupiers of any local visible property producing profit in any other parish, and falling by reasonable construction within the same description of property as the reservoirs already mentioned, they should be liable in like manner to be rated for it pro tanto in such other parish. As so large a portion of the apparatus, by the aid of which the water is conveyed along the two several parishes in Bath, and the soil itself within these parishes on which these pipes rest, and on which soil the corporation are certainly, under the powers of this special act, authorized to lay them, must be considered as mainly conducive to the acquiring the water rent which in so large a proportion (namely, eleven to one, or 550*l.* out of 600*l.*) is received for the use of it in the two Bath parishes, it is impossible to say that the corporation ought to be rated as they are, that is, for the whole of such profits in the parish of Lyncomb and Widcomb alone. A great deal of stress has been laid on the supposed authority of Atkins v. Davis, Cald. 313; but as the judges of K. B. were equally divided, no decision which can be relied on as authority was come to in this court. And although it may be collected from Lord Loughborough's judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, that he thought that 'the proper place where the value of the whole is to be taken is the fountain head from which the whole is to be distributed,' thereby intimating two things, 1st, that the whole profit should be assessed at one place; and 2dly, that such one place should be the fountain head; yet he adds, 'however it is not very material to consider that, for upon the present action it is certainly sufficient to warrant the levying the distress that here was a foundation to make a rate and some property rateable.' And indeed upon that ground, viz. of the form of the action which assumed the distress to be illegal in toto, and upon the difference which is to be found in the language of the statutes 27 & 43 Eliz., did the united judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber proceed, and not upon the supposed rateability of the whole profits at the fountain head. In order to decide the questions reserved for our determination upon this case, it is by no means necessary or proper for us to pronounce in what parishes besides that of Lyncomb and Widcomb, and in what proportions the corporation shall be in future charged. Indeed we have no adequate materials before us for such a decision. It is enough upon the present occasion to state that the rate in question by which the corporation has been charged for the whole of their profits in that one parish, is on that account bad, and must be quashed."

10. Where Property to be rated.

Rex v. Rebowe, 1 Bott, 166. Two light-houses were erected at Harwich, by Sir I. R. by virtue of a patent; for the maintenance thereof certain tolls were payable by all ships coming into or passing by the harbour. Part of these tolls were collected by the defendant at Harwich, and the remainder on other parts of the kingdom. He did not reside in the parish, and was no occupier there, excepting by having two persons who lodged in one of the light-houses to take care of them. He was rated to the light-houses. The court decided that the tolls were not rateable there, not being locally situated in the parish. According to what was stated in argument in Rex v. Cardington, the ground of decision was, that the vessels did not come within the parish, and therefore the tolls were not due there. Note. In a MS. note of this case in the possession of Mr. Douglas, it is expressly stated that the court observed that it was not set forth in the case that Rebowe was rated for the house, but only for the tolls. Dougl. 118, n.

Lighthouses.
The tolls of a lighthouse, where rateable.

10. Where Property to be rated.

The owner of a lighthouse is not rateable for tolls not received there, nor taken for vessels passing in the respondent parish.

Where a person resides as a servant, he is not rateable.

Rex v. Tynemouth, 12 East, 46. There were two points in this case, 1st, whether R. W. be rateable for two rooms in Tynemouth light-house: 2d, whether Mr. Fowke be rateable for the tolls in respect of the light-house. By letters patent of the 17 Car. II., and by the statute 42 Geo. III., Mr. F. is entitled to Tynemouth light-house, and certain tolls payable in respect of the same, for every ship passing by the light-house, and belonging or trading to the ports of Newcastle or Sunderland; and for certain tolls from every ship belonging to any foreigner passing by the light-house. The light-house is in parish of Tynemouth, the tolls are payable upon ships sailing on the German ocean, and benefited by it. They never come within the township of Tynemouth, and neither Mr. F. nor any of the receivers of the tolls reside in Tynemouth, and the tolls are collected out of it. R. W. is a servant of Mr. F. at an annual salary, and resides within the walls of the light-house, to take care of the light-house; and is rated for these two rooms, as occupier, at 6*l.*: and Mr. F. is rated for the tolls in respect of the light-house. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It is no question now whether this property could be rated in some other way; as if the light-house, whose light is the meritorious cause of earning the tolls, were in consequence let at a larger rent; but this is a rate specially upon the tolls, and therefore the case is not distinguishable from Rex v. Rebowe (supra), which is so immediately in specie, and in all its circumstances the same, and has been so long considered and acted upon as law, that it concludes the question. What local property is there within the township on which this rate or the tolls can be levied? The tolls are not received there; nor do the ships from which they are collected come within the township; the subject-matter of the rate has no locality within this township. As to the other point, it is equally clear that it is the occupation of the master by his servant, and not the occupation of the servant himself, and therefore the rate on the servant is bad on that ground." Mr. Fowke was subsequently rated, as occupier of the light-house, 500*l.* The case stated that if the light-house should be let, together with the tolls, it would be worth 500*l.* a year to be rented by a third person; but, if let without the tolls, it would be worth 6*l.* a year only. There were also these facts added, that about a thirty-eighth part of the entire number of vessels paying tolls come within the township of Tynemouth, and receive their loading there. The tolls received in respect of such last-mentioned vessels, do not equal in amount the expense of maintaining the light and managing the light-house; the whole of which expenses are incurred within the township of Tynemouth. No tolls from any ships whatever are received in the township of Tynemouth, nor do any of the collectors thereof, or Mr. Fowke, reside in that township. It was contended, that by the letters patent and the act of parliament, the privilege of having the light was connected with the light-house itself, and that therefore the whole was rateable. Bayley, J. "The tolls do not arise from the building, nor from any thing of necessity connected with it, and this case therefore is not distinguishable from that of Rex v. Coke (infra). Here the act of parliament declares the light-house to be a public benefit, and it ought not to be burthened with an additional charge." The order of sessions was quashed, and the sessions were directed to amend and alter the rate by reducing the charge made and assessed to 6*l.* (Rex v. W. Fowke, 5 B. & C. 814.)

Rex v. Coke, 5 B. & C. 797; 8 D. & R. 666. A Mr. Coke was rated as the occupier of a "light-house, together with the duties and contribution money payable in respect of ships passing by the same, the annual value of the same being stated to be 2250*l.* over and above the expense of keeping up the light-house and lights. The light-house was situated in the parish, and occupied by a servant of the owner, but the duties were collected out of the parish. Held that these duties did not constitute part of the annual profits of the house or land where the light was placed, and were not rateable. Bayley, J. "It seems to me that this house is rateable, but that the rate to the extent to which the parties are desirous of carrying it cannot be supported. The rate is upon the light-house, with the duties or contribution money, in respect of ships, hoys, and barks passing by the same. To make the defendant rateable to the full extent of 2000*l.* a year, it must be shown that he comes within the words of the stat. 43 Eliz., and is the occupier of a house or land of that annual value. The authorities cited in the course of the argument are distinguishable from the present case, except the two cases, Rex v. Rebowe (ante, 201), and Rex v. Tynemouth (ante, 202), where it was expressly decided that the tolls of a light-house were not rateable. A considerable interval of time elapsed between the decisions in those cases. And where there has been one uniform course of proceeding as to property of this description for a very considerable period of time, we ought not to introduce any alteration unless it be founded upon sound legal principles. The privilege of erecting light-houses was, I apprehend, originally in the crown. I believe it was afterwards vested in the Trinity House. The tolls are contributed by the proprietors of ships; and if the sums of money which they from time to time pay be properly apportioned, they will contribute a sum sufficient to remunerate the proprietor for the expense of keeping up the light-house, and to leave a moderate and reasonable profit for the trouble of renewing the light. If the proprietor of the light-house be rateable to the poor, the contribution which he will expect from the proprietors of ships must be proportionally larger, and they, in reality, will pay the rate, which will therefore become a burthen upon commerce." The learned judge, after commenting on several cases, added "Rex v. The New River Company does not bear upon the present case, because the proprietor of the light-house in this case is at liberty either in that house or in any other which he may think fit to erect or to rent, to burn lamps, and to produce a stream of light which shall be visible at a considerable distance at sea. But even if by the terms of the letters patent it were imperative on the grantee to burn his lights within this particular light-house, still if the privilege is not given to him by reason of his being the occupier of that house, it would not be appurtenant to but distinct from the house where it was to be exercised; and the duties payable to him in respect of the light, would be profits arising from the exercise of that privilege, and not from the house or land where it happens to be exercised. The grantee would in that case have an exclusive privilege of carrying on in that particular house (if I may so express myself) a particular description of trade. But there would be no necessary connection between the freehold interest in that house and the light which is to be kept up in it. The apparatus which is to contain or produce the light may or may not be attached to the freehold, and if it were wholly unconnected with the freehold, it might produce all the effect which is produced in a light-house. Suppose that effect were produced by hanging up a quantity of lighted coals with a reflector behind them, any sums payable by the owners of ships for the benefit which they might by possibility derive from that fire, would not constitute any part of the profit of the house or land where the lighted coals or reflector happened to be placed, but would be profits arising from the privilege. Then as all the purposes contemplated by the grant may be attained by forming the apparatus to produce the light in such a way as not to be connected with the building, and in that case the tolls payable by the ships would not constitute any part of the profits of the land, and would not therefore be rateable; it seems to follow, that the exclusive privilege of having the lights, even if the grant required them to be placed in a particular house, is distinct from that house or building, and the duties and contributions are profits arising from the exercise of the privilege, and not from the house or land where it is exercised, and those profits are not rateable as constituting part of the value of that house or land. And if it be once ascertained that the tolls and duties, quâ tolls and duties, are not rateable, then, although the business must be carried on in a house, or even in this specific house, a distinction must be taken between the value of the house in which that particular trade (for I consider it a species of trade) is carried on, and the profit arising from the trade itself. Now here the nature of the trade is that the proprietor of the light-house is to keep certain lights burning. Those lights are not of necessity attached to the freehold, and if they are not attached to the freehold they would be personal property. The proprietor of the light-house does no more than keep a candle or a fire lighted, and for keeping his lights, whether produced by candle, or by burning coals, or by oil, and for keeping mirrors behind those lights, the tolls and duties which are the subject of the rate are imposed. Such tolls down to the present time never have been rated, and in my opinion they are not rateable." Per Holroyd, J. "In this case the profits of the light-house arise from the tolls, and I think, according to the two cases (Rex v. Rebowe and Rex v. Tynemouth), we must decide that the tolls not being received and having no locality in the parish of Lydd, are not rateable. Here the benefit for which the tolls are paid (which is an incorporeal hereditament) is not one of the things mentioned in the 43 Eliz., for it constitutes a benefit not received within the parish, but received by ships elsewhere, or not received at all if they pass in the day-time when no light is burning." Per Littledale, J. "To make tolls rateable, there must not only be a profit produced within the parish, but it must also arise from the use of the thing, and in respect of it. Here the ships have not that sort of use; they have merely a transient view of the light as they pass. They do not come within the light-house as they do within a dock: in that case they have the actual use and occupation of the dock. They not only do not come near the thing itself, which is the subject of profit, but they do not come within the parish. This is distinguishable from all the other cases where the tolls themselves have arisen in respect not only of what was produced in the parish, but from the actual use of the thing which was the subject of the rate." It was ordered that the rate be amended by striking out 2250*l.*, and inserting 4*l.*, the annual value of the house.

Rex v. Shepherd, 1 B. & Ald. 109. This was an appeal against a rate for the parish of St. Peter, Wisbech, whereby the defendant was rated for the profits of the sloop John, and one Patrick for the sloop Nene. The harbour of Wisbech is several miles up the river, but the water is so shallow that small vessels only can get up into the parish of St. Peter's. Part of the port is not in any parish. The John, being too large to get up to the parish, was never within any part of it. Her usual birth was in the port, but not in the parish. "John of Wisbech" was painted on her stern. The cargoes were usually unshipped into smaller vessels, which had their home in St. Peter's, and were included in the rate. The owners and master resided in St. Peter's, and carried on their business there. The sloop is registered there, and has her entries and clearances made there. The freight is generally paid, and the contracts made at the place of business. The sloop Nene usually receives and delivers her cargo in the parish, where her voyage terminates, but occasionally delivers them out of the parish. When unemployed, her home is in the parish, where her owner and master resides and carries on his business. She is registered there, and her name on the stern is "The Nene of Wisbech." At the time of the rate she was not in the parish. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "As the ship John was never within the parish, I cannot consider the rule by which the court has abided in all cases, viz. that the property should be locally within the parish, as attaching upon her. That vessel has never been locally or visibly within the parish, and therefore I do not consider her as rateable. As to the Nene, she is said to have been out of the parish at the time when the rate was made; but I cannot say that we are to measure by a stop-watch the precise position of a ship (which is in its nature a machine of passage) at the time when the rate was made. If such strictness were required, it would be almost impossible to make a ship the subject of a rate. It appears to me to be sufficient to answer the purpose of the poor laws, that the parish in which the ship is rated is the domicile of the vessel, and that the profits derived from it contribute to the ability of the occupier within the parish. In all cases the profit is earned, as to the bulk, out of the place. This vessel, as far as can be predicated of such a thing, yields a profit so as to answer the description of local and visible property within the parish. It need not be ascertained with precise exactness where the ship was at the time of the rate, in order to give validity to the rate; this parish was generally her home, and the vessel so far resided there that it could not be predicated of it, that it resided elsewhere; therefore it must be rated within that parish; it can be rated no where else. It seems to me therefore that the Nene was well rated in the parish of St. Peter's." Bayley, J.

"I think that the Nene was well rated in the parish of St. Peter's; it has been decided over and over again, and too often for us to disturb it now, that if property can be shown to be available property in the parish where the owner resides, he must be rated there in respect of such property. It is found in this case that the owner of this vessel was an inhabitant of the parish, and also that the ship's port was within this parish: she usually received and delivered her cargo there: then, if I may use the expression, where was the property domiciled? Locally within the parish of St. Peter's. It has been said that the ship might be lost at the time when the rate was imposed: but it must be recollected that the rate is made in respect of by-gone profits, already earned at that time, and therefore the loss of the ship could not interfere with the right of the parish to receive this rate in respect of profits antecedently received." Abbott, J. "I think the owner of the ship John was not rateable in respect of that vessel, inasmuch as she was never within the limits of the parish; the rule being, that the property rated must be visible property within the parish. If the court were to depart from this rule, I think it would create great uncertainty and confusion in this branch of the law. As to the Nene, I think the owner was rateable in respect of that vessel, as St. Peter's was the parish where her cargo was usually received and delivered, and which, when unemployed, was her home. Being a coasting vessel, she would necessarily be often absent, but in the course of that employment she would often return to the parish: it may therefore fairly be said that this parish was her home, just as the dwelling-house of a person travelling on his necessary business may be said to be his home. Looking then at the general state and condition of this vessel, I think she must be considered as property locally visible within the parish, and that her occasional absence is quite immaterial." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion as to both points: as to the Nene, the owner is rated in respect of profits, which had been earned by him, from a vessel, which under the circumstances must be considered as visible property within the parish. In the case of The King v. Jones, there was no statement that the ship was in the parish at the time of the rate being imposed; but that circumstance does not, I think, make any difference in this case, inasmuch as St. Peter's was the home of the vessel, and she must be considered as belonging to this parish for the purpose of being rated."

10. Where Property to be rated.

Rex v. Sculcoates, 12 East, 40. The commissioners of the Beverley drainage were rated for lands and buildings in Sculcoates, purchased by them and converted into a drain. By the 38 Geo. III. c. 63, commissioners were appointed for draining low grounds in certain parishes. For this purpose they purchased the lands and buildings now rated, which were converted into a drain extending from Beverly to Sculcoates, ten miles; but no part of the lands thereto adjoining are benefited thereby: previous to the purchase, these lands and buildings had been rated, but since the making of the drain they had not. The proprietors of the low grounds had been benefited by this drainage. Lord Ellenborough said he could not find by the act that the commissioners were in the receipt of any fund for their own benefit, or were trustees of any divisible fund in their hands in this parish, for the benefit of others; and certainly not so for their own benefit. That the only persons benefited were the owners of lands benefited by the drainage in other parishes, and in those liable to be rated for the improved value of their premises. Bayley, J. asked if there was any beneficial interest derived in this parish from these works. Lord Ellenborough. "In all the cases cited, the property rated yielded pecuniary benefit, or that which was capable of being estimated and converted into pecuniary benefit, within the parish, to the parties interested; but here the benefit results to the lands drained, which lie in other parishes, and the property would be liable to a double rate if it were also rateable in the hands of the commissioners. Here is no benefit received by these commissioners for themselves or others within this parish, which is capable of being rated. The benefit is all divided in other parishes. The dock company of Hull were in the receipt of tolls for the benefit of the shareholders in respect of the use of the docks within the parish in which they were rated: but the commissioners are the mere instruments of benefit to landowners elsewhere. I know of no instance where a canal company has been held rateable for the mere space occupied by the canal in a particular parish, if no tolls were received or become due there; (a) and I cannot distinguish between land converted into a drainage and a canal." And finally he delivered the opinion of the court, that the commissioners having no beneficial occupation of the property in this parish, either for themselves or others, were not liable to be rated.

On waste lands, formerly fens and marsh, drained, &c.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 37, when waste lands, which were formerly fens and marsh, are drained and improved, and the parish to which they belong cannot be ascertained, the occupier thereof, or of houses built thereon, tenements, tithes arising therefrom, mines therein, and saleable underwoods thereon growing, or hereafter to grow, are to be rated to the parish that lies nearest to such lands; and if any dispute shall arise as to what parish or place they ought to be rated to, the justices in quarter sessions shall, after due notice given to the persons interested, and to the parishes and places abutting and adjoining the said lands, cause them to be assessed as they shall think meet, and their determination and allotment is to be final and conclusive.

It was observed by Willes, J. in Rex v. Wavell, Dougl. 116, that the title of a poor rate is in general material, and cannot be rejected as surplusage; as if by its title a rate purport to have been made to raise money to reimburse money borrowed, that defect in the object of the rate will be fatal to its validity. See the usual form of title of rate, post, Appendix.

Wherever a union has been established, the poor law commissioners have required that a rate-book should be provided in the following form; and in all cases the rate should specify the name of the occupier, the description of the property, its value, and amount at which it is assessed; and the form may be as below:

Rex v. The Undertakers of the Aire and Calder Navigation, 2 B. & C. 713. Upon an appeal against a poor rate, the sessions confirmed the rate, subject to a case, which stated that each occupier was rated thus:—Occupier, Ashton, Joseph; Rate, 1*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.*; Assessment, 2*s.* 10*d.* Case:—The property in respect of which the defendants were rated was not particularized or specified. Abbott, C. J. "The objection to the form of the rate is decisive. If any person wished to appeal, on the ground that another was underrated, how could he tell in respect of what property the rate was imposed?" Rate quashed. See post, Rex v. Bromyard.

The description of the property assessed must also be in such terms as to show it was in point of law prima facie rateable; and therefore it must not be described as merely a way or an entrance, &c.

A preceding or even ancient rate may be a good rule for future assessments, but it cannot be confirmed as a standing rate; but to be equal it should be altered as circumstances have altered. Rex v. Wrexham Regis, 1 Bott, 123.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, they (the overseers), or the greater part of them, shall take order from time to time by and with the consent of two or more such justices of the peace as is aforesaid, &c. (See that stat. ante, 11.)

And this consent is usually given by the justice signing the rate, with their allowance thereupon thus:

We, two of his majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, one whereof is of the quorum, do consent unto and allow of this assessment: witness our hands the day of 18

J. P.

K. P.

The allowance of the rate shall be recorded in the rate-book. Poor Law Commissioners Rules.

But this consent is to be understood of two justices out of sessions; for the sessions have no original power to order an assessment to be made, but only if it come before them by way of appeal; for in such case the party would be deprived of the benefit of appealing. (2 Lord Raym. 798.)

And if the justices refuse to sign and allow the rate, the Court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus to compel them; and an attachment if they keep out of the way to avoid the mandamus. (Rex v. Edwards, 1 Bla. 637.)

Rex v. Justices of Dorchester, 1 Stra. 393. A mandamus issued to the justices to sign a poor rate. Before the return, a motion was made to supersede it for several objections to the fairness of the rate. But by the court: "The two justices are necessary to sign the rate only by way of form; for it is the churchwardens and overseers that have the power of making it; and whether it be a fair rate or not, is proper for the jurisdiction of the sessions, and was never intended for examination." The justices returned that they could not allow the rate, it not being a just and proper rate; and the court quashed the return, and ordered an attachment.

Rex v. Uttoxeter, 1 Bott, 83. The allowance of the poor rate by two justices is merely a ministerial act. (See also Rex v. Kynaston, 1 East, 117.)

43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, enacts, "that the mayors, bailiffs, or other head officers of every town and place corporate and city within this realm, being justice or justices of peace, shall have the same authority by virtue of this act within the limits of their jurisdictions, as well out of sessions as at their sessions, if they hold any, as is herein limited, prescribed and appointed to justices of the peace of the county, or any two or more of them, or to the justices of peace in their quarter sessions to do and execute for all the uses and purposes in this act prescribed, and no other justice or justices of peace to enter or meddle there; and that every alderman of the city of London within his ward shall and may do and execute in every respect so much as is appointed and allowed by this act to be done and executed by one or two justices of peace of any county within this realm."

Sect. 9 enacts, "that if it shall happen any parish to extend itself into more counties than one, or part to lie within the liberties of any city, town,

Rate for a parish comprehending a borough to be confirmed by a justice of a county and of the borough. (a)

Rex v. Gordon, 1 B. & Ald. 524. Where a parish contained within itself a borough not co-extensive with it, and the mayor of the borough, on a return to a mandamus for allowing a poor rate made by the churchwardens and overseers of the whole parish, stated a custom which had existed since stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, of appointing separate churchwardens and overseers, and of making separate rates for the borough and for those parts of the parish which lay without the borough; it was holden that such custom was invalid, and the return was quashed. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The 9th section of the 43d of Eliz. specifies and enumerates many acts that may be done separately, where a parish is partly within a town corporate, and partly without; but it does not mention the act of making rates. Now this of itself affords a very strong presumption that the legislature contemplated the making of one entire rate for the parish; and, besides, that section, after directing in what way the churchwardens and overseers are to be appointed, enacts expressly that they shall, without dividing themselves, execute their offices in all places within the said parish. That shows distinctly that one rate only for the whole parish must be made, and prohibits the making of separate rates by the separate bodies of churchwardens and overseers, as has been, according to the custom stated in this return, done within this borough. I think this return to the mandamus bad.

Only one rate for the whole, though a custom for two.

Distinct rates may now be made where borough and parish have had separate assessments for sixty years.

But by 59 Geo. III. c. 95, (b) separation of towns corporate or franchises from the parish in which they are situate shall be deemed lawful in case it shall appear that such separation has not commenced within sixty years before the passing of that act.

Publication.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 1, the churchwardens and overseers, or other persons authorized to take care of the poor, shall give or cause to be given public notice in the church of every rate for relief of the poor allowed by the justices, the next Sunday after such allowance; and no rate shall be esteemed or reputed valid and sufficient so as to collect or raise the same, unless such notice shall have been given.

Want of publication renders the rate invalid.

Rex v. Newcombe, 4 T. R. 368. On a mandamus to compel two justices to grant a warrant of distress to levy a poor rate, it appeared that the rate was not published till the third Sunday after it was allowed. The rate had been confirmed on appeal. Lord Kenyon, "This application is answered by the act of parliament, which requires a particular step to be taken before the rate can be 'valid;' namely, that public notice shall be given of the rate in the church on the next Sunday after it is allowed: that direction was not pursued in this case, and consequently the rate itself is invalid. Suppose the parish officers were to give notice of the rate at some other public place in the parish, it would not be sufficient, though it might be equally notorious. What is said in Hutchin v. Chambers (1 Burr. 579; 2 Ld. Keny. 204), is perfectly right, as applied to the inequality of the rate. But this is a radical defect in the rate itself which nothing can cure." Buller and Grose, Js. concurred.

(a) The contrary has been held in Rex v. Folly, 1 Bott, 86.

(b) See statute, ante, p. 19.

11. Form of Rate, Allowance, &c.

In Bennett v. Edwards (see post, 210), in giving judgment, Bayley, J. observed, "It is said that there was no proper publication in church, because the notice did not state that the rate had been allowed, but merely that it would be collected forthwith. Now the act requires no such publication in words. All that it requires is, 'that the churchwardens and overseers, or other persons authorized to take care of the poor in every parish, township, &c. shall give or cause to be given public notice in church of every rate for the relief of the poor allowed by the justices of the peace the next Sunday after the same shall have been so allowed; and that no rate shall be reputed valid and sufficient, so as to collect and raise the same, unless such notice shall have been given.' It does not say that notice shall be given, 'that the rate has been allowed,' but 'of every rate allowed.' This has been done here. It must have been in fact allowed, or the publication would be useless. A notice that a rate is about to be collected ex necessitate implies that it has been allowed."

Notice that a rate will be collected is sufficient.

12. Of Inspection of the Rate, &c.

12. Of Inspection of the Rate.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 2, it is enacted, "that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or other persons authorized as aforesaid (i. e. to take care of the poor) in every parish, township, or place, shall permit all and every the inhabitants of the said parish, township, or place, to inspect every such rate at all seasonable times, paying one shilling for the same, and shall upon demand forthwith give copies of the same or any part thereof to any inhabitant of the said parish, township, or place, paying at the rate of 6d. for every twenty-four names."

By s. 3, it is enacted, "that if any churchwarden or overseer of the poor, or other person authorized as aforesaid, shall not permit any inhabitant or parishioner to inspect the said rates, or shall refuse or neglect to give copies thereof as aforesaid, such churchwarden or overseer, or other person authorized as aforesaid, for every such offence, shall forfeit and pay to the party aggrieved the sum of 20*l.* to be sued for and recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts of record, wherein no essoign, protection, or wager of law, or more than one imparlance, shall be allowed."

Spencely v. Robinson, 3 B. & C. 658; 5 D. & Ryl. 572; 2 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 551. In an action on the statute it appeared that the plaintiff was an inhabitant of Coxwold, and the defendant overseer. The rate in question was published on the 28th of March. About eight o'clock of the 19th of April, the plaintiff sent his son to the defendant, to request that he would come to him at his (plaintiff's) house. The defendant went and saw the plaintiff and his attorney; the plaintiff asked the defendant to allow him to inspect the rate, and tendered him one shilling. The defendant said that he durst not allow it; he was ordered not to do it. The plaintiff's attorney then asked him for a copy of the rate. The defendant then went away and related what had taken place to Mr. Newton, a magistrate, and stated that he had not shown the rate, because he was informed that he was not obliged to show it. Mr. Newton told him that he was, and pointed out the clause, and advised him to go back immediately and show the plaintiff the rate, and take a copy of it next morning as early as possible to the attorney. The defendant did return to the plaintiff's house, in about two hours after the inspection of the rate had been demanded, and offered to show him the rate, and the defendant made out a copy that night and delivered it to the plaintiff's attorney early the following morning. The latter said that it was too late, for the plaintiff could not appeal to the next sessions. The defendant said that he would waive all objection to the notice. The defendant on the

The demand to inspect the rate must be made at a reasonable time and place by an inhabitant who is aggrieved.

12. Inspection of the Rate.

17th of April had met the plaintiff's attorney in Helmsley market, which is about eight miles from Coxwold, and he then asked him if he had a copy of the rate, for he was employed by the plaintiff, and wished to see one. The defendant said that he should have one if he was entitled to it, and the attorney replied that he should be at Coxwold on Monday the 19th, and should expect to have one. Bayley, J. told the jury, that although there was a refusal at one time to permit an inspection of the rate, the question was whether that refusal was not done away with by what subsequently took place. The defendant, within two hours after the refusal, having offered to allow the plaintiff to inspect the rate, and having delivered a copy to the plaintiff's attorney early next morning, a party was bound to give an overseer a reasonable time to do what the law required, and that if the jury thought that the defendant had complied with the demand in a reasonable time, the defendant was entitled to a verdict. The jury found a verdict for the defendant. On a motion for a new trial it was urged, that as permission to inspect the rate had been once refused, a right of action vested in the plaintiff. Abbott, C. J. "My doubt in this case has been not whether the learned judge left the proper question to the jury, but whether he ought to have left any question at all to the jury. I think that the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited." After reciting sect. 2, he added, "The person, therefore, to whom an inspection is to be allowed, or a copy to be given, must be an inhabitant. The defendant, therefore, was not bound to attend to the request made by the attorney of the plaintiff on the 17th." His lordship here read the next clause, sect. 3, and said, "The latter words plainly import that the penalty is to be given to the person who has sustained an injury by the act of the overseer. Now here the plaintiff sustained no injury, for he was not deprived of his appeal by what took place, as it might have been entered at the next sessions, and the justices had power to adjourn it to a subsequent sessions. The question left to the jury was, whether the defendant had within a reasonable time complied with the request of the plaintiff, to be permitted to inspect the rate, or to have a copy. Before any right of action could vest in the plaintiff, by reason of the defendant's not permitting him to inspect the rate, a request must have been made for such permission at a reasonable time and place. The house of the overseer, where he may be fairly supposed to keep the rate-book, must be the reasonable place for making such a request or demand. Now, in this case, the overseer, without having any notice that the rate-book is required, is desired to come to the plaintiff's house, and the demand to inspect the rate-book is made at a place where it was known he could not have the book with him. That was an unreasonable place for making the request. I think, therefore, that there was, in this case, no legal request or demand to inspect the rate-book. Then, as to the copy of the rate, assuming that the demand of a copy made by the solicitor in the presence of the plaintiff, was a demand by the latter, the defendant was entitled to a reasonable time to comply with that demand. For although the statute requires the overseer to furnish the copy forthwith, that word must receive a reasonable construction so as to give the overseer an opportunity of making the copy required. Here the copy was made during the night, and delivered the following morning. That demand was complied with in a reasonable time, and therefore the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited." Holroyd, J. "I think that the demand to inspect the rate was not sufficient, because it was not made at a reasonable time and place. I think, also, that the plaintiff was not a party grieved, because he did not sustain any injury by the refusal to allow him to inspect the rate. The being an inhabitant does not make him a party grieved. It has been held under the Bankrupt Laws, that unless the party be a creditor, he is not a party grieved, within the meaning of those statutes."

An assistant overseer is not liable to the penalty for not producing the rate, unless by the terms of his appointment it

Bennett v. Edwards, 7 B. & C. 586; 1 M. & R. 482. In a similar action against an assistant overseer, it appeared that the plaintiff and his attorney, Steele, required of the defendant to see the rates, but tendered no fee to the defendant for showing them. On a subsequent day they went together to the defendant's house; the defendant met them in the yard, close to the door. Steele said, "It is intimated to Mr. Bennett (the plaintiff), that the reason you refused to show the accounts was because the proper fees were not tendered. I hope you will take the money and let us see the rate." The defendant then said, "I cannot; I have the books, but I have orders not to show them;" and a moment afterwards added, "Bennett may see them by going to the vestry," (explaining, upon inquiry, that he meant the select vestry, who had consented to meet at short notice, should the plaintiff apply for inspection of the rate and accounts). The plaintiff then tendered 1s. 6d. and said he demanded inspection of the poor rate; and the defendant said he had orders not to show them. A rate was allowed on the 17th May, 1827, and published in church on the 20th, in the form following: "This is to give notice, that a rate or assessment of one shilling in the pound will be collected forthwith." The next preceding rate had been made the 8th December, 1826, and published on the 24th. The action was brought before June 15th, so that no sessions intervened between the time of the refusal and the commencement of the suit. The plaintiff was nonsuited, and on a motion for a new trial, Bayley, J. said, "In the course of the argument six questions have been presented, on one only of which we have felt any doubt. First, the presence of the attorney has been made an objection to the mode of making the demand; and it is said, that, not being a parishioner, he and the plaintiff improperly required the defendant to give them inspection. But it appeared that the attorney had explained to the defendant that he asked for inspection on behalf of Mr. Bennett, his client, and although by the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 2 and 3, an inhabitant alone is entitled to inspect the rate, yet his attorney, or any other person, may go with him to make the demand; or in case of an improper refusal, how can the demand be proved? Secondly, I think the plaintiff was a party aggrieved. Here the plaintiff had a right to see the rate, in order to satisfy himself whether he was fairly dealt with, and whether other parties were assessed at all, or to the full value, or whether he was overrated; and this inspection was wrongfully denied him.^(a) Fourthly, the objection that there was not a sufficient demand, is answered by the fact that the plaintiff asked for the rate. There was no rate in esse at the time of such demand except this, which was published in church on the 20th of May, and demand was made on the 23d. Fifthly, it is said that the refusal was not absolute, because the books were offered to be produced at the vestry. But if a party entrusted with the rate has no right to insist on terms, then a refusal qualified by such terms as he has no right to insist on, is an unlawful refusal; and he thereby commits the offence of not permitting the parishioners to inspect the rate within the words of this act of parliament. The remaining question on which we doubt, is, whether the defendant as assistant overseer be liable within the act of parliament. We all think that this rule ought not to be made absolute for entering a verdict for the plaintiff. For if we decide that an assistant overseer may be liable to the penalty imposed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, it will still be a question of fact whether the defendant was such an assistant overseer. If it was part of his duty to produce the rate, the plaintiff will be entitled to a verdict. But if that was no part of his duty, there ought to be a nonsuit. Assuming, therefore, that we should be of opinion that an assistant overseer (whose duty it is to produce the rate) is an overseer within the meaning of the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, it will still be a question for the jury, whether the defendant was such an overseer." Holroyd, J. "The law knows what an overseer is, but it does not know what is an assistant overseer. He may be appointed generally to do all the business of an overseer, as a deputy, or only to keep the accounts, or perform other particular business. If it were his duty to do all the acts which an overseer is bound to do, then he ought to have produced the rate. A jury must decide this by ascertaining the nature of his duty." C. a. v. Bayley, J. "The question reserved for our consideration was, whether this action was maintainable against an assistant overseer. The select vestry are to determine and specify the duties to be performed by the assistant overseer. It did not was part of his duty to produce the same.

Demand by an attorney in the name and presence of the inhabitant is sufficient.

The rate in esse is the last published rate.

A qualified refusal sufficient.

(a) The third question related to the publication of the rate. See ante, p. 208.

12. Inspection of the Rate.

If defendant neglect, after notice, to produce his appointment on the trial, his duty may be inferred from his conduct.

The custody of parish books implies a duty to allow inspection.

appear upon the trial what duties the defendant was liable to perform. He may be liable to perform all or only some of the duties of overseer. It must depend on the nature of his appointment, therefore, whether it was part of his duty to exhibit the rate to the plaintiff in this case. There having been no evidence to show that it was his duty, as assistant overseer, to produce the rate, the case must go down to another jury, in order that the nature of his duties may be ascertained." At the second trial, in addition to the former evidence, it appeared that the plaintiff had given the defendant notice to produce his appointment to the office of assistant overseer; but he refused to produce it. Park, J. left it to the jury to infer, from the conduct of the defendant when the rate was demanded of him, and from the fact of the non-production of his appointment, that it was part of his duty, as assistant overseer, to produce the rate. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on those counts which charged the defendant as assistant overseer. Upon a motion in arrest of judgment (8 B. & C. 702; 2 M. & R. 482), Bayley, J. said, "I agree that he is not a person authorized to take care of the poor within the meaning of the statute. Neither is he a churchwarden. Is he then an overseer? Certainly not for all purposes, but for this I think he is. The 59 Geo. III. authorizes the appointment of assistant overseers, and every person so appointed is authorized to execute all such of the duties of overseer as shall in the warrant of his appointment be expressed. And therefore it is not sufficient to aver that the defendant was assistant overseer, but that must be stated which expressly, or by necessary implication, shows that he was an assistant overseer with the duty in question cast upon him. If the duty of keeping the parish books and rates is imposed, I think the consequence follows that he must allow the inspection of them. If this were otherwise, the original overseer, when applied to for permission to inspect, might answer that he had them not: the assistant overseer might say, that it was no part of his duty to exhibit them; and thus the 17 Geo. II. would be inoperative. I am, therefore, of opinion that when the duty of keeping the rate is imposed, the duty of allowing an inspection of it is imposed also." Littledale, J. "The duties of an assistant overseer are certainly undefined, nor can we tell correctly what they are without seeing the warrant by which he is appointed. The rate book might be delivered to him for the purpose of collecting the rate only; but then the plaintiff must have been nonsuited. We are, therefore, bound to presume after verdict that the defendant was proved to be such an assistant overseer as made it his duty to produce the rate to the plaintiff, and in general we may presume that when a person has the custody of the parish books, he has them for lawful purposes for which they may be wanted." Parke, J. was of opinion that the declaration was sufficient to warrant a judgment for the plaintiff. It is alleged that he, as such assistant overseer, had the rate in his possession at the time it was demanded. According to Shreves v. Parker (1 T. R. 141), we must assume that it was delivered to him for some purpose connected with the duties of his office; and as those duties can only be some of the duties of the principal overseer, he would have the rate in the same way as the overseer himself. If so, it follows that he was bound to produce it when lawfully demanded, and is liable to a penalty for refusing to do so. If this were otherwise the parishioners might be altogether deprived of the means of obtaining an inspection of the rate. The defendant then brought a writ of error, and, after argument, the judgment was given by Tindal, C. J. "In the argument of this case two objections have been taken; first, that an assistant overseer is not within the 17 Geo. II., which imposes the penalty; and secondly, assuming that he is within the statute, that he is not liable upon this record. We think neither of these objections can prevail. With respect to the first, the words of the 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, are (his lordship read the clause). It is said, that an assistant overseer does not come within either of these descriptions. It may be admitted that he is not a churchwarden or overseer, but whether he be or not a person authorized to take care of the poor will depend upon the nature of his appointment." The learned judge then read the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, (ante, 32), under which he was appointed, and added, "It must, therefore, depend upon the words of his appointment whether an assistant overseer be or be not a person authorized to take care of the poor; and if they are large enough to embrace all the authority of the superior officer, then, undoubtedly, he would be within the meaning of the statute a person authorized to take care of the poor, and liable to the penalty. It would, indeed, be a narrow construction of this statute to confine its operation to such officers only as were then in existence. It is true that it could not at the time be intended to apply to assistant overseers, because such officers were not then known; but the legislature having created an officer, who does come within the description of the statute, it would be a narrow construction of an act, which is not merely penal, but remedial, to say that such an officer was not within its operation. Still it is said, that upon this record the defendant is not brought within its operation. Now the declaration contains an allegation that the defendant is an assistant overseer, which allegation could not be proved, except by the production of the appointment, or by giving secondary evidence of its contents. Without adverting to any other allegation, the judge, who had the warrant of appointment before him, would direct the jury that the case was not within the statute, unless by the appointment the defendant had authority to take care of the poor. After verdict we must therefore assume that the authority of the defendant was such as would satisfy the description in the act. But the declaration further alleges, that the defendant was requested to produce the rate, and had it in his possession as such assistant overseer. At all events, therefore, if by his appointment he had no general authority to take care of the poor, he had a limited authority, part of which was to have the custody of the books; because we cannot after verdict intend that he had the book in his possession, otherwise than in the execution of his duty. The question therefore is whether, after verdict, it must not be intended that he was authorized to have the care of the poor, or that it was his duty to have the custody and possession of these books; and in either view of this case the declaration would be sufficient. If this declaration had contained an allegation that defendant had authority to take care of the poor, no doubt could exist; but as it is doubtful whether he had that, or a mere limited power, and as the judge must have directed the jury to find for the defendant, unless by his appointment he came within the description of the statute, we must after verdict intend that he had either a general authority to take care of the poor, or a limited authority to have the rightful custody of the books." The learned judge then distinguished the case from Rex v. Everett (8 B. & C. 114; 2 M. & R. 35), and affirmed the judgment. (3 Y. & J. 458; 6 Bing. 230; 3 M. & P. 749.)

Whitchurch v. Chapman, 3 B. & Adol. 691. By a local act for certain incorporated parishes guardians of the poor were appointed, and were authorized to appoint a clerk, and to make rates; and all poor rates and books purporting to be rates made for the said parishes, and all papers relating to the settlement of the poor, were to be delivered by the churchwardens and overseers to the clerk of the guardians for the time being, who was to cause the same to be preserved and filed. The clerk to the guardians paid the casual and out poor weekly, and transacted some other matters relating to the poor, and had the custody of the books. Lord Tenterden, "No persons are subject to the penalty imposed by 17 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 3, but churchwardens, overseers, or persons authorized to take care of the poor. The defendant was neither. The guardians were the persons so authorized. In Bennett v. Edwards (ante, 210), the defendant was assistant overseer, the case therefore fell within the words of the act, and he appeared to be the only person who had possession of the rate." Littledale, J. "In Bennett v. Edwards, the defendant, who had the custody of the rate, was a person authorized to take care of the poor. Here, by the local act, the clerk of the guardians is to have the custody of the poor rate, but the guardians are the persons who are authorized to take care of the poor, and the demand of inspection ought to have been made to them." Parke and Taunton, Js. concurred.

inspection of books, &c. although the time for appealing has elapsed; but the party applying should state some grounds.

There may be other reasons besides the right of appeal.

J. P., a rated inhabitant of the parish, to inspect the accounts relating to the poor, for the years ending 1821, 1822, 1823, and 1824, at all reasonable times, paying, &c. as required by the act. Bayley, J. "The right of inspection given by the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, is not general, but for the remedy of the evils contemplated by the statute. The applicant should, therefore, have shown some ground for desiring to inspect the books; and for want of such statement I think that this rule must be discharged. It is no answer to the application, that in a subsequent clause a penalty is imposed; that is not given by way of compensation to the party grieved, but it is imposed for the relief of the poor, and to punish the offender." Holroyd, J. "In Com. Dig. Mandamus (A), it is stated that the writ of mandamus is granted to prevent failure of justice, and for the execution of the common law, or of a statute, or of the king's charter; but not as a private remedy to the party. The applicant not having stated the grounds upon which he desires to inspect the books, has not brought himself within that rule for granting a mandamus. His right as a parishioner is a mere private right, for which the court will not grant it. The penalty, indeed, is not such a specific legal remedy as would prevent our interference, but inasmuch as I think the party should have pointed out some public ground for the court to proceed upon, and has not done so, this rule must be discharged." Littledale, J. concurred.

On an application for a mandamus in behalf of a rated parishioner, to allow him an inspection of the accounts of the expenditure of the parish monies kept by guardians of the poor, appointed under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, Lord Tenterden, C. J. "We have no doubt that the party is entitled to inspect the books at a reasonable time. Assuming that he has no right to appeal, or that the time for appeal is gone by, he may have other good reasons for inspecting the books. He has a right to see what has been done." Rule absolute. 13. Relief from Rate by Justices, with Consent of Overseers, in Cases of Poverty.

By 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 11, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace acting for the county, riding, division, or jurisdiction, in which any district, parish, township, or hamlet shall be situated, in petty sessions assembled, on application made to them by any person rated to any rates or cesses within any such district, township, parish, or hamlet, to be discharged therefrom, and proof of his or her inability, through poverty, to pay such rate or cess, with the consent of the churchwardens and overseers of such district, parish, township, or hamlet, or of such other person or persons as is or are competent to act, under the authority of any act or acts of parliament, for the ordering, management, control, or direction of the poor of any such district, parish, township, or hamlet, to order and direct that such person shall be excused from the payment of such rate or cess, and to strike out his or her name therefrom: and the sum at which such person was so rated in such rate or cess shall not hereafter be collected, or any person or persons charged therewith, or in any manner called or liable to account for the same, or for omitting to collect or receive the same."

If the occupier is excused on account of poverty, the owner cannot be rated. (Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 5 D. & R. 359; 2 B. & C. 516, S. C.)

14. *Of Appeals and Remedies under Local Acts.*14. Of Appeals to Sessions under Local Acts, and Remedies. (b)

A person aggrieved by a poor rate may in all cases be relieved by appeal, and sometimes by application to local authorities under particular statutes, but the rate cannot be abandoned by the overseers. (Rex v. Cambridgeshire, 2 B. & Adol. 370.)

If the rate be a nullity, or the person charged be not rateable at all, he may then not only appeal, but also dispute his liability when his goods have been distrained in an action of trespass or replevin. (Milward v. Caffin, 2 Bla. Rep. 1336; Durant v. Boys, 6 T. R. 580.) But if there be any thing legally due for poor rate, or there has been a distress under several warrants, and one of them was valid, then neither trespass nor replevin lies, but only a special action on the case for an excessive levy. (1 Adol. & Ell. 264.) It is always safest to appeal.

The following are some of the remedies provided by local acts :

Rex v. Justices of Kent, 9 B. & C. 283. By a local act, the management of the poor of Greenwich was vested in the churchwardens, overseers, governors and directors of the poor, and an appeal to them was given to any person thinking himself aggrieved by any thing to be done by virtue of the act, and if the appellant should be dissatisfied with their determination, then an appeal was given unto the quarter sessions; a parishioner having applied for relief against a rate to the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors, upon which, at a meeting regularly held, a resolution was moved, seconded, and carried, that no further notice of this application should be taken, against which resolution he appealed to the sessions. Lord Tenterden, "In this case a rate was made for a sum of money ordered to be paid out of that rate to S. (the vestry clerk). The appellant objected to that payment, and applied for relief under the local act to the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors assembled at a meeting on the 16th of July. They resolved that they would take no notice of his application for relief: they refused in fact to hear the appeal at all. The proper course under those circumstances would have been to have applied to this court for a mandamus to compel them to hear his appeal. If they had heard it, and come to a determination upon it, and he had been dissatisfied with that determination, he might then have appealed to the quarter sessions." In Rex v. Tucker (3 B. & C. 544; 5 D. & R. 434), the justices at petty sessions heard the evidence and dismissed the appeal.

Rex v. St. James, Westminster, 1 Ad. & El. 241; 4 N. & M. 252. By a local act for the relief of the poor in St. James, Westminster, it was provided that if any person should find himself aggrieved by any rate, he shall first apply to two justices, and if not relieved, shall be obliged to pay such rate, and then upon an appeal to the quarter sessions next after payment of such rate, the sessions may cause so much money to be returned as shall appear to the justices to have been overpaid, and to make such order as they think fit, which order was to be conclusive. The Earl of Burlington under this provision applied to two justices, who examined witnesses as to the value of the premises, and made an order (a) for the reduction of the rate. A rule was obtained to quash this order for insufficiency, and after argument, Lord Denman said, "The clause in question is an extraordinary one, and I should recommend the parish to have it made clear as soon as possible. I have a difficulty in inferring any authority in the justices to act upon an occasion of this kind from the words, 'if not relieved.' Still it must have been intended to give some power; and if so what is that power? It can only be to relieve the individual, and that is by amending the rate as far as it applies to him, and such amendment can be grounded only on an opinion formed by them that the party had been incorrectly rated. The objection here taken is not to what they have done, but to the reason they have given. They have said that they thought the principle of the rate erroneous, but that is immaterial. They had no authority to quash the rate; their power was only to amend it so far as it affected the individual, and I cannot say that they should not have acted to that extent, because they have at the same time declared that they thought the rate erroneous in principle. (b) It may be so, and yet the error in principle may not affect any other person in the parish. If others were prejudiced by the amendment, the same remedy was open to them as to Lord Burlington. The justices have relieved a party whom they thought to be overrated; whether they thought so for good reasons or bad, or more or less extensive in effect, is, in my opinion, immaterial." Taunton, J. "In my opinion it follows by necessary implication from the words used, that the justices have authority to relieve, and consequently to form their conclusion as to granting relief in the way that appears to them most effectual." Patteson, J. "I certainly feel myself hampered by the words of this act: if however it is at variance with the general law of appeals, we cannot help that." The learned judge then quoted the clause as above, and added, "I cannot understand that the legislature should do so absurd a thing as to direct an application to justices, and then oblige the justices to say to the person applying, 'We have no power to relieve you, therefore you must go to the sessions.' As the party aggrieved cannot by this clause go to the sessions till after he has applied to the justices, it must have been meant that they should have power to hear the complaint and to relieve upon it. It is extraordinary that no power is given to administer an oath, and the justices have acted wisely and properly in not administering one. I think however we must take it by implication that the justices have power to deal with the complaint made by any person under it to any extent that may be necessary." The same judge observed during the argument, "It appears strange that this act gives the parish no appeal where the justices decide unfavourably to them." Williams, J. concurred.

Sudbury act gives an appeal, first to the borough sessions, and then to the county.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640. By a local act relating to the poor of Sudbury power was given to make a rate, and an appeal might be made against it, "first, to the justices of the peace of the town of Sudbury at their general quarter sessions next after the making and demanding the same, or at any other sessions to be held for the said town." A further appeal was given against the order of the justices of the town at their sessions, to the justices of the county at the general quarter sessions. At the January sessions for the town, the appellant instituted his appeal against four rates, made respectively on 17th September, 19th October, 16th November, and 14th December preceding. The borough sessions determined against him, and he appealed to the county sessions. Bayley, J. "The true construction of the clause is this, the legislature alluded to the general sessions which might be holden within the borough, and which might happen before the quarter sessions, not depending on that act of parliament by which the latter are regulated, the clause means that the party may appeal either to the quarter sessions or to the general sessions next after the rate, as the case may be. I think the appeal as to the first rate was clearly out of time."

*Appeal to borough
justices.*

Under 17 Geo. II.
c. 38.

Where the parish in which the rate is made is situated within a borough, the appeal, under certain circumstances, may be made to the justices of the borough. By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, the justices and sessions of boroughs have power over appeals against rates, made for places within the borough, exclusive of the county. (Rex v. St. Mary Taunton, 1 Bott, 282.) But their jurisdiction is modified by the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 5, which provides in all corporations or franchises which have not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons in any of the cases aforesaid, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such corporation or franchise is situate.

An appeal to the county general or quarter sessions from corporations and franchises not having six justices allowed.

And by 1 Geo. IV. c. 36, it is enacted that "in all corporations and franchises not having more than six justices of the peace, nor having jurisdiction or authority over two or more whole parishes or wards contained within such corporation or franchise, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, in any of the cases mentioned or referred to by the said act or acts or either of them, where an appeal is given by the said act or acts or either of them, to appeal, if he, she, or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such corporation or franchise is situate, in as ample manner as if such corporation or franchise had not four justices of the peace: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to extend to any city or town corporate being a county of itself."

Rex v. Justices of Essex, 5 M. & Sel. 513. Upon a rule for a mandamus to receive an appeal against a poor's rate for the parish of Saffron Walden, the case was, the town and parish of Saffron Walden are co-extensive. The town is a town corporate, and by the charter the mayor during his mayoralty and for one year next ensuing, the recorder and the deputy recorder, and the two senior aldermen (making together six), are constituted justices. The corporation have held a court of quarter sessions from the date of their charter. The mayor is elected from the aldermen, and the aldermen from the inhabitants, and, except the recorder and deputy recorder, the justices composing the court of quarter sessions must be resident in the parish of Saffron Walden. The appellants gave notice, and (among others) to the mayor and recorder, as being two of the persons in respect of whom they were over-rated; and the other town justices, except the deputy recorder, were also rated in the said assessment. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Of the six corporation justices, consisting of the recorder, the deputy-recorder, two senior aldermen, and two other persons, it was contended that the last four were disqualified by law from sitting upon any appeal in any matter respecting the poor laws, as being in respect of their inhabitancy and liability to be rated within the borough, on that account incompetent, and that these being judicial acts, as persons interested, they were in the language of one of the cases cited, tacitly excepted. And the case of Greate Charte and Kennington (2 Str. 1173), and of Foxam Tything, in Com. Wilts (2 Salk. 607), were relied on to this effect; but upon looking into the 43 Eliz. c. 1, 16 Geo. II. c. 18, and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, we are of opinion that the justices of the borough of Saffron Walden are not disqualified from sitting as a court of appeal under the poor laws, on the ground of their being rated or chargeable with the rates of the place within which their jurisdiction is to be exercised. By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, as head officers of the town corporate, they, being justices of the peace, have the same authority within the limits and precincts of their jurisdiction, as is limited, prescribed, and appointed by that act to justices of the peace of the county, 'and no other justices of the peace are to enter or meddle there.' Being invested with the like jurisdiction, both original and appellate, on the subject of the poor laws with justices of the county, and with the sort of ne intromittant provision in their favour as to its exercise which I have last stated, there occurred in Mich. term, 16 Geo. II., the case in 2 Str. 1173, in which it was held that a justice could not join in removing a pauper from his own parish. This decision in its letter, if it should continue to be acted upon as a general rule of law, would have wholly disabled the justices of a great many towns corporate from acting in the execution of the poor laws, both in an original and in an appellate character, as justices in respect to the same; and it is fair to presume, from the very nearly contemporary date of the stat. 16 Geo. II. c. 18, with this decision, that this act was introduced to obviate this inconvenience; for reciting, 'that doubts had arisen whether according to the laws and statutes then in force, his majesty's justices of the peace might lawfully act in any case relating to the parishes and places to the rates and taxes of which such justices respectively are rated or chargeable,' it enacts, 'that it shall and may be lawful to and for all and every justice or justices of the peace for any county, riding, city, liberty, franchise, borough or town corporate, within their respective jurisdictions, to make, do, and execute all and every act or acts, matter or matters, thing or things, appertaining to their office as justice or justices of the peace, so far as the same relates to the laws for the relief, maintenance, and settlement of poor persons, or to any other laws concerning parochial taxes, levies, or rates, notwithstanding any such justice or justices of the peace is or are rated to or chargeable with the taxes, levies or rates within any such parish, township, or place affected by any such act or acts of such justice or justices as aforesaid.' However, inasmuch as from the greatness of the number of justices of the peace for counties, the attendance of any particular justice could be spared upon appeals, it provides 'that that act, or any thing therein contained, should not authorize or empower any justice or justices of the peace for any county or riding at large, to act in the determination of any appeal to the quarter sessions for any such county or riding, from any order, matter, or thing relating to any such parish, township, or place where such justice or justices of the peace is or are so charged, taxed or chargeable as aforesaid; any thing therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.' Here it will be observed, that 'justices of the peace for cities, liberties, franchises, boroughs, or towns corporate,' who are all included by name in the enabling clause of this statute, are not included in this prohibitory provision in the case of appeals, which prohibition is confined expressly to justices of the peace for counties and ridings at large only. The stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 5, probably adverting to and meaning to obviate the danger of admitting justices, under any bias or interest in the subject-matter of the appeal, to sit upon such appeals, where from the smallness of the number of the attending justices, such bias or interest shall be likely to operate with prejudicial effect upon the administration of justice, provides, 'that in all corporations and franchises, which have not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, in any of the cases aforesaid, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such corporation or franchise is situate;' where the corporation justices consisted of a larger number of persons than four, thinking it probably unnecessary to interfere with the exclusive jurisdiction on this subject, which they derived under stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 8, which has already been observed upon. We are therefore, upon a view of the provisions of the several statutes referred to on this subject, and adverting to their policy and object, of opinion that the legislature meant, in the case of borough justices, (where the whole number of them was four or more), as in the present case, to leave their jurisdiction under 43 Eliz. entire, not curtailed or abridged, from suspicions of possible abuse: a liberal confidence on the part of the legislature, which ought to be repaid by the most perfect impartiality and justice on the part of those to whom such a jurisdiction is under such circumstances entrusted." Rule discharged.

Costs.

Upon an appeal against a rate on account of the omission of rateable persons, the sessions had no power to insert the names until 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, called Lord Ellenborough's Act, which, by s. 1, enacts, that "upon all appeals from any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace shall, and such court is hereby authorized and required (in all cases where they shall see just cause to give relief) to amend such rate or assessment, either by inserting therein or striking out the name or names of any person or persons, or by altering the sum or sums therein charged on any persons, or in any other manner which the said court shall think necessary for giving such relief, and without quashing or wholly setting aside such rate or assessment: Provided always, that if the said court shall be of opinion that it is necessary, (a) for the purpose of giving relief to the person or persons appealing, that the rate or assessment should be wholly quashed, then the said court may quash the same, but nevertheless, all and every the sum and sums of money in and by such rate or assessment charged on any person or persons, shall and may be levied and recovered by such ways and means, and in such and the same manner, as if no appeal had been made against such rate or assessment: and all and every the sum and sums of money which any person or persons charged in such rate or assessment shall pay, or which shall be levied upon or recovered from him, her, or them, shall be deemed and taken as payments on account of the next effective rate or rates, assessment or assessments, which shall be made for the relief of the poor of the same parish, township, vill, or place."

Amendment of rate under 41 Geo. III. c. 23.

On appeal from any poor rate, the sessions may insert or strike out names, or alter the sums.

Sect. 6. "If any person or persons shall appeal against any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, because any other person or persons is or are rated or assessed in such rate or assessment, or is or are omitted to be rated or assessed therein, or because any other person or persons is or are rated or assessed in any such rate or assessment at any greater or less sum or sums of money than the sum or sums at which he, she, or they, ought to be rated or assessed therein, or for any other cause that may require any alteration to be made in such rate or assessment with respect to any other person or persons, then and in every such case the person or persons so appealing for the causes aforesaid, or any of them, shall give such notice of appeal, in writing as hereinbefore mentioned, not only to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor, or any two or more of them, but also to the other person or persons so interested or concerned in the event of such appeal as aforesaid; and such other person or persons shall, if he, she, or they shall so desire, be heard upon the said appeal; and it shall be lawful for the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace, on the hearing of such appeal, to order the name or names of such other person or persons to be inserted in such rate or assessment, and him, her, or them to be therein rated and assessed in any sum or sums of money; or to order the name or names of such other person or persons to be struck out of such rate or assessment, or the sum or sums at which he, she, or they is or are rated or assessed therein, to be altered in such manner as the said court shall think right; and the proper officer of the said court shall forthwith add to or alter the rate or assessment accordingly."

Time of appealing.

To what Sessions Appeal to be made, as regards Time.

Before some recent decisions, it had been thought necessary to enter and respite an appeal at the next practicable sessions, even though the order, &c. was served too late to give such notices as the sessions required for trying an appeal. However, a more sensible rule has now been adopted. And in Rex v. Justices of Southampton; Rex v. Justices of Devon; and Rex v. Justices of Kent, 8 B. & C. 639, and in notes, it was determined that it was not necessary to enter and adjourn an appeal when there was not sufficient time to give the notice of trial required by the sessions. (a)

The next sessions means the next sessions at which it is practicable to try the appeal.

An appeal against a poor rate must be made to the next sessions after the publication of the assessment, for it is by making the rate that the party is aggrieved. (Rex v. Micklefield, 1 Bott, 113; Cald. 507.)

Appeal must be to the next sessions after the allowance.

In Rex v. Atkins, 4 T. R. 12, it appeared that the rate was made in October, 1789, and allowed in the November following, against which the defendant appealed to the next Easter sessions, when the appeal was dismissed with costs, because it was not made to the sessions next after the allowance. The court without hearing any argument confirmed the order of sessions, on the authority of Rex v. Penryn and Rex v. Micklefield.

One intervening day between the publication of a rate, and the next immediate quarter sessions, is not sufficient for an effectual notice of appeal.

Rex v. The Justices of Sussex, 15 East, 206. On the 5th of October a rate was allowed, and on the following day (Sunday) it was published in the parish church of Horsham. The Michaelmas quarter sessions were holden at Petworth, on the 8th of October, there being only one intervening day between the publication of the rate and the quarter sessions, which was too short a time to inspect the rate, to see if the inequalities in the former rate had been continued, and whether the property omitted in former assessments had been inserted in the rate, so as to determine the deponent whether or not to appeal against it at the said sessions. The court determined the notice bad, and upon this confirmed the rate. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. asked why the parish officers made their rate so close upon the time of the sessions; it appeared as if they had done it with a view of ousting the parties of their appeal. The court had decided that morning that the next sessions meant the next practicable sessions at which an effectual appeal could be lodged. If by the late publication of the rate the parties are driven into such a narrow point of time as not to be able to make an effectual appeal at the next sessions, those must be considered the next when such appeal can be made effectually.

Rex v. The Justices of London, 15 East, 632. An appeal against a poor's rate in London or Middlesex must be made as in all other counties to the next (i. e. next practicable) general quarter sessions; though the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, in its terms gives the appeal to the next general or quarter sessions; it appearing from other parts of the act as well as from other acts in pari materia, that those terms are used synonymously, and though in the two counties named there are four general as well as four general quarter sessions. (See also Rex v. Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640.)

Rex v. The Justices of Wilts, 8 B. & C. 380; 2 M. & R. 401. A rate for the parish of Laycock was published on the 16th of September, 1827. The quarter sessions were held on the 16th of October at Marlborough, which is 16 miles from Laycock. The appellant gave no notice of appeal before the Michaelmas sessions, but at that sessions the appeal was entered and adjourned as a matter of course. It appeared upon affidavits that it was the usual practice of the court of quarter sessions for the county of Wilts, in appeals against rates, to enter the appeal at the sessions next following the making and publication of the rate, and to adjourn it to the next sessions as a matter of course. At the Epiphany sessions, the justices refused to hear the appeal. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think that the sound construction of the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, is, that the justices are to receive an appeal against a rate at the next sessions after publishing the same, and that they are then to exercise a discretion whether they will hear and determine it at that sessions, or respite it to the next. It is impossible to say that the matter must at all events be determined at the first sessions. The statute expressly mentions one case where the justices are to adjourn the appeal, and that is where it shall appear to them that reasonable notice has not been given, but other cases may occur in which it may be fit to adjourn the appeal, even though reasonable notice has been given, as in the case of the unavoidable absence of a material witness. Here it appears that the practice of the sessions has been to allow appellants to enter their appeals at the sessions next following the publication of the rate, and to adjourn the hearing to the second sessions as a matter of course. That being the general practice, I think that the appellant in this case, who acted on the faith that such practice would be adhered to, ought not to be deprived of his right of appeal, and therefore that the rule for a mandamus ought to be made absolute. At the same time I think it would be more beneficial to the public, and more consistent with the intention of the legislature, if the justices did not adjourn appeals against rates as a matter of course. I think they should endeavour to induce parties to try their appeal at the next practicable sessions after the publishing of the rate. Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion. It was competent for the justices at the first sessions after the publishing of the rate to refuse to receive the appeal unless there was proof that notice of appeal had been given; but they did receive the appeal. Having received it, it was then competent to them in their discretion to adjourn it, and they did adjourn it. I think the appeal ought to have been heard at the next sessions after that adjournment." Rule absolute.

Rex v. Justices of Monmouthshire, 1 Bar. & Adol. 895, the principle of which may be applied to this subject.

Rex v. Justices of Sussex, 7 T. R. 107; 2 Bott, 965. The appeal may be made to an adjourned sessions. And in this case Lord Kenyon, C. J. referred to the case of Rex v. Monks Risborough, 2 Bott, 954, and Rex v. Hinderclive, 2 Bott, 956.

14. Of Appeal, &c.

Meaning of "general" or "quarter" sessions.

The sessions have a discretion to hear an appeal against a rate at the sessions next after it is published when it is entered; but where it is the practice to adjourn the hearing to the next sessions after the appeal is entered, the appellant is entitled to try then, the statute 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 4, not being imperative in this respect.

But the justices should not adjourn the hearing as a matter of course.

Appeal may be to an adjourned sessions.

14. Of Appeal, &c.

Ground of appeal.

Against what an appeal lies.

Several having a joint grievance may join in a notice of appeal.

There may be one appeal against several rates.

In an appeal from the borough sessions the appellant is confined to his grounds there.

Where the ground of appeal is that a person has been omitted, the sessions have no jurisdiction unless notice has been given to that person.

It is a good ground of appeal that the rate does not show on the face of it in respect of what property the several persons are rated. For "if any person wished to appeal, on the ground that another was under rated, how could he tell in respect of what property the rate was imposed?" Abbott, C. J. Rex v. Aire and Calder Navigation, 4 D. & R. 253; 2 B. & C. 713. See ante, 206, S. C.

Rex v. Mayor and Justices of Norwich, 3 D. & R. 42. By 10 Anne, the city of Norwich, and hamlets and liberties of the same, were incorporated for the purpose of better employing and maintaining the poor thereof; and the guardians thereby appointed were empowered from time to time to ascertain what aggregate sums would be necessary for that purpose, and to ascertain what proportion each parish, &c., should contribute, and then certify the same to the justices, two of whom were to issue their warrant, requiring the proper officers of each parish, &c., to rate and assess the amount on the respective inhabitants; and it was provided, that if any person, parish, &c., should find himself or themselves to be unequally assessed, he or they might appeal at the next sessions held after such assessment made and demanded. And where, under this act, the governors certified that the hamlet of L. ought to pay a certain proportion of an assessment made upon the whole city, and two justices issued their warrant, requiring the collectors of the hamlet to assess that sum upon the inhabitants, and the hamlet being aggrieved by such assessment: held, that the churchwardens and overseers might appeal against both the certificate and the warrant thereon, as being an assessment made and demanded, within the meaning of the appeal clause in the statute.

In Rex v. Sussex (ante, 220), 15 East, 206, it was objected that the appellants should have given separate notices. But on Rex v. White being quoted, Lord Ellenborough said, "he thought that that case which had been much considered was authority sufficient to support the present appeal."

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640. This was an appeal against four distinct rates, and it was urged that it was not competent for the appellant to do this. Bayley, J. "The act which gives the appeal states that a party who may find himself unequally taxed or assessed may appeal against any such rate. It does not say that he must appeal against that rate per se without joining it with the others, which, being monthly, may have been made in the interval between one sessions and the next. The joint appeal may be then considered as a separate appeal against each rate, and if the sessions should be of opinion that injustice would be done by hearing the appeal against the four rates jointly, they might determine upon them separately; but they are not bound to do so. The party, therefore, may legally appeal against the poor rates in the manner adopted by him in the present case."

If, however, it is an appeal from the borough sessions, the notice of appeal cannot be enlarged; the appellant can enter at the county sessions into those grounds only which he took at the borough sessions.

Rex v. Brooke, 9 B. & C. 915; 4 M. & R. 719. In an appeal against the rate, the notice stated the grounds to be, that two persons, who were named, had rateable property and were omitted. But no notice of appeal having been given to either of those persons, the sessions confirmed the rate without going into the merits. Bayley, J. after quoting Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 453, as furnishing an argument in support of the order of sessions, said "Before the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, whenever a party had been improperly omitted out of a rate, the sessions were bound to quash it. That statute was passed to remedy that inconvenience, but then it was thought unjust that a party should be affected by having his name inserted in a rate without notice, and the 41 Geo. III. c. 23, was passed to remedy this evil. The preamble of that statute recites, that by 17 Geo. II. power was given to the justices upon appeals from rates to give relief without altering the rate in other respects. But if the argument now urged were to prevail, the sessions would no longer have the option of amending the rates: they might in all cases of omission be compelled to quash them, and so appeals would be doubled in number. The 6th section however is general, and applies equally to all cases of amending or quashing rates. It provides in plain unequivocal terms, that if there is an appeal against a rate because some person who ought to have been rated has been omitted, notice shall be given to such person, and if it be not given the appeal shall not be heard. The sessions in this instance have done right, and their order must be confirmed." Littledale and Parke, J. concurred. (a)

14. Of Appeal, &c.

Notice of Appeal.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 1 B. & Ald. 640. Bayley, J. "The fourth ground of appeal is, that the appellant is rated in a greater and higher proportion than all the other inhabitants and occupiers whose names are mentioned in the said rate. It is contended that this made it necessary to give notice to all those other inhabitants and occupiers, amounting in the whole to 364 persons. But that it is not necessary. The 41 Geo. III. c. 23, first gave to the justices the power of amending the rate appealed against, instead of altogether quashing it, but required the grounds of the appeal to be stated, and notice to be given to the parties affected by the appeal. So that where the ground is that A. B. or C. are under-rated, it would be necessary to give notice to those individuals: but where the ground of complaint is, that the party appealing is over-rated in respect of all the rest, then it would be necessary, because the alteration sought is the diminution of his assessment only, and the rest of the rate remains entire." The other judges concurred.

Notice to the individuals unnecessary where the ground of appeal was that the appellant was rated higher than the other persons named in the rate.

Rex v. Bromyard, 8 B. & C. 240; 2 M. & R. 280. This was an appeal against a poor rate. The rate did not describe the property in respect of which the several persons were rated. But this was not stated in the notice as a ground of appeal. The sessions however quashed the rate upon this objection, subject to the opinion of the court. Bayley, J. "There can be no doubt that it ought to appear on the face of the rate in respect of what property the assessment is made upon each individual charged in the rate: and if the omission of that statement had been pointed out by the notice, as one of the grounds of appeal, it would have been a sufficient ground for quashing the rate. In many instances the specification of the property in respect of which the assessment is made, will give no further information to the parties to be affected by the rate, than the fact of their having been rated at a specific sum. But still the party rated has a right to know in respect of what property he is rated, in order that if he is over-rated in respect of that property he may appeal. If however he be satisfied with the amount of the sum for which he is rated, he will not appeal, because it will not be his interest to have the rate corrected. By 41 Geo. III. c. 23, the legislature intended to limit the expense of appeal, and lessen the labours of the justices at sessions. (He then read the 4th section, ante, p. 219, and continued.) Now suppose there were no notice of appeal whatever, could the sessions quash the rate upon the ground that it was bad for a defect apparent on the face of it? clearly not. Or could the sessions quash the rate for such a defect, if a general notice of appeal were given, without specifying any cause? They certainly could not, because the statute prohibits their inquiry into any causes of appeal except those mentioned in the notice. For the same reason they cannot, in a case where certain causes of appeal are specified in the notice, go into others not specified. It is said that the words 'examine and inquire' are applicable to those cases only where extrinsic evidence is required to show the defect of the rate, and not to cases where the defect appears on the face of it. But we should not do justice to the intention of the legislature, if we entered into so very critical an examination of the language of the act. When the language of a deed is made the subject-matter of discussion, in order to ascertain thereby its legal effect, it may be said to be the subject of examination and inquiry. It has been said that this rate is illegal and void on the face of it, because the property in respect of which the assessment is made is not specified. I am of opinion that it is not illegal and void upon that ground, unless that be pointed out as a specific cause of appeal in the notice. That is one ground of objection which will render the rate liable to be quashed. In

But the sessions cannot quash the rate on this ground, unless it is stated in the notice of appeal.

(a) The argument was, that if the sessions might amend the rate, but if the notice was not given, that then the rate must be quashed.

14. Of Appeal, &c. Rex v. Aire and Calder Navigation (2 B. & C. 713; 4 D. & R. 253; ante, 206), the objection was specifically pointed out in the notice of appeal." Holroyd, J.

"It seems that the sessions had no jurisdiction to consider this objection, unless it was specified in the notice as a ground of appeal. They had no jurisdiction whatever over the rate unless the notice required by the statute was given, except in the case provided by the 5th section (ante, p. 219). It has been argued that the words 'examine and inquire' are to be construed more narrowly than their natural import warrants, and the object of the legislature seems to require. The fourth section requires that all notices of appeal shall be given in a particular manner, and that the particular causes or grounds of appeal shall be specified in the notice. So far that section is directory, but in what follows, it is not merely directory, but prohibitory. It goes on, 'and upon the hearing, the sessions shall not examine or inquire into any other grounds of appeal than such as are specified in the notice.' Construing this according to the natural import of the words, I think that it means that the sessions shall not enter into any other causes of appeal than those specified in the notice: but assuming the meaning of those words 'examine and inquire' to be doubtful, I think we ought to put upon the clause that construction, which will have the effect of preventing the 'quashing of rates.' The inconvenience mentioned in the recital, which it was the object of the statute to remedy, and construing the clause with reference to that object, I think that the sessions had no power to enter into any other causes of appeal than those stated in the notice: and that being so, I think we must hold that the sessions had no jurisdiction to quash the rate upon the ground that the property in respect of which the assessment was made was not described, because that was not specified in the notice as a cause of appeal." Littledale, J. "By 43 Eliz. c. 2, the rate was to be made on every inhabitant in respect of certain descriptions of property. The property in respect of which individuals are assessed ought therefore to be specified in the rate for two purposes. First, that the parties rated may see whether they have the property, and that it is the subject of a rate: secondly, that other persons may see whether the rate be equally assessed. If the property is not specified, the rate is defective and informal; and that informality is a ground of appeal, provided it be made the subject of appeal by giving the required notice. The statute says, that the sessions shall not examine or inquire into any other causes of appeal than such as are specified in the notice. It is true that in this case there was a defect on the face of the rate itself, which would therefore appear on inspection. But if neither the person whose property is omitted, nor others who have an interest that the rate should be equal, make the omission of such property a ground of complaint, the justices have no jurisdiction to quash the rate on that account. I think that the words 'examine or inquire' apply to an examination by inspection as well as by extrinsic evidence. The word 'examine' is frequently used in the same sense as the word 'inspect.' Thus the 27 Eliz. c. 5, which gives the writ of error from K. B. to the Exchequer Chamber, enacts, 'that the record may be removed there to be examined by the justices and barons, and they are to have full power to examine all such errors as shall be assigned.' Now when error is assigned upon a matter of law, it appears upon the face of the record, and whether there be good cause of error or not is ascertained by inspection of the record and not by extrinsic evidence. So, in 31 Edw. III. c. 12, which gives the writ of error from the law side of the Exchequer to the Chancellor and Treasurer, the word examine is used in the same sense. I therefore think that the sessions could not take notice of this objection to the rate."

Which party shall begin.

Rex v. Newberry, 4 T. R. 475. Upon an appeal against a poor rate the question was, which party should begin? The court said, that where the appellant alleges that he has no rateable property within the place, the respondent should first show that he has some property liable to be rated; for it is impossible for the appellants in the first instance to prove the negative. And Heywood, J. amicus curiæ, said, "that in Yorkshire, where more appeals of this kind were lodged than in any other county, when the appellant objected to his being rated at all, it is the practice for the respondents to begin: but if he object to the quantum of the rate, then the onus lay on him.

Rex v. Topham, 12 East, 546. The defendant appealed against a rate for Driffield, which the sessions confirmed. Case:—The defendant was rated as occupier of property of the annual value of 250*l.*, and the grounds of his appeal were, that he had no rateable property in the parish, and not to the amount at which he was rated. The respondents proved that the appellant was in the annual receipt of certain tithe-rents, originating in the Driffield enclosure act, of the annual value of 6*s.* 8*d.*; and that other sums were received by him for tithe-rents, but there was no proof of their amount. Here the respondents closed their case, insisting that as they had proved the appellant to be in possession of some rateable property, it was incumbent on him to prove that in fact that he had been overrated. The appellant insisted that this composition or rent was not rateable at all. The sessions held that it was rateable. The appellant then contended that as there was no proof of any specific sum having been paid beyond the 6*s.* 8*d.*, the rate ought to be amended by inserting that sum instead of the 250*l.* The sessions held that the proof of overrating lay on the appellant, and confirmed the rate generally. The appellant was lessee of the prebendary of Driffield, who was entitled under the inclosure act, &c. to a yearly rent or composition in lieu of the tithes of corn, grain, and hay therein, of 267*l.*, to be paid by the owners and proprietors of certain lands in certain proportions. And by the act, in all future rates and levies in the said townships, the composition rents were to be assessed in the same proportion as the other landholders. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "The question is, whether a person, who I will suppose for the present is liable to be rated for something beyond the 6*s.* 8*d.*, can be rated to the amount of 250*l.*, and then left to pare down that assessment upon an appeal to the amount which it ought to be? He might as well have been charged to the extent of 50,000*l.*" [Parke, J. said he could not pretend to argue that that could be done, but here the act of parliament stated the composition to be more than the appellant was rated for.] On which his lordship observed, "It is not stated as a fact in the case that the appellant was in the receipt of the rents and compositions to the amount of 250*l.* If the sessions have proceeded upon what the court has said in some cases, that if the party rated have rateable property in the parish they will not inquire into the quantum of the rate, they have egregiously mistaken the court. When the question before the sessions is upon the quantum of the rate, the officers making it must show to the justices some probable ground for the amount at which they charge the party in the rate. The mischief of any other rule would be enormous; a small occupier may be rated at once in the round sum of 1000*l.*, and left to struggle his way out of that charge as he can." For the appellant it was observed, that the question made at the sessions was, whether the appellant should begin by proving his case, that he was overrated; or whether the parish officers should begin by proving a probable case for rating the appellant at so much? On which Le Blanc, J. said, "The court will have no difficulty in dealing with that naked proposition whenever it should be brought nakedly before them." The case was sent back to sessions.

Rex v. Justices of Suffolk, 6 M. & Sel. 57. This was an appeal by a person who was rated as the occupier of tithes and other things in a gross sum. According to the practice of the sessions the appellant ought to begin, but he refused to do so, and the appeal was dismissed. Upon a rule for a mandamus Lord Ellenborough said, "As a general rule I should say that the granting of a writ, which has for its object the reversal of the order of proceeding at quarter sessions according to the rules of practice which there prevail, is not a jurisdiction, which, if the court possess it, it will be inclined to exercise, unless it be apparent that great injustice will follow the refusal of the writ. Now here the appellant did not dispute that he was rateable, but only the amount of the rate; and it is complained that the justices at sessions, according to their practice, called on him to begin and make good his allegation that he was overrated. The appellant says that this was impossible; but he has not shown why, nor even now ventures to state to us that he was really over-

14. Of Appeal, &c. under Local Acts.

Where the appellant disputes before the sessions the quantum of the rate, it is not sufficient for the respondent to show that the appellant is in possession of some rateable property within the parish, they must also show some probable ground for the amount at which they have charged the party in the rate.

The practice of the sessions, that the appellants should begin, is not so inconvenient that K. B. will controul it.

rated: so that he stands merely on the irregularity of the rule of practice, as to which it is urged, that the sessions have not proceeded according to what is thought to be and perhaps may be a more convenient rule. But if under such circumstances the court were to interfere, I am apprehensive that we might be attaching to ourselves a most inconvenient jurisdiction. It would come to this, that wherever the practice at the different sessions should happen to vary, we should be called on to decide between them." Bayley, J. "I do not see that the practice complained of is so inconvenient as alleged, and if the court were to interfere in this instance we should have to grant a mandamus in every instance where the sessions proceed according to a rule of practice, which we may not think the most convenient." Abbott, J. "It would be a dangerous precedent if we were to grant this writ upon the cause alleged. In general a mandamus to the justices to hear, proceeds upon the statutes. This writ is asked, because of some supposed error in practice." Holroyd, J. "The case of Rex v. Topham not only differs from this in the points stated for the opinion of the court, but the decision also proceeded upon the special circumstances of that case. At the conclusion it was stated that the question made at the sessions was whether the appellant should begin by proving his case that he was overrated, or whether the parish officers should begin by proving a probable case for rating the appellant at so much. And the court observed that they would have no difficulty in dealing with that proposition when it should come nakedly before them. So that it clearly appears the court did not consider that they were determining the simple question in that case." Rule refused.

Appellant not to furnish the means to enable sessions to amend the rate.

Rex v. Hull Dock Company, 3 B. & C. 516; 5 D. & R. 359. See this case ante, 173. The appellant objected to the rate because certain ship owners were not rated for their ships, and upon this point Abbott, C. J. said, "It was pressed on us in the argument, that as the appellants had not made out what was each ship's profit, they had not given to the sessions the means of amending the rate, but this is founded on a misapprehension of the duties of the parish officers and the appellant. Where property is rateable it is the duty of the officers to include it in the rate, and to take what means they can to ascertain its value. It is not for them to omit it altogether and to cast upon the appellant what is properly their duty, the burthen of proving its value. In cases of single omission the difficulty might not be very great, but if all the property of a given description is omitted the difficulty might be excessive. Before 41 Geo. III. c. 23, the omission of a single individual, who ought to have been included, compelled the sessions to quash the whole rate, and so as he was rateable at all, the extent to which he was rateable was not in question. The 41 Geo. III. requires the sessions to alter or amend a rate appealed against without quashing it; but with proviso that if the sessions shall think it necessary for the purpose of giving relief to the appellant to quash the rate, they may do so; and when a rate contains so many omissions that it can hardly be expected of an appellant that he should have evidence to show the extent to which each person omitted ought to be rated, and where the investigation before the sessions would be likely to exhaust more time than they could reasonably be required to give up, we think it would not be an improper exercise of their discretion to quash the rate and make the officers do in the end what they ought to have done in the beginning.

Overseers cannot abandon a rate.

The remedy by appeal must be pursued, for the overseers have no power to abandon a rate duly allowed and published. In Rex v. Justices of Cambridge, 4 Nev. & Man. 238; 2 Ad. & E. 370, it appeared that the appellant, having paid his rate and given notice of appeal, received notice from the overseers that they abandoned the rate, as it could not be supported, and that he might receive the money back. The money was afterwards tendered, but they refused to pay the costs, and an appeal was entered. The sessions made the following order: "It was ordered that the overseers of the poor did abandon the rate on the 8th day of October, and that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal." A rule was obtained for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal, which was made absolute, Lord Denman saying, "The justices were not right in their judgment, for they certainly had a jurisdiction, and the rate exists at this moment."

Rex v. Ambleside, 16 East, 380. The question intended to be submitted to the court in this case, was whether stock in trade was rateable? But Lord Ellenborough said, "Is there not another question, whether the rate ought not to have been amended instead of being quashed? It is an objection applicable (a) to one person, and the justices should have amended the rate and not quashed it. The 41 Geo. III, c. 23, was passed for the very purpose of enabling them to do so, in order to prevent the inconvenience of the parish being without funds for the maintenance of its poor in the mean time. We say therefore that this rate was not properly quashed, and ought to have been amended." (b)

Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 452. The ground of appeal was that certain lands were omitted, which were in the occupation or possession of the corporation. The sessions quashed the rate, and granted a case, from which the court could not collect whether the burgesses stocked the land in right of their franchise or by permission of the corporate body, and the court were inclined to send the case back, but Lord Ellenborough said, "I think we may deal with the case as it is. Here is a large tract of property producing profit, which is liable to be rated, and no person in fact is rated for it. This property is stated to belong to the corporation, and it may be doubtful whether the occupation shown be their occupation or that of individuals. Under these circumstances I cannot say the sessions have done wrong in quashing the rate. The rate therefore is quashed, because no person has been rated for property which ought to have been rated."

Rex v. Justices of Essex, 8 T. R. 583. Notice of appeal against a rate was given, and on the day before the sessions countermanded, whereupon the parish officers applied to the quarter sessions for the costs of preparing to resist the appeal. But the court thought they had no authority under the statute to give costs, as no appeal was entered. Per Curiam, "The quarter sessions have no authority to award costs under the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, unless an appeal has been entered and determined. The determination of the appeal is a condition precedent to the power to give costs, the words of the act being, 'may award to the party for whom such appeal shall be determined reasonable costs,' &c., and the subsequent words, 'in the same manner that they are empowered to do in case of appeals concerning the settlement of poor persons,' &c., only relate to the mode in which those costs are to be recovered. By referring to the former statute under which costs may be given in two instances, and by mentioning only one of those instances in the latter statute, it is evident that the legislature did not intend by the latter to authorize the sessions to give costs in both cases."

Rex v. Causton, 4 D. & R. 445. Where an appeal against a poor's rate was entered at the Midsummer, and respited until the Michaelmas sessions, and then further respited at the instance of the appellant till the Epiphany sessions, four days previous to which the respondents gave notice that they

But if entered, they may, though the rate is quashed by consent.

(a) The sessions had quashed the rate because W. W. was not rated. This was the form of the case, but the notice of appeal pointed out several others similarly circumstanced.

(b) The court did not advert to the power given to the sessions to quash the rate, and the sessions might have been of opinion that relief could not be given to the appellant without quashing it. Wherever the amendments to be introduced are such as will essentially alter the character and proportion of the rate, so as to render it a new rather than an amended rate, it should be quashed. Thus if the ground of complaint is that personal property is altogether omitted (Rex v. Dursley, 6 T. R. 53), or that the real estate is taxed ten times more in proportion than the personal (ib.), or that the rate is made upon a principle altogether erroneous (Rex v. Sandwich, Doug. 562), or that a large portion of property is altogether omitted, and it does not clearly appear who ought to be rated for it (Rex v. Aberavon, 5 East, 453), these, says Mr. Nolan, seem cases in which the rate ought to be quashed. Because otherwise the sessions must examine into the circumstances of every person in the parish, in order to render the rate perfect, and so make one altogether new, which the statute forbids. See another ground for quashing a rate Rex v. Hull Dock Company, ante, 226.

would not oppose the appeal, and it was accordingly allowed without opposition, the rate being quashed on the motion of the appellant's counsel, and costs allowed by the sessions; held that the appellant was entitled to costs as upon an appeal which had been "heard and determined" within the meaning of the stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4. Bayley, J. said, "Rex v. Justices of Essex (ante, 227), is perfectly distinguishable from this case; there no appeal was entered. This appeal was heard and determined in the fair sense and meaning of these words. In the first place, as to the hearing: the appellant was bound to prove his notice of appeal before he could entitle himself to costs; and having done so, that would be a hearing. Then, in the second place, the allowance of an unopposed appeal would be a final determination of it, so as to satisfy the statute. It is said that the appellant need not have gone to the sessions, because notice was given four days before that it was not intended to resist the appeal. If notice had been given by the respondents at the same time, that they meant to pay the costs already incurred, then the appellant need not have gone to the sessions, but he is obliged to go there to get his costs." Holroyd, J. "By allowing the appeal the sessions determined it. Suppose the justices, notwithstanding the respondent's notice, entertained a doubt as to the propriety of allowing the appeal, and desired to hear what the appellant could say on the subject, would not that be a hearing? Could it be said that was only a hearing on one side, and that both sides must be heard before the costs ought to be allowed? Surely not. I think the order must be affirmed." Littledale, J. concurred.

Who may be witnesses.

Rex v. Prosser and others, 4 T. R. 17. On an appeal against a poor rate, because certain persons were omitted to be rated, it was determined that a parishioner who is liable to be rated, but who is not in fact rated, is a competent witness to prove the rateability of appellants.

Inhabitants not to be incompetent witnesses in certain cases on behalf of or against their parish.

This was before the 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 9, which enacts, "that no inhabitant or person rated or liable to be rated to any rates or cesses of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, or wholly or in part maintained or supported thereby, or executing or holding any office thereof or therein, shall, before any court or person or persons whatsoever, be deemed and taken to be by reason thereof an incompetent witness for or against such district, parish, township, or hamlet, in any matter relating to such rates or cesses, any law, usage, statute, or custom to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding." See the decisions in this statute post, Evidence. (Meredith v. Griffin, 6 Price, 146.)

Copies of rates to be entered in a book after appeals determined.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 13, it is enacted, that "true and just copies of all rates and assessments hereafter to be made for the relief of the poor, be fairly wrote and entered in a book or books, to be provided for that purpose by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of every parish, township, or place, who shall take care that such copies be wrote and entered accordingly, within fourteen days after all appeals from such rates are determined, and shall attest the same by putting their names thereto; and all and every such book or books shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor for the time being, or one of them, in some public or other place, in every such parish, township, or place, whereto all persons assessed, or liable to be assessed, may freely resort, and shall be delivered over from time to time to the new and succeeding churchwardens and overseers of the poor as soon as they enter into their said offices, to be preserved as aforesaid, and shall be produced by them at the general or quarter sessions, when any appeal is to be heard or determined."

Rate not removable by certiorari.

Rex v. Uttoreter, 2 Str. 932. Upon great debate and search after precedents, it was held that a certiorari would not lie to remove the poor rate itself, the remedy being to appeal, or by action when a distress is taken, which will answer all the ends of justice in coming at an equal rate; whereas if the rate itself should be required to be sent up, great inconveniences and delays would follow.

Rex v. The Justices of Salop, 1 Sess. Ca. 201; 2 Str. 975. If a certiorari to remove a poor rate into K. B. were allowed, the poor might pending such removal be starved.

15. Payment of the Rate, and enforcing same by Distress or otherwise.

The proper mode of enforcing payment of an arrear of poor rate is by summons, and distress given by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, and subsequent statutes; for it is a rule that upon a new statute which prescribes a particular remedy, that is the only one that can be taken. Therefore clearly no action will lie for a poor rate." Denison, J. (Stevens v. Evans, post, 234, 235; Underhill v. Ellicombe, M'Cl. & Young, 456.) In one case, however, where a corporation had been rated, and it was doubtful whether there were any distrainable goods, a mandamus to pay was issued. (Rex v. Margate, 3 Bar. & Ald. 220; 2 Chitty's Rep. 356, S. C.) So payment of rates is enforced collaterally by the Reform Act, 2 Will. IV. c. 45, s. 27, and the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 70, s. 9, and the Vestry Act, 58 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 5, which incapacitate a party rated to vote unless he has paid the rate.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 12, after reciting, "that whereas persons frequently remove out of parishes and places without paying the assessed rates on them, and other persons do enter and occupy their houses and tenements part of the year, by reason whereof great sums are annually lost to such parishes and places;" it is enacted, "that where any person or persons shall come into or occupy any house, land, tenement, or hereditament, or other premises, out of or from which any other person assessed shall be removed, or which at the time of making such rate was empty or unoccupied, then every person so removing from, and every person so coming into or occupying the same, shall be liable to pay such rate in proportion to the time that such person occupied the same respectively, in the same manner and under the like penalty of distress, as if such person so removing had not removed, or such person so coming in or occupying, had been originally rated and assessed in such rate; which said proportion, in case of dispute, shall be ascertained by any two or more of his majesty's justices of the peace."

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, "it shall be lawful, as well for the present as subsequent churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from any two such justices of peace as is aforesaid, to levy as well the said sums of money and all arrearages, of every one that shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be assessed, by distress and sale of the offender's goods, as the sums of money or stock which shall be behind upon any account to be made as aforesaid, rendering to the parties the overplus; and in defect of such distress, it shall be lawful for any two such justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize until payment of the said sum, arrearages, and stocks."

17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 7. "The goods of any person assessed, and refusing to pay, may be levied by warrant of distress, not only in the place for which such assessment was made, but in any other place within the same county or precinct; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within the said county or precinct, on oath made thereof before some justice of any other county or precinct (which oath shall be certified under the hand of such justice on the said warrant), such goods may be levied in such other county or precinct by virtue of such warrant and certificate; and if any person shall find him or herself aggrieved by such distress as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for such person to appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county or precinct where such assessment was made, and the justices there are hereby required to hear and finally determine the same."

By 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 12, it is enacted "that the goods and chattels of any person or persons neglecting or refusing to pay any sum or sums of money legally assessed on and due from him, her, or them in respect of any rate for the relief of the poor, church cess, or highway cess, of any district, parish, township, or hamlet, for the space of seven days after the same shall have been legally demanded of him, her, or them, shall and may be distrained, not only within such district, parish, township, or hamlet, but also within any other district, parish, township, or hamlet, within the same county, riding, division, or jurisdiction; and if sufficient distress cannot be found within the same county, riding, division, or jurisdiction, then upon

We have seen that by 41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 1 (ante, 218, 219), that although the rate be quashed, the sums charged are to be levied and taken as payment on account of the next effective rate.

Notice of appeal not to prevent a distress for a sum not greater than that assessed in the last effective rate.

41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 2. "All and every the sum and sums of money at which any person or persons is or are or shall be rated or assessed, in any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, shall and may be levied and recovered by distress, and all other lawful ways and means, notwithstanding the person or persons so rated or assessed, or any other person or persons, shall have given notice of appeal from or against such rate or assessment for any cause whatsoever: provided always, that if any person rated or assessed in any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, shall give such notice of appeal as hereinafter mentioned, to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish, township, vill, or place, or any two of them, then from and after the giving of such notice, and until the appeal shall have been heard and determined, no proceedings shall be commenced or carried on to recover any greater sum or sums of money from such person or persons than the sum or sums at which he, she, or they, or any occupier of the same premises, shall have been rated or assessed in the last effective rate which shall have been collected in such parish, township, vill, or place."

If rate quashed, sum charged is not to be paid, and any proceedings to be stopped.

By s. 3. "If the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace shall, upon appeal, order any rate or assessment for the relief of the poor to be quashed, it shall be lawful for the said court to order any sum or sums of money in and by such rate or assessment charged on any person or persons, or any part of any such sum or sums, not to be paid, and then and in every such case no proceedings shall, after making such order, be commenced: or if any proceedings have been previously commenced, such proceedings shall be no further prosecuted or carried on for the purpose of levying or enforcing the payment of any sum or sums which shall be so ordered by the said court not to be paid."

The rate to be recovered as altered by the sessions.

By s. 7. "If upon the hearing of any appeal from or against any rate or assessment, the said court shall order the name or names of any person or persons to be inserted therein, and him, her, or them to be rated or assessed at any sum or sums of money, or shall order the sum or sums at which any person or persons is or are therein rated or assessed to be raised or increased, then and in such case all and every the sum and sums of money at or to which such person or persons shall be so ordered to be rated or assessed, or to be raised or increased, or so much thereof as shall not have been already paid, shall and may be recovered in such and the same manner, and by such and the same means as if he, she, or they had been originally named in such rate or assessment, and rated or assessed therein at such sum or sums of money."

A warrant may be made to distrain before the time for which the rate is made is expired. Charlwood v. Best, 1 Bott, 261.

A summons must precede a warrant of distress for a poor rate, and without it the Court of K. B. will not issue a mandamus.

Before any warrant of distress is granted, the person assessed must be summoned, and if the proceedings are under the 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 12, the rate must be demanded seven days before the warrant is granted.

Rex v. Benn, 6 T. R. 198. On a rule for a mandamus to the defendants to grant warrants of distress against persons who had refused to pay a poor's rate, it appeared that there had been no previous summons to the persons charged. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "I confess I cannot subscribe my assent to the decision in Rex v. Middlesex. (a) The payment of a poor rate, unless it be set aside, must be enforced; and if the magistrates will not issue a summons to the person who refuses to pay the rate, the court will grant a mandamus to compel them to do it: but a summons must precede a warrant of distress, which is in the nature of an execution. On the summons, the party may show a sufficient reason to the magistrates why a warrant of distress should not issue; as, for instance, that he has already paid the assessment to one of the parish officers, who has not accounted for it. But it is an invariable maxim in our law, that no man shall be punished before he has had an opportunity of being heard: whereas if a warrant of distress were to be issued without any previous summons, the party would have no opportunity of showing cause why the execution should not issue against him. (b) But the next day the court granted a rule for a mandamus to the magistrates "to receive such informations and complaints as shall be laid before them against persons refusing to pay the sums assessed upon them for the relief of the poor of the township of Whitehaven, and to proceed thereupon to levy the same."

Rex v. Stafford, 5 Nev. & Man. 94. Before issuing a warrant it is essential that a justice's summons should have been duly served on the party, or left at his present residence, calling upon him to show cause why a distress warrant should not issue.

If the summons is not obeyed, the refusal to pay must be proved on oath.

In Tracy v. Talbot, 2 Salk. 532, per Holt, C. J. "The rate cannot be distrained for by virtue of a general warrant made before the rate: but there ought to be a special warrant on purpose; that is to say, the nonfeasance of the party shall not be left to the judgment of the officer, who may, out of private resentment, sell his neighbour's goods without sufficient cause; but oath of the refusal must be made before the justices. And it is reasonable that the party should be heard in his defence; for he may show cause variously why a distress should not be granted; as that the rate was not regularly allowed, or was not published in the church, or that he had given notice of appeal, or that no demand or refusal had been made, and the like."

If the landlord tender the rate for the tenant, no warrant of distress ought to be granted.

Rex v. Cozens, Dougl. 426. On an application for an information against two justices of Dorchester for granting a warrant of distress corruptly, it appeared that the grandson of the owner of the house tendered the rate to the overseer for the owner, and not for the occupier, and the overseer refused to receive it, and the justices granted a warrant against the occupier. The right of voting for members in Dorchester depended on the payment of poor rates. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "It is impossible for the defendants to excuse themselves on account of ignorance. In many parts of the kingdom the landlord pays the rates for the tenants;" and his lordship strongly condemned the issuing of this warrant.

A warrant should not be issued if the parties think there is reasonable ground to believe that the rate is void as regards the person summoned. In such cases the justices may decline to grant a warrant if the rate is question-

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

Summons essential.

Oath of the refusal to pay the rate must be made before the justices, previously to distraining for nonpayment.

If tender by landlord then no distress.

When doubtful whether distress would be lawful mandamus will be refused.

(a) Rex v. Justices of Middlesex, 1 Bott, 262. Motion for a mandamus to the justices of Middlesex to sign a warrant of distress for levying a poor rate. It was set forth in the affidavit to have been the custom not to grant warrants without first summoning the party to show cause, and that they had refused to grant any warrants of distress, without first summoning the party. Lee, C. J. "A writ of mandamus will not give the justices any power they had not before, and therefore it is to be considered what powers stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 4, gives them; and in that there is no direction that the party shall be summoned to show cause: nothing appears upon the affidavits that this is such a rate as a distress ought to be granted upon; but the whole is, that persons applying for the warrant did first refuse to take out a summons, which to me does not appear a sufficient cause why the mandamus should not go; if the justices have sufficient reason why they did not grant the warrant, it will appear upon the return of the mandamus." The other judges concurred. Mandamus granted.

(b) This case was cited and approved of by Bayley, B. in Capel v. Child, 2 C. & J. 579, where that learned judge says, "I know of no case in which you are to have a judicial proceeding, by which a man is to be deprived of any part of his property without his having an opportunity of being heard."

15. Payment of Rate, and enforcing by Distress, &c.

Rate for lands not in the party's occupation is void.

So also for lands not of the parish.

Rated inhabitant cannot resist the rate in an action, though he had no rateable property.

Insufficient description of property furnishes no answer to a distress.

If one warrant is granted for several rates, and one of them has been quashed, the warrant is void.

The precise sum due should be demanded previous to the issuing of the warrant.

able. The Court of King's Bench will not compel them(a) to enforce it. If the objection to the rate however is one of which the party can avail himself by appeal only, then the mandamus will be granted.

No warrant ought to be granted where a person is assessed for lands which were not in his occupation, notwithstanding it had been confirmed on appeal. For the determining that a man may be assessed for what he does not occupy, is an excess of jurisdiction. (Milward v. Caffin, 2 Bla. Rep. 1330.) And in such a case trespass lies for the illegal seizure. (Durant v. Boys, 6 Term R. 580.)

So also where the party is assessed for some houses which he occupies, and others which he does not, he may dispute the legality of the rate as to the latter in an action. (Governor of Bristol Poor v. Waite, 1 Ad. & E. 264.)

Nor where the assessment is for land in another parish, for that is an illegal tax, which the justices have no power to confirm. (Weaver v. Price, 3 B. & Adol. 406.)

But the rate may be enforced by distress, if the rate is not a nullity, and the justices had jurisdiction to allow the assessment. In Pitman v. Marshall (9 Bing. 595), the plaintiff had been rated for his stock in trade, and the special case stated that the plaintiff had no personal property or stock in trade for which he was liable to be rated, unless his stock of drugs, &c. which he had as an apothecary, rendered him rateable. And it was held that as the plaintiff was an inhabitant of the parish possessing visible personal property, he was within the jurisdiction of the justices, and liable to be rated, although his rateable property might turn out to be worth nothing.

The want of a sufficient description of the property rated cannot be made the ground of objection to a distress for a rate. It can be made by appeal only. (Rex v. Wilson, 5 N. & M. 116; Curtis v. Kent Water Works Company, 7 B. & C. 314; Hutchins v. Chambers, 1 Burr. 580.)

Hurrell v. Wink, 2 B. Moore, 417; 8 Taunt. 369, S. C. This was an action of replevin, and the defendant avowed as overseer of the parish of Rayleigh. It appeared that a warrant of distress was granted against the plaintiff on the 9th of January, 1817, and executed on him on the 13th, for 104*l.* 17*s.* due for seven several poor rates and assessments. The plaintiff appealed to the Epiphany sessions, but was not in sufficient time as regarded six of the rates mentioned in the warrant. The sessions quashed the last rate, on the ground that the plaintiff was not the occupier. Milward v. Caffin (2 Bla. R. 1330), was cited, which was an action of replevin on a distress for a poor rate; and there it was held, that where a warrant was to levy an aggregate sum, composed of several rates, if one of the rates were illegal, the whole warrant was void. Gibbs, C. J. "It was necessary that the sum actually due from the plaintiff for poor rates should be demanded previous to the issuing of the warrant of distress, and that it was distinguishable from a distress for rent; that whatever might be due as the amount of rent might be distrained, and that although a larger sum were distrained for than was actually due, that the lessor might still be supported; as if a distress were made for three years' rent, and two only were due, still the avowant was entitled to recover for the two. So if a person bring an action for goods sold and delivered to the amount of 100*l.*, still he may only be entitled to recover 40*l.* But in neither of these cases is a precise and previous demand necessary as here, where the party distrained on is entitled to know what sum is actually due for poor rates, previous to the issuing of the warrant under which the levy is made." Verdict entered for the plaintiff.

(a) It is a general rule that where magistrates have been called on to exercise their judgment upon the propriety of granting a warrant, the Court of King's Bench will not interfere, especially where there is a probability that an action will be brought against them upon such warrant. (Rex v. Margate, 3 Bar. & Adol. 220; 2 Chit. R. 250, S. C.; Rex v. Dyer and Hall, 2 Adol. & El. 613; 4 Nev. & Man. 546; 1 Har. & Wol. 83, S. C.; Rex v. Somersetshire, 4 Nev. & Man. 394;

1 Har. & Wol. 82, S. C.; 1 Chitty's Gen. Prac. 802, 803.) It was observed (Rex v. Dyer, 2 Ad. & E. 613), that it was a pity that acts of parliament relating to the poor rates did not contain a clause indemnifying magistrates for what they did in obedience to the mandate of the court; the court would then take upon itself to see whether the thing required were within the provisions of the act. (See Rex v. Greame, ib. 615; Rex v. Morgan, ib. 618.)

In these cases there was only one warrant, and that authorized a distress for a good and bad rate; but where several warrants were granted against defendant, who was liable to be rated for some of the premises, but not others, the distress may be excessive, but the seizure is legal. (Governor of Bristol Poor v. Wait, 3 Nev. & Man. 359; 1 Ad. & E. 264.)

Bell v. Oakley, 2 M. & Sel. 259. Under a warrant granted to distrain the plaintiff's goods for nonpayment of a poor rate, the defendants knocked at plaintiff's door, and being informed at the next house that the plaintiff was from home, one of the defendants tried to get in at the cellar, but failed; they then took the fastening out of a window, and got into the washhouse. After continuing there some time, and having found nothing within, the inner door being locked, they returned, and took away some planks and other articles which were lying in the garden. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, with leave to enter a nonsuit, on the ground of there not being any proof of a demand of the copy of the warrant, as required by 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The case of Money v. Leach (3 Burr. 1742; 1 Bla. 555), decides that the defendant, in order to avail himself of the objection upon the statute, must show that he acted in obedience to the warrant; in that case the officers apprehended a different person from that described in the warrant, and therefore not in obedience to the warrant; and Mr. Yorke, the then attorney-general, who was to have argued on behalf of the officers, gave up the point upon the second argument, as being too great a difficulty for him to encounter. Here the defendants, so far from showing that they acted in obedience to the warrant, commence by an unauthorized course of proceeding; it was a trespass in them ab initio; and I do not see how, after the case of Money v. Leach, they can stir this objection. That was a case of much public interest, and was decided upon great deliberation, and the matter was upon the record. If this had been a distinct subsequent trespass of the defendants, it might have presented a different question." Bayley, J. "In Price v. Messenger (2 Bos. & P. 158), the defendant, so far as he acted in obedience to the warrant, was under the protection of the statute, but he was holden liable for the seizure, which was not made in obedience to the warrant." Dampier, J. "The case of Money v. Leach decided, that where the justice cannot be liable, the officer is not within the protection of the statute. In this case, suppose notice had been delivered to the justice, for what could he have tendered amends? In Price v. Messenger, the justice might have been proceeded against upon the warrant." Rule discharged.

Novello v. Toogood, 1 B. & C. 554; 2 D. & R. 833. Where the servant of an ambassador did not reside in his master's house, but rented and lived in another, part of which he let in lodgings, the Court of King's Bench held that his goods in that house, not being necessary for the convenience of the ambassador, were liable to be distrained for poor rates. Abbott, C. J. "I do not know how the privileges of an ambassador can be better defined than by laying it down as a principle that they extend only to what is necessary to the personal convenience, the dignity and the religion, of the ambassador himself." (2 D. & R. 837, S. C.)

And by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 8, 9, 10, "Where any distress shall be made for any sum or sums of money justly due for the relief of the poor, the distress itself shall not be deemed to be unlawful, nor the party or parties making it be deemed a trespasser or trespassers, on account of any defect or want of form in the warrant for the appointment of such overseers, or in the rate or assessment, or in the warrant of distress thereupon; nor shall the party or parties distraining be deemed a trespasser or trespassers ab initio, on account of any irregularity which shall be afterwards done by the party or parties distraining, but the party or parties aggrieved by such irregularity shall or may recover full satisfaction for the special damage he, she, or they shall have sustained thereby, and no more, in an action of trespass or on the case, at the election of the plaintiff or plaintiffs. Provided always, that where the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in such action, he, she, or they shall be paid his, her, or their full costs of suit, and have all the like remedies for the same as in other cases of costs. Provided nevertheless, that no plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover in any action for any such irregularity as

II. c. 38, s. 7, (ante, 229,) says, "the goods of any person assessed." It is otherwise as to the assessed taxes, for which any goods on the premises may be distrained. (Stevens v. Evans, 2 Burr. 1152; Juson v. Dixon, 1 M. & S. 601.)

If the person charged shall die before payment, it has been doubted how far the deceased's goods in the hands of the executor or administrator are liable to answer the same. In Stevens v. Evans (2 Burr. 1152; 1 Bla. Rep. 284), W. Vesey was assessed to the poor rate, and died intestate. Administration was granted to the plaintiff. After which two justices executed a warrant, in which it was recited, that the sum assessed had been demanded of Vesey, and (since his decease) of his widow; and then it required the officer to distrain the goods and chattels of the late William Vesey. An action was brought by the administrator, and a special case was stated, and the question was, whether the distraining the cattle, which were the goods of Vesey, in the hands of his administrator, was lawful or not? Mr. Justice Denison said, "The question is stated particularly upon this case, and is confined to the levying the money upon the representative of the person charged. I should think the event must have often happened in fact and experience. The practice is not stated. But, however, the question is, what the law is? and not what the practice is. It is a rule, that upon a new statute which prescribes a particular remedy, no remedy can be taken but the particular remedy prescribed by the statute. Therefore, clearly, no action of debt will lie for a poor rate. The remedy given by the act of the 43 Eliz. must be considered with analogy to other like cases. This statute considers the person rated and refusing to pay as an offender, and gives no authority but to distrain the goods of the offender. Therefore no goods are liable to be distrained, by the words of this act, but the goods of the offender himself. I never apprehended that the goods of the person assessed to the rate can be charged in the hands of the representative. And therefore (as at present advised) I should think that this action will lie for taking them. I agree that this is in the nature of an execution; but yet it is personal: and I do not know that it is a lien upon the assets." Mr. J. Wilmot said, he had no doubt about it. It is not stated in the case that a demand was made even upon Vesey (the person assessed), and that he refused payment, though it is so recited in the warrant; but that is not material; for I have not the least doubt but that the representative ought to have been convened before the justices, and asked what he had to say why he should not pay the rate assessed upon Vesey, his intestate. The case seems to be like a scire facias upon a judgment; upon which execution cannot be sued out against the representatives, without asking them what they have to allege why it should not be taken out. At the time of the teste of the warrant, they were the goods and chattels of the representative. If the teste had been prior to the death, they would have been the goods and chattels of the deceased; but if tested after his death, they are not his goods and chattels, but the goods and chattels of the representative: therefore, if the money had been demanded of the representative, I should have had great doubt whether this warrant and distress would not have been good; for I cannot think that by the death of the person charged with this rate, the assessment before made upon him and demanded of him would have been quite gone and lost to the parish, and could not have been any way come at; for though it may be a charge upon the person, yet it is a charge upon him in respect of the thing occupied. And though he be called an offender, if he refuse to pay it, yet he can be no otherwise considered as an offender, than every other debtor who refuses or neglects to pay his debts, and thereby renders his person and goods liable to be taken in execution, is so far treated as an offender, till he shall comply with the judgment awarded. And in experience I know it to be the case, that these payments by executors or administrators are often allowed to go in discharge of the assets of the testator or intestate; though I do not remember that it has been settled in what course of administration. Indeed it might be of too much consequence to put it into the power of justices of the peace to determine upon the administration of assets, as to the course in which they are to be administered. In Wallis and Hewit, at the sittings after H. T. 5 Geo. II., before Lord C. J. Eyre, in an action of trespass, two aldermen of London had made a warrant to distrain a man for a poor rate. The man died intestate; but before that, there had been a demand made upon him, and refused by him, and a warrant of distress granted upon his refusal; and then he died. Eyre, C. J. held, that a distress could not be made after his death; or, if it could, yet the representative ought to have been summoned: and he held the property to be changed. A case was made, but I could not hear what became of it: Lord C. J. Eyre was a great lawyer. It would be strange that a distress should be taken upon a man's goods without hearing him, and it would make great confusion in the administration of assets: he may have paid or retained judgment debts, prior to this distress for the rate." Mr. Gould said, that if the want of a demand from the representative was insisted on, he could not pretend to maintain the case. Mr. J. Denison and Mr. J. Wilmot said, that this was an essential circumstance. And by the Court (Lord Mansfield, C. J., and Mr. J. Forster, being absent,) judgment was given for the plaintiff.

When a distress was wholly illegal the owner of the goods may support an action of trespass or trover, or may replevy; or if the sheriff refuse to replevy on tender of a sufficient replevin bond, he is liable to an action on the case. (Sabourin v. Marshall, 3 Bar. & Adol. 440.) Case is the remedy when there has been a seizure under several warrants, one of which is defective. (Governor of Bristol Poor v. Wait, 1 Adol. & El. 264; and see further, ante, 232.)

16. Rate for Taxing others in Aid.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 3, "If the said justices of peace do perceive that the inhabitants of any parish are not able to levy among themselves sufficient sums of money for the purposes aforesaid, that then the said two justices shall and may tax, rate, and assess, as aforesaid, any other of other parishes, or out of any parish, within the hundred where the said parish is, to pay such sum and sums of money to the churchwardens and overseers of the said poor parish, for the said purposes, as the said justices shall think fit, according to the intent of this law: and if the said hundred shall not be thought to the said justices able and fit to relieve the said several parishes not able to provide for themselves as aforesaid, then the justices of peace, at their general quarter sessions, or the greater number of them, shall rate and assess as aforesaid any other of other parishes, or out of any parish within the said county, for the purposes aforesaid, as in their discretion shall seem fit."

16. Rate for Taxing others in Aid.

Anon. Fol. 25; 1 Nol. P. L. 241. In one parish there were two villis, and the justices recite in their order that one of the villis was very rich, and the other very poor; and further, that the vill which was rich did not pay half so much to the poor as the poor vill did. Objected, one vill ought not to contribute to another, because the statute mentions parishes only. 2. The reason given for charging the rich vill to contribute to the poor vill is uncertain; viz. because they do not pay half so much as the poor vill does, with-

A vill is within the equity of the statute.

16. Rates for Taxing others in Aid.

One of several incorporated parishes may be taxed in aid.

The sessions cannot rate in aid.

The assessment must be by the justices, and they cannot order the overseers to do it.

Mandamus to make such rate.

The rate in aid may be on particular persons.

The parishes must be in the same hundred.

And so it must appear in the order.

Any division

out showing that either vill pays anything to the poor. By the Court: "As to the first objection, surely this will come within the equity of the statute, though the statute only makes mention of parishes; and it is highly reasonable that one vill should contribute to another in the same parish. But this order must be quashed on the second objection, for the uncertainty."

Rex v. St. Helen's, Worcester, 2 East, 417. An order for taxing one parish in aid of another was held well; although the two parishes, together with others, were incorporated for the maintenance of their poor, with fixed quotas of contribution between each other, under special officers, who were empowered to purchase land for the erection of poor houses, and for a burial ground; there being a proviso in the act, that nothing therein should repeal or lessen the power of justices "to tax parishes in aid of others by virtue of the 43 Eliz. as fully as if this act had not been made."

Rex v. Griesley, Sett. & Rem. 259. The sessions rated the adjacent parishes: quashed; because the statute appoints it to be done by the two justices, and hereby they prevent an appeal. (See Dimchurch v. Eastchurch, 2 Salk. 480.)

St. Mary's v. St. Peter and Paul's, in Marlborough, 2 Str. 1114; 1 Bott, 406. Two justices order the overseers of St. Peter and Paul's to levy a sum towards the maintenance of the poor of St. Mary's. But the order was quashed by the Court; because the justices had delegated their power to the overseers: whereas by the statute they themselves are to make the rate on all, or on particular persons.

In this case a mandamus was moved for to the justices, to make a rate for the support of the poor of the parish of St. Mary's, which was opposed, because the parish officers ought to make the rate, and the justices are only to sign it. To which it was answered, that this motion was grounded on this clause of the statute; and thereupon a mandamus was granted, directed to the justices; and as this is a matter of right, they ought to make a return. (16 Vin. Abr. 416.)

The justices are to make the taxation, and leave it to the churchwardens and overseers to levy it. (2 Salk. 480.)

Resolved, that the justices may impose the charge upon any of the inhabitants of the neighbouring parishes, and are not obliged to put a general tax upon the whole parish. (Comb. 309; 1 Vent. 350; Fol. 29.)

Either particular persons, or the whole parish, (Dimchurch v. Eastchurch, 2 Salk. 481,) may be charged.

It has been decided also, that it should appear by the order that the place on which the rate is made is not within the parish in aid of which it is assessed, and that this is necessary, although the names of both appear on the face of the order and are different. (Rex v. Boroughfen, 1 Nol. P. L. 246.)

But in Rex v. St. Helens, 1 Nol. P. L. 246, (n.), the above was cited to this point, when Lord Ellenborough, C. J. observed, that the diversity of name imports diversity of place, unless the contrary be shown. And see Anon. Fol. 25, ante, 235.

Rex v. Boroughfen, Fol. 29; 1 Barnard. B. R. 122. There was a taxation of several persons in a parish: objected, that it should be of all the persons in a particular place or parish. The court thought it unreasonable that several persons in a parish should be charged, and not all, but that the words of the act are very strong: and did not quash the order for this objection.

St. Benedict v. St. Peters, Fol. 31; 1 Bott, 409; 1 Nol. P. L. 246, 247; 11 Mod. 269. Motion to quash an order made to assess the parishes of St. Stephen and St. Mary Magdalen, in Norwich, in aid of the parish of St. Benedict, which was not able to maintain its own poor. Objection: these parishes are not in the same hundred; they are in the county of the city of Norwich, where there is no hundred, so the justices have no jurisdiction, though the sessions have in such case. Order quashed.

In Boroughfen v. St. Jones (Fol. 27, 31; 1 Bott, 402; 1 Nol. P. L. 245, 246), it did not appear upon the order that the parish which is charged to aid the other parish is within the same hundred. And it was quashed by the whole court.

Rex v. The Tithing of Milland, 1 Burr. 576. Two justices tax the inhabitants of the tithing of Milland in aid of the parish of St. Peter's, Cheesehill, in the same county. The sessions confirm the order, setting forth that the tithing of Milland and the parish of St. Peter's Cheesehill both lie in the same liberty of the soke where the said parish lies. On referring it back to the sessions to be more particularly stated, it appeared (substantially) to be a hundred, though called by another name. And the court held they were not restrained to the particular word hundred, but it is sufficient if it be signified by any word equivalent. And the orders were affirmed.

In Rex v. T. Holbeche, Esq. and another (4 T. R. 778), it was determined that county justices cannot rate a parish within their jurisdiction in aid of another parish lying within a borough which has an exclusive jurisdiction.

Rex v. St. Mary's in Marlborough, 2 Stra. 700; 1 Bott, 406; 1 Nol. P. L. 250. An order was made for a neighbouring parish to contribute so long as we the said justices shall think fit. But by the court: it must be quashed; for the discretion that is left in the justices is not to make a perpetual order, which this would be.

Rex v. Knightly, Comb. 309; 1 Bott, 399; 1 Nol. P. L. 245. A sum in gross was taxed upon a neighbouring parish for a whole year, which was objected to as unreasonable, because their ability may change; nevertheless the order was confirmed.

Rex v. Telscombe, 1 Stra. 314; 1 Bott, 403; 1 Nol. P. L. 245. By the court: the order for the contributory parish to make a rate at 6d. in the pound is ill for uncertainty; it should have been to raise such a sum certain. Quashed.

St. Peter and Paul in Marlborough, 2 Stra. 1114; 1 Bott, 406; 1 Nol. P. L. 244. Two justices, reciting the inability of the parish of St. Mary to maintain its own poor, order the parish of St. Peter and St. Paul to contribute 60*l.* for the maintenance of the poor of the other parish. An objection being made to their ordering such a gross sum, the court held it in that respect to be well.

And by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 3, if the said hundred shall not be thought by the said justices able and fit to relieve the said several parishes not able to provide for themselves as aforesaid, then the justices at their general quarter sessions, or the greater number of them, shall rate and assess as aforesaid any other of other parishes, or out of any parish within the county, &c.

Rex v. Percivall, 1 Stra. 56. Order of sessions, reciting that the parish is not able to maintain its own poor, nor any other parish within the hundred to contribute, therefore the justices at the sessions tax other parishes in another hundred. It was insisted that the statute gives no authority to the sessions to charge people out of the hundred till two justices have inquired whether any parish in the hundred can contribute. Parker, C. J. "I do not see to what purpose it would be for the two justices to make an order only to adjudge that no parish within the hundred is able to contribute. We will presume the sessions is satisfied of that, and if the two justices should make such an adjudication, yet the sessions must inquire into the truth of it; and if no order appear which charges any parish within the hundred, it is a sufficient ground for the sessions to act. If the two justices had charged any parish within the hundred, that would have stopped the sessions from proceeding; and the sufficiency of the hundred depends on this, whether two justices have ever charged the hundred. If the said hundred shall not be thought by the said justices able,—that is, if the two justices do not adjudge it so. If two justices should adjudge the hundred not able, yet, if other two justices adjudge the contrary, their charge would be good, and the sessions be ousted of their jurisdiction, notwithstanding the first adjudication." Eyre, J. "Here are two jurisdictions, that of the two justices and that of the sessions, and both are original jurisdictions. They are different in all respects, for the two justices have no power out of the hundred, nor the sessions within it. There need be no appeal from any adjudication of two justices, for that would be to appeal from a nullity." And the order was confirmed.

Rex v. Eastchurch, 1 Bott, 410. It was decided by Holt, C. J. that the sessions cannot make an original order on a parish within the hundred.

which is equivalent to a hundred is within the equity of the statute.

Justices cannot rate in aid of a parish out of their jurisdiction.

The order must be for a time limited.

The sum may be imposed in gross for a year.

The order must be to raise a sum certain.

The sum may be in gross.

The sessions may charge parishes out of the hundred, although two justices have not adjudged that the parishes within the hundred are unable to contribute.

Accounts of monies received under different statutes to be kept, examined, and passed.

1. Of Overseers' Accounts, what to be delivered, and passing same.

THE funds which are placed at the disposal of the parish authorities, for the provision of the poor, though arising chiefly from rates, are augmented by receipts from various sources besides the poor rates, which render it expedient that detailed accounts should be kept, and that they should be balanced and passed at different periods. Thus, the churchwardens and overseers are to account to the quarter sessions for all monies which they may receive under 5 Geo. I. c. 8, authorizing levies on the property of husbands and parents who leave their children on the parish; and for what they may receive under 17 Geo. II. c. 20, authorizing levies in certain cases on the property of lunatics. And see 7 Jac. I. c. 3, as to accounts of monies charitably given to bind out apprentices.

By the militia act, 43 Geo. III. c. 47, s. 21, the overseers were directed to give an account of allowance made to militia men, &c.; but by the 60th section of 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, so much of the statutes that required relief to be given to the wives and families of substitutes, hired men, or volunteers in the militia, are repealed.

Guardians' accounts.

Accounts, how kept and produced at monthly meetings, and proportions determined.
(i. e. the monthly meetings of guardians, ante, s. 24.)

Proportion for each parish.

At the monthly meeting required by the 24th section of 22 Geo. III. c. 83, it is by the same section enacted, "That the treasurer shall produce, fairly written, one account of the debt incurred in the preceding month, for utensils and materials for the purpose of manufacture, and for furniture, alterations, or repairs of the buildings, and also for the salary or allowance to the governor or treasurer, and servants (if any), in which account the rent of such house or houses, buildings, and premises, if the same shall be rented, shall be charged in the month next after such rent shall become due, according to the terms of the agreement for taking the same; which account, when settled and agreed to, shall be signed by the said guardians attending such meeting: and the sums to be paid by each of such parishes, townships, and places, on that account, shall be settled and adjusted at such meeting, in proportion to the sums paid by each of such parishes, townships, and places, on account of their poor, on a medium of three years next preceding the date of such agreement (to be settled and ascertained at such first monthly meeting, in the manner to be specified by the said agreement so to be entered into for uniting as aforesaid, and according to the mode or form and table contained or referred to in the said schedule, No. XV.) and in like manner, and in the like proportions, at every succeeding monthly meeting; and the money shall be then, or within one week after, paid into the hands of the said treasurer, to be by him applied in discharge of the several articles and debts contained in such account: and the said treasurer shall also at the same time produce, fairly written, one other account of the victuals, beer, firing, and other necessities, for the use and maintenance of the poor, and of the governor, at such house or houses, and all other incidental expenses; which shall be then accounted for and proportioned by the said guardians according to the number of persons which shall have been sent from each of the said respective parishes, townships, and places, and for the time they shall have resided in such house or houses within such month, according to the mode or form and table, and in the manner for that purpose also mentioned in the said schedule No. XVI.; and the sum due from each parish, township, or place, shall be specified at the foot of such account, which shall, when settled and agreed to, be signed by such guardians or the major part of them, and be afterwards inspected by the visitor, if not a guardian, and allowed by him, if he shall approve thereof; and in case default shall be made in payment of the respective sums so proportioned to be paid in respect of any such parish, township, or place, for seven days after the same shall be so settled and proportioned, and the money demanded, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace for the limit where such house or houses shall be situate, upon complaint made to him upon oath of such default, to levy the said respective sums to be settled and proportioned as aforesaid, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of any guardian of the poor for any such parish, township, or place, making such default; and at the end of every year the account shall be finally closed, and the balances paid and received, according to the mode prescribed by the said schedule No. XVI."

Rex v. Great Farringdon, 9 B. & C. 541. A rated parishioner has a right to inspect the accounts of the expenditure of the parish, kept by guardians of the poor, appointed under the 22 Geo. III. c. 83. Assuming that he has no right to appeal, or that the time for appeal is gone by, he may have other good reason for inspecting the books. He has a right to see what has been done, and the Court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus, commanding the guardians, &c. to allow such inspection. Ante, 213.

By the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 47, it is enacted, "That every person having the receipt or distribution of the monies assessed for the poor in any parish or union, or holding any books or goods relating thereto, shall once in every quarter, in addition to the annual account now by law required, and where the rules of the commissioners shall have come in force, then as often as the said rules shall direct, but not less than once in every quarter, render to the guardians, auditors, or other persons as by any statute or custom, or the said rules, may be appointed to audit such accounts, or in default of any such guardian, auditor, or other person being so appointed, then to the justices at their petty sessions, an account in writing of all monies and things committed to their charge, or received or expended by them on behalf of any such parish or union, and if required shall verify on oath the truth of the same, or subscribe a declaration to the truth thereof; and all balances due may be recovered in the same manner as any penalties and forfeitures are recoverable under this act: the proceeding not to exonerate surety."

Where a union has been formed, the 28th rule of the commissioners requires the guardians to appoint a competent person to be auditor of the accounts; and such auditor shall, four times in every year, that is to say, within thirty days after Lady-day, Midsummer-day, Michaelmas-day, and Christmas-day, audit the accounts of the union and of the parishes comprised therein, according to the laws in force for the time being for the administration of the relief of the poor. A form of certificate of allowance is given.

The accounts above enumerated are independent of and distinct from the final account which the overseers are bound to make at the expiration of their office.

The 7 Jac. I. c. 3, which entrusts them with the disposition of charitable

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, "The churchwardens and overseers so to be nominated, or such of them as shall not be let by sickness or other just excuse, to be allowed by two such justices of peace, or more, as is aforesaid, shall meet together at the least once every month in the church of the said parish, upon the Sunday in the afternoon, after divine service, there to consider of some good course to be taken, and of some meet order to be set down in the premises; and shall within four days after the end of their year, and after other overseers nominated as aforesaid, make and yield up to such two justices of peace as is aforesaid, a true and perfect account of all sums of money by them received, or rated and * sessed and not received, and also of such stock as shall be in their hands or in the hands of any of the poor to work, and of all other things concerning their said office; and such sum or sums of money as shall be in their hands, shall pay and deliver over to the said churchwardens and overseers, newly nominated and appointed as aforesaid; upon pain that every one of them absenting themselves without lawful cause as aforesaid, from such monthly meeting for the purpose aforesaid, or being negligent in their office, or in the execution of the orders aforesaid, being made by and with the assent of the said justices of peace, or any two of them before mentioned, to forfeit for every such default of absence or negligence, twenty shillings." See also 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1 (post, 241, 242).

* Sic.

Proceedings for arrears.

Sect. 4. "It shall be lawful, as well for the present as subsequent churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, by warrant from any two such justices of peace as is aforesaid, to levy as well the said sums of money and all arrearages, of every one that shall refuse to contribute according as they shall be assessed, by distress and sale of the offender's goods, as the sums of money or stock which shall be behind upon any account to be made as aforesaid, rendering to the parties the overplus; and in defect of such distress, it shall be lawful for any such two justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until payment of the said sum, arrearages, and stock: and the said justices of peace or any of them, to send to the house of correction or common goal such as shall not employ themselves to work, being appointed thereunto as aforesaid; and also any such two justices of peace to commit to the said prison every one of the said churchwardens and overseers who shall refuse to account, there to remain without bail or mainprize, until he have made a true account, and satisfied and paid so much as upon the said account shall be remaining in his hands."

And the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, enacts as follows on this subject:

Parish officers shall make up and deliver their accounts to their successors.

The requisites of such accounts.(a)

Sect. 1. "The churchwardens and overseers of the poor shall yearly and every year, within fourteen days after other overseers shall be nominated and appointed to succeed them, deliver in to such succeeding overseers a just, true, and perfect account in writing, fairly entered in a book or books to be kept for that purpose, and signed by the said churchwardens and overseers hereby directed to account as aforesaid, under their hands, of all sums of money by them received, or rated and assessed and not received, and also of all goods, chattels, stock, and materials that shall be in their hands, or in the hands of any of the poor, in order to be wrought, and of all monies paid by such churchwardens and overseers so accounting, and of all things concerning their said office. And shall also pay and deliver over all sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things, as shall be in their hands, unto such succeeding overseers of the poor; which said accounts shall be verified by oath, or by the affirmation of persons called Quakers, before one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace, which said oath or affirmation such justice or justices is and are hereby authorized and required to administer, and to sign and attest the caption of the same at the foot of the said account, without fee or reward. And the said book or books shall be carefully preserved by the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, in some public or other place in every parish, township, or place; and they shall and are hereby required to permit any person there assessed, or liable to be assessed, to inspect the same at all seasonable times, paying sixpence for such inspection; and shall, upon demand, forthwith give copies of the same or any part thereof to such person, paying at the rate of sixpence for every three hundred words, and so in proportion for any greater or less number." (a)

Sect. 2. "In case such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or any of them, shall refuse or neglect to make and yield up such account, verified as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore limited or appointed, or shall refuse or neglect to pay and deliver over such sum or sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things in their hands, as by this act is directed; in either of the said cases, it shall and may be lawful to and for any two or more justices of the peace to commit him or them to the common gaol until he or they shall have given such account, or shall have paid or yielded up such monies, goods, chattels, and other things in their hands as aforesaid."

By 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, after reciting 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 1, and that two or more justices should be empowered to examine and correct, and to allow and approve every such account before the same shall be signed and attested, it is enacted, "that in all cases where any such account is required to be made and yielded, and to be signed and attested as aforesaid by virtue of the said last recited act, every such account shall be submitted by the churchwardens and overseers to two or more justices of the peace of the county, dwelling in or near the parish or place to which such account shall relate, at a special sessions for that purpose to be holden within the fourteen days appointed by the said last recited act for delivering in such account; and such justices shall and they are hereby authorized and empowered, if they shall so think fit, to examine into the matter of every such account, and to administer an oath or affirmation to such churchwardens and overseers of the truth of such account, and to disallow and strike out of every such account all such charges and payments as they shall deem to be unfounded, and to reduce such as they shall deem to be exorbitant, specifying upon or at the foot of such account every such charge or payment and its amount, so far as such justices shall disallow or reduce the same, and the cause for which the same is disallowed or reduced; and it shall be lawful for such two or more justices, and they are hereby required to signify their allowance and approbation of any such account under their hands, and to sign and attest the caption of the same at the foot of such account, in manner directed by the said last recited act: and in case such churchwardens and overseers or any of them shall refuse or neglect to make and yield up or to submit such account, or to verify the same by oath as aforesaid, or to deliver over to their successors within ten days from the signing and attesting such accounts, any goods, chattels, or other things, which on the examination and allowance of such account in manner aforesaid shall appear to be remaining in the hands of such churchwardens or overseers, it shall and may be lawful for any two or more justices of the peace to commit him, her, or them, to the common gaol, until he, she, or they shall have made and yielded such account, and verified the same as aforesaid, or shall have delivered over such goods, chattels, and other things which shall appear to be so remaining Penalty on parish officers not accounting as this act directs.

Accounts of churchwardens and overseers of the poor to be submitted by them to two or more justices at a special sessions.

Penalty for neglect, &c.

(a) This provision applies to the guardians of the poor. See Rex v. Great Farrington, 9 B. & C. 541.

1. Overseers' Accounts, delivering and passing same.

in his, her, or their hands as aforesaid; and in case such churchwardens or overseers, or any of them, shall refuse or neglect to pay to their successors, within fourteen days from the signing and attesting such account, any sum or sums of money or arrearages which on the examination and allowance of such account in manner aforesaid shall appear or be found to be due and owing from such churchwardens or overseers, or any of them, or remaining in their hands, it shall and may be lawful for the subsequent churchwardens and overseers, by warrant from any two or more justices of the peace, to levy all such sum or sums of money by distress and sale of the offenders' goods, rendering to the parties the overplus; and in default of such distress, it shall be lawful for any such two justices of the peace to commit the offender or offenders to the common gaol of the county, there to remain without bail or mainprize until payment of such sum or sums of money or arrearages as aforesaid.

The above provision, by s. 6 of the same statute, is restrained from affecting parish officers exempted under local acts from rendering such accounts.

It is discretionary with the justices to commit an overseer refusing to account.

It is not imperative on the justices to commit an overseer who refuses to account. A very old and infirm man was elected churchwarden, but never sworn in, and although he signed the poor rates, he had never interfered in their collection, or received any of the parish monies. He rendered no accounts, but the justices refused to commit. On an application to the King's Bench for a mandamus to compel them to commit, it was held, that although it was the duty of the party to render some account, as the statute required an account of monies rated and assessed and not received, and of all things concerning the office, yet the statute does not compel, but only authorizes the justices to commit, and as the justices had exercised a discretion, the rule as to them was discharged with costs. (Rex v. Justices of Norfolk, 4 B. & Ad. 238; 1 Nev. & Man. 67.)

The 50 Geo. III. c. 49, which requires churchwardens and overseers to submit their accounts to two justices at special sessions within the fourteen days appointed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, for delivering in the said accounts to the succeeding overseers, is not a substitution in lieu of that provision in the 17 Geo. II. but is cumulative; and if the overseer refuse to deliver in such accounts to the succeeding overseers within the fourteen days, he may be committed.

Lester's case, 16 East, 374. Lester, late overseer of Paddington, was in custody under a warrant by two justices for not delivering in his accounts to the succeeding overseers within fourteen days from their appointment. It was contended, that the 50 Geo. III. c. 49, which directs the accounts to be submitted to two justices at a special sessions, within the fourteen days appointed by the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, was substituted for the obligation to deliver them over to the succeeding overseers. By the 50 Geo. III. the overseers who refuse or neglect to submit the accounts to the justices, are made liable to be committed; if, therefore, they have fourteen days allowed them for submitting their accounts to the justices, how can they be required within that time to deliver them over to the succeeding overseers? The duty imposed by one act is inconsistent with and would interfere with the other. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The provision in the 50 Geo. III. seems rather to apply to the manner of examining the accounts when yielded, leaving the accounts still as before to be delivered over to the succeeding overseers; but they are also within the fourteen days to be submitted to the justices for examination. An ulterior means is afforded of investigating them before the justices; the act only means that they shall be exhibited to the justices; it is, therefore, for a different object. It is very expedient that the succeeding overseers should have the accounts delivered in to them immediately from the former overseers, which is the object of the 17 Geo. II.; then the 50 Geo. III. directs that the account so to be delivered shall be submitted to the justices to be examined and approved by them; that, therefore, is manifestly cumulative." Le Blanc. J. "The churchwardens and overseers are to deliver in to the succeeding overseers their accounts verified on oath before one or more justices, who are to sign and attest the same; that is provided for by the 17 Geo. II. By the subsequent act, the accounts are to be submitted to two or more justices at a special sessions; and power is given them to examine and approve such accounts, and they are required to signify their approbation of them under their hands, and then to sign and attest as directed by the former act. This provision, therefore, is perfectly consistent with the provision in the former act."

Rex v. The Justices of Colchester, 5 B. & A. 535; 1 D. & R. 146; and 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 51. On a rule nisi for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear an appeal against the overseers' accounts, it appeared that the accounts had on the 14th May been duly allowed by two justices, pursuant to 17 Geo. II. c. 38, at a petty sessions; but they had not been examined and allowed at a special sessions, pursuant to 50 Geo. III. c. 49. The sessions dismissed the appeal, on the ground that they had no jurisdiction. Per Curiam—"We are quite satisfied that the sessions had jurisdiction, and they ought to have heard the appeal." Rule absolute.

Goff's case, 3 M. & Sel. 203. Goff was committed for that he having been collector of the rates for Richmond, refused to account and pay over the monies collected by him to W. S., the person duly authorized to receive them; and he was committed until he should have made a true and fair account, and until such money as upon the said account should appear to be remaining in his hands should be paid to W. S., and the keeper of the gaol was required to keep him until he should be discharged by due course of law. It was contended that the warrant was void for directing the detention till he should be discharged by due course of law. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If there was any uncertainty on the face of the commitment, I should have agreed with the argument; but coupling the premises with the conclusion, is it not in effect the same as if the warrant had directed the gaoler to detain the party until he had accounted? We must read the warrant as if the magistrates had in the conclusion recited over again the adjudication." Le Blanc, J. "Some precise authority ought to be shown to justify the court in adopting the objection made to this warrant. When the party has accounted and paid over the money, he will be entitled to be discharged by due course of law." The prisoner remanded. (This case qualifies that in Carthew, 152, post, 250.)

Justices cannot commit a man for not accounting before the time allowed for rendering an account has elapsed. The accounts cannot be withdrawn from the two justices to whom they were first submitted, for the purpose of referring them to others, and if this be done, the allowance or disallowance of such others is void, and any unreasonable delay by such justices may be corrected by an application to K. B. But although the sessions cannot delegate their authority, they may remit such accounts to such two justices before whom they were first laid, as that is merely desiring them to execute their original authority. (Rex v. Townsend, Bott, 323; S. C. Vin. 417.) This was before 17 Geo. II. c. 38.

Rex v. The Justices of Middlesex, 1 Wils. 125; 1 Bott, 317. A mandamus was granted to swear Carr, late overseer, to the truth of his account, upon an affidavit made by Carr, that he had delivered in an account to the justices, and was ready to swear to the truth thereof, but that they had refused to swear him. It was objected, that the accounts consisted of gross sums, and the justices asked him some questions touching the particulars, which he refused to answer, and therefore they refused to swear him to his account. By the court: "A mandamus is a matter of course, and we cannot refuse to grant it. If the justices have any legal objection, they may return it upon the mandamus. And if any person think himself aggrieved by the account, he may have his remedy by appeal."

Rex v. Peake, 1 Keb. 574; 1 Bott, 308. The churchwarden was committed for refusing to account for all monies received and disbursed by him, and of all such things as concerned his office. But upon an habeas corpus he was discharged; for if he be committed as overseer, it must be so expressed in the mittimus, although to be overseer be annexed to the office of churchwarden, for the justices have no power over him as churchwarden.

By the stat. 23 Geo. III. for regulating the affairs of the poor of Birmingham, the guardians and overseers thereby appointed are directed to adjust their accounts at quarterly meetings of their own body; and an appeal is given to the sessions in respect of all matters done by virtue thereof: but the statute is silent as to any submission of the overseers' and guardians' accounts to magistrates, as required by the statute 50 Geo. III. c. 49; held, however, that a mandamus would lie from the court of K. B. to the guardians and over-

It is not necessary, in order to give the sessions jurisdiction to hear an appeal against overseers' accounts, that they should have been previously allowed at a special sessions, pursuant to 50 Geo. III. c. 49.

Commitment of a parish collector of the rates to gaol, there to remain until he should have made a true account, and until such money as should appear to be in his hands should be paid by him or his sureties, was held well, although it concluded by directing the gaoler to keep him until he should be discharged by due course of law.

seers to pass their accounts in the manner required by that statute. (Rex v. Warwickshire (Justices), 2 D. & R. 299, S. C. infra.)

17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3. "If any overseer shall die, or remove from the place for which he was appointed, or become insolvent, before the expiration of his office, on oath thereof made, it shall be lawful for two justices of the peace to appoint another in his stead, who shall continue in office until new overseers are appointed; and if any overseer shall remove as aforesaid, he shall, before such removal, deliver over to such churchwarden, or other overseer of the same place, his accounts, verified as aforesaid, with all rates, assessments, books, papers, sums of money, and other things concerning his office, under the like penalties as are inflicted by this act on an overseer refusing to do the same after the expiration of his office; and if any overseer shall die as aforesaid, his executors or administrators shall, within forty days after his decease, deliver over all things concerning his office to some churchwarden or other overseer of the same place, and shall pay out of the assets left by such overseer all sums of money remaining due, which he received by virtue of his said office, before any of his other debts are paid and satisfied."

When a parish extends into more counties than one, or lies partly within and partly without the liberties of any corporate place, the officers of such a parish shall make one account before the head officers of the place corporate, and one other before the justices of the county. 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 9.

Before the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, the first section of which prescribes the manner of preparing the accounts, a very general and unsatisfactory statement of them seems to have been tolerated. Thus where two justices committed an overseer till he should make a true account, he having produced an account in gross of his receipts and payments, and refused to produce his books or a particular account of the monies received on rates assessed, or of the particular payments making up the sum charged in gross; the court of King's Bench discharged him from custody, saying that the justices had no authority to commit in this manner by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, for that an account was confessed to have been tendered. (Rex v. Corrocke, 1 Show. 395; 1 Bott, 310; Walrond's case, ib. 300.)

Delivering a summary or balance sheet insufficient.

Delivering in a summary or balance sheet of the monies received and expended, is not such an account as the statute (17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 1,) requires. The overseers must do a great deal more. They are to give to the succeeding overseers a just, true, and perfect account in writing, fairly entered in a book or books, to be kept for that purpose, of all sums of money by them received, or rated and assessed and not received. Now a mere balance sheet will not show what sums have been rated and assessed and not received. The overseers clearly ought to verify and deliver over the sort of account required by the very terms of the statute. Any usage to the contrary cannot dispense with the provisions of the act of parliament. Per Abbot, C. J. Rex v. Justices of Worcestershire, 3 D. & R. 299. And a writ of mandamus was issued to the justices to hear and determine a complaint against the ex-overseers for not properly accounting pursuant to the statute. Id.

Mandamus will lie to compel guardians to make a fresh account, the former account having passed without calling the attention of the justices to a large objectionable item.

Rex v. Justices of Warwickshire, 2 D. & R. 299. Abbott, C. J. "One question is, whether these accounts have been passed: I mean passed so as to direct the attention of those who are to pass them to a particular item which is the subject of objection. I do not say that in the investigation of voluminous accounts, such as these, the attention of the parties is to be directed to the expenditure of every shilling which may have been paid by the guardians in the ordinary discharge of the duties of their office, such as trifling sums paid to paupers or minute expenses of that description. The strong fact here alleged is, that a very large sum of money (a) had been paid for a particular purpose, the legality of which payment might be doubted. It is now supposed to have been paid under the sanction of the authority of the magistrates, before whom it was the duty of the guardians and overseers to pass their accounts, but against the opinion of many persons, who thought that such a disbursement ought not to have been made. It is alleged that the overseers and guardians were apprised of such objections, before they proceeded to pass these accounts. Under such circumstances, it was their duty, in seeking to have the allowance of such an item, to have directed the attention of the magistrates to that item, so that they might exercise their judgment upon the subject, and allow or disallow it, according as they were satisfied or dissatisfied with it. What is the allegation in this case? The party who makes the affidavit states that he was present when the accounts were submitted to the justices, but that the attention of the justices was not called to nor did they proceed to examine the whole of the items, but merely looked at the summary, in which was a lumping sum of 2000*l.* paid to the constables. There is no affidavit, on the other hand, to show that the parties inquired into or had their attention directed to the component parts of that sum. I am therefore clearly of opinion that we ought to make that part of the rule absolute which prays for a mandamus to the overseers and guardians to pass their accounts, and it will be competent for them to make a return thereto."

(a) The sum allowed was nearly 400*l.* for prosecuting a man for a libel on two justices, relating to their conduct in committing a pauper for returning to a parish from which he had been removed.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, poor rates in hands of overseers are to be paid by his executors in preference to all other debts. (2 Bla. Com. 511.) As to the proof in bankruptcy against an overseer, see Ex parte Exleigh, 6 Ves. Jun. 811; Chitty's Eq. Dig. 725.

1. Overseers' Accounts, delivering and passing same.

2. What may be charged in Accounts.

The overseers are entitled to take credit for all sums properly expended in the discharge of their duty, but not for disbursements to which the poor rates and other monies which come into their hands are by law inapplicable. See "Purposes of the Poor Rate," ante, 104 to 107. And see several points, Barrons v. Luscombe and others, 5 Nev. & Man. 330. See also instructions to overseers, post, Appendix.

By 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 2, no parish officer shall (except upon sudden and emergent occasions) bring to the account of the parish any monies he shall give to any poor person of the same parish, who is not registered in the parish books as a person entitled to receive collection, upon pain of forfeiting 5*l.* And although the act does not go on to say that such items of expenditure shall be disallowed, the justices may very properly strike them out of the accounts."

By 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 89, "all payments, charges, and allowances made by any overseer or guardian, and charged upon the rates, contrary to that act, or at variance with any rule of the commissioners, are illegal; and every justice is hereby required to disallow such payments, &c.: provided always, that no allowance by any justice shall exonerate such overseer or guardian from any penalty or legal proceeding to which he may have rendered himself liable by having acted contrary to the rules of the commissioners, or to the provisions of that act."

Overseers may justly charge to the parish whatever they have bonâ fide expended in providing work for the children of indigent parents, and for persons having no means of livelihood, in relieving those paupers who have claims upon the parish, and in the disposal of the stock raised for these purposes: indeed, it has been said that they may credit themselves with any money expended for the good and on the business of the parish. (Per Ashhurst, J., Rex v. Micklefield, Cald. 509. (b)) But it appears by the same case, that an overseer proceeding through all the stages of an expensive law-suit, without the concurrence of a vestry, is personally liable. Of course they are entitled to charge whatever they have paid under the direction of a statute, or under any order upon them, or other legal process, as under 51 Geo. III. c. 79, and 52 Geo. III. c. 160, &c., or for costs of maintenance, removal, or appeal. (Vide Rex v. Inhabitants of Essex, ante.) But it is not decided that the expenses of a law-suit, incurred by the officers without consulting the vestry, are chargeable in the account, unless, perhaps, where the emergency of the occasion allows no time for that precaution. In order to obtain the allowance of law expenses, the overseers must not have misconducted themselves in contracting them. In some instances the statutes which direct the expenditure of money authorize the overseers in express terms to charge it in their accounts: such are the enactments of 2 & 3 Anne, c. 6, s. 2; 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 1; 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4; and 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 8.

It is presumed to be undeniable that the money advanced as an inducement to paupers, between whom an illicit intercourse has taken place, to marry, is a misapplication of the parish funds; and that if objected to on passing the overseers' accounts, such items must be disallowed. The question has never yet, it is believed, been before the superior courts; but it can hardly be said that expenses so incurred are for the relief of the poor, or can be classed among any of the objects to which those funds are by law applicable.

The expenses of a constable, in prosecuting an assault committed on him in the execution of his duty, cannot be paid by the overseer out of the poor-rate, and are not within the 18 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 4. (Rex v. Bird, 2 B. & A. 522. See also Rex v. Seville, 5 B. & A. 180.)

Overseers cannot charge in their accounts for money paid as a salary to one of the overseers.

Rex v. Glyde, 2 M. & Sel. 323, n.; Bott, 332. In the accounts of the overseers, 12l. 10s. paid to W. as a salary was allowed. Lord Ellenborough, "This rule may be enlarged, subject to a case to be stated as to what the grounds for the allowance were, that we may ascertain that the salary was not meant as a pension to the overseer, which the law will not allow. We have no doubt on the face of the order that he has no title to a salary for any meritorious services, or for any services at all; but we would wish to relieve the parties if it has been paid in reality for the maintenance and keeping of the poor. Perhaps the best way will be to quash the order, and remit the case to the sessions to rehear the appeal."

The overseers are to be allowed only for their bare expenses. Per Aston, J., in Rex v. Lord Ashburnham, 2 Nol. P. L. 443, 462, n.

Salary of assistant overseer.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, the overseers may be allowed the charge of a salary for an assistant. But such a charge was not allowed before the passing of that act, and this although under the sanction of a vestry. Rex v. Welch, 1 Bott, 341; 4 Doug. 236.

Overseers cannot charge for making or collecting poor rate, or making out list of defaulters, although authorized by a vestry.

Rex v. Gwyer, 2 Adol. & Ell. 216; 4 Nev. & Man. 158, S. C. The overseers are not entitled to charge in their accounts for making poor rates, for making divisions of the same, for making copy of the same for the collectors, for payments to an accountant for examining, making up, and entering the accounts of the year, and list of defaulters on the rates, nor poundage for collecting the rates, although such charges had been authorized by the resolution of the vestry. This was an appeal against the accounts of a parish of great extent, with a population of 13,000 persons and an annual expenditure for the poor of 8000l. For some years there had been an assistant overseer, but in the year in question the vestry resolved that none should be elected, but that the overseers should have power to call in what assistance they required; and the sessions found that the sums objected to were fair and reasonable. But it was held, that although these circumstances made it extremely reasonable that the sum should be allowed, that the sessions had no power to do so; and that the situation of overseers is like that of other persons upon whom the law casts burdensome duties without remuneration.

3. Reimbursing overseers.

3. Reimbursing Overseers.

It frequently happens that the overseers advance money for the benefit and on account of the parish, and in such cases they may now reimburse themselves out of any subsequent rate made by them during their year. If there be a balance due to the overseers, the successors cannot pay them, except in cases provided for by statute. (Rex v. Tawney, 2 Salk. 531; 2 Ld. Raym. 1011. Rex v. Overseers of St. Peter's, Chichester, Fol. 33; 1 Bott, 81.)

(a) See as to waywardens what expenses they may charge in their accounts. Rex v. Fowler and others, 3 Nev. & Man. 606.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 11, the succeeding overseers, by levying and getting in the arrears of any rate which their predecessors made, but from refusal or neglect of the party rated were unable to get in, might, and still may, reimburse the advances of those predecessors to the extent of the arrears so got in. And by 41 Geo. III. (G. B.) c. 23, s. 9, it is made lawful to reimburse all sums which the preceding officers may have advanced during a time when no rate has been made, or where an appeal has been depending by which the whole rate might be affected.

3. Reimbursing Overseers.

How far may reimburse predecessors.

So that, unless the non-payment of the rate have arisen from the remissness of the officers themselves, (which being no neglect or refusal of the party rated, comes not within statute 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 11,) or unless the officers having made and collected the rate have been imprudent enough to assess it too low, in which event the relief given by stat. 41 Geo. III. (G. B.) c. 23, s. 9, would not be applicable, the advances bonâ fide made by parish officers seem now to be secured to them, notwithstanding any accident by which they may have been unable to repay themselves during their year of office.

Before the passing of these statutes, where it appeared that an overseer had omitted to take credit in his account for a sum of money justly expended by him, it was held that the sessions had no authority, upon appeal, to order, his successors to pay the money to his executor, although the vestry consented (Rex v. Ware, 1 Bott, 314, pl. 328; Fol. 10; 10 Mod. 104), for otherwise a man who came into the parish after the overseers' year, would be charged to the expense of that preceding year, while he had been contributing to the maintenance of other poor in another parish. (Id.; Rex v. Goodcheap, 6 T. R. 159.)

But where one overseer is money out of pocket, and one of his co-officers has received a sufficiency to reimburse him, an order may be made on such officer. (Semble, Rex v. Limehouse, Fol. 22, 1 Geo. I., and see 2 Nol. 457.)

4. Delivering over Balance, Books, Chattels, &c.

4. Delivering over balance, books, chattels, &c.

By the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, the two or more justices who took the account of the overseers, upon a balance found against them, might order all or any of them to pay such balance, and might issue warrants of distress to enforce the payment (see Rex v. Topsham, 2 Salk. 484; Rex v. Bartlett, 1 Bott, 506; 2 Nol. 451; Rex v. Whitecar, 1 Bott, 326); Rex v. Bill, cited by Lord Mansfield, in 2 Burr. 805, the overseers were indicted for not obeying the order of sessions in paying over the balance.

The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 2, empowered any two or more justices to commit the overseers to gaol until they had given an account and yielded up the monies, goods, or other things in their hands.

And now by the 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 1, it is enacted "that if the churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, refuse or neglect to deliver over to their successors, within ten days from the signing or attesting such accounts, any goods, chattels, or other things, which on the examination and allowance of such accounts shall be remaining in the hands of such churchwardens and overseers, the subsequent officers may, by warrant from any two or more justices, levy the same by distress and sale of the offender's goods, returning the overplus; and in default of such distress, the justices may commit the offender or offenders to the county gaol, to remain without bail or mainprize until payment." See construction, Lester's case, ante, 242.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 6, the new officers having received the book or books containing the account, they or one of them must keep such book or books in some public place; and shall permit any person there assessed or liable to be assessed, to inspect the same at all reasonable times for the fee of 6d.; and on demand shall give copies thereof, or of any part thereof, to such person, at the rate of 6d. for every 300 words, and in proportion for any greater or less number. Where there is a vestry within a parish or in a township, that assembly may direct in what custody the account shall be kept.

Inspection of the books by rated inhabitants, and taking copies thereof.

4. Delivering tels, &c.

Balance must be paid over to successors.

Rex v. The Justices of Somersetshire, 2 Stra. 992. Mandamus to the justices to grant a warrant for levying the balance of the last overseers' account. They return, that there was such a balance, but that the vestry had ordered them to retain it, and employ an attorney to sue for some charity-money, and get it laid out for the benefit of the poor; that one Young was so employed, and the balance exhausted in fees, and that the overseers had engaged to pay Young: and for that cause they had refused to grant the warrant. But by the court: "There must go a peremptory mandamus; for the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, says, the balance shall be paid over to the new overseers, under a penalty: and it is not in the power of the vestry to dispense with the statute."

Malkin v. Vickerstaff, 3 B. & Ald. 89. A parish contained two divisions, each of which had separate overseers and separate rates, and their poor were also paid separately; the overseers of both divisions met at the end of every year, and, in making up their accounts, if the overseers of the one had money in hand, they paid over the balance to the overseers of the other: held, that this was in effect one joint and entire parochial account, and that all the overseers were to be considered as joint overseers of the parish at large.

Rex v. Tucker, 5 M. & Sel. 508. Tucker and another were appointed overseers from Lady-day, 1815, to Lady-day, 1816, and Tucker received between Lady-day, 1815, and the end of January, 1816, 952*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, out of which he disbursed 770*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, leaving a balance in his hands of 181*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* On the 6th of February, 1816, a commission of bankruptcy issued against him, and he was declared bankrupt, and accounted under the commission for the balance; but having before the commission absconded from his house, the account books in his hands, as overseer, were taken away from his house by the churchwardens and overseer. At Lady-day, 1816, new overseers having been appointed, Tucker attended a vestry meeting, and made up his accounts by checking them with the account books in the hands of the overseers; from which it appeared that the above balance was due from him to the parish before he became bankrupt, and he offered to verify the account on oath. Afterwards he obtained his certificate; notwithstanding which, the justices issued their warrant upon the complaint of one of the overseers that Tucker had not made and given in his account, and yielded up the monies and things claimed by the parish to them, the succeeding overseers; under which warrant he was carried before the justices and committed. And upon a rule nisi for a habeas corpus, the doubt was, if his bankruptcy and certificate discharged the debt; and Rex v. Eggington, (1 T. R. 369,) was cited, which, however, had not been approved of in Ex parte Exleigh, (6 Ves. 811). It was also argued that an overseer is not like a mere trustee; he is indictable if he does not account and pay over the balance (Rex v. King, 2 Str. 1268; Rex v. Commins, 5 Mod. 179); though he cannot be called on to bring in his account until the year expires. (Rex v. Gibson, Fol. 20.) Now, at the time of the defendant's bankruptcy, there was not any debt due from him as overseer for which he could be sued, nor any one to whom he could pay it until his successors were appointed; consequently, this is not a debt proveable under the commission within the statutes of bankrupt. But per Curiam, "The money in his hands at the time of the bankruptcy was debitum in presenti, although he might only be accountable for it in futuro." It had been held, with respect to the land tax collectors, that any of the parishioners might prove.

Rex v. Sir J. Carter and others, 4 T. R. 246. On an appeal against the allowance of the accounts of Mr. Read, an overseer of Fareham, the sessions disallowed several items, amounting to 42*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*; but the order of sessions did not direct Read to pay that sum over to the succeeding overseers. On Read's subsequent refusal to pay over this sum, an application was made to the defendants, as magistrates, to enforce payment under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, 4, and 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 3; but they conceiving they had no authority, declined to interfere. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It seems to me that these justices have jurisdiction in this case. The effect of the appeal was the ascertaining the quantum of the arrears; and then the statute attaches, and enables the magistrates out of sessions to enforce the payment of the balance." Grose, J. (Ashurst and Buller, Js. absent,) "These are as much arrears now as they were before the appeal; only the quantum is ascertained." Rule absolute.

An overseer is discharged by his bankruptcy and certificate from a debt due in respect of a sum of money in his hands as overseer at the time of his bankruptcy, although this happen before the expiration of his year of office, before which time he cannot be compelled to account.

Two justices out of sessions may enforce payment of the balance of overseers' account after appeal, though the sessions do not make any order for payment.

Rex v. Hedges, 3 Salk. 533. On appeal against the allowance of the account, the sessions ordered the overseer to pay so much over, which they adjudged to be in his hands; and for not doing this, they committed him. But by the Court: "They should have levied the arrears by distress and sale, and in default of distress have committed him; for the sessions must execute their judgment in the same manner as the two justices must do."

Reg. v. Turner, 1 Bott, 341; Vin. Ab. Poor. If accounts are adjusted, and the overseers refuse to pay the balance, they cannot be committed immediately, but a warrant must issue to distrain upon them, and upon the return thereof there may be a commitment.

Rex v. Pascoe, 2 M. & Sel. 343. On an application for a mandamus to two justices to grant a warrant of distress for levying 39*l.* 13*s.* 11½*d.* upon the late overseers of Ludyan, it appeared that their accounts for the year ending Easter, 1813, were submitted to the defendants for allowance, when the defendants disallowed several items, amounting to 43*l.* 1*s.* 11½*d.* and made an order for the said overseers to pay over the same to the present overseers. The late overseers appealed against the order, which appeal was dismissed for want of sufficient recognizance: but, notwithstanding such dismissal, they refused to pay over the balance; whereupon application was made to the defendants for a warrant of distress, to levy the same on their goods. A summons issued, and the late overseers attended the defendants, when it appeared that they had paid over 3*l.* 8*s.*, but refused to pay the remainder; whereupon the defendants were required by one of the present overseers to issue their warrant of distress; but as the other two parish officers refused to concur with him in such application, the defendants thought they had no jurisdiction, for the want of the concurrence of the major part of the present churchwardens and overseers, and thereupon refused to issue their warrant. It was stated, that the overseer who made the request was not able to procure any other of his colleagues to concur with him. The court said, that without imputing fraud in this case, they should be restraining the meaning of the statute too much, if they did not put it into motion upon the application of any one of the overseers; that the mischief of a more strict construction would be great, for then the dissent of any one of the churchwardens and overseers would have the effect of suspending the statute. Per Curiam. Rule absolute.

Case of the Borough of Banbury, 1 Bott, 339. Where four towns lie in one parish, having each an overseer, and there is one rate for the whole, and one account, although each overseer collected and paid that of his respective town, and the inhabitants of each were respectively assessed by their respective overseers, the justices may order a distribution, where there is a want of money in some, and a surplusage in others.

So in Rex v. Churchwardens of Topsham, 1 Bott, 340, it was held the justices might order payment of the balance to the succeeding overseers.

And in Rex v. Limehouse, 1 Bott, 342, that one overseer should reimburse another where the one had a surplus, and the other was money out of pocket. See also Malkin v. Vickerstaff, 3 B. & Ald. ante, 248.

Rex v. The Justices of Essex, 3 B. & Adol. 941. The overseers of Woodford were accustomed to divide the duty of collecting the rates, each performing it for half a year. Peppercorn and Wood were appointed overseers, and Wood having discharged his own half-year's duty, offered his colleague to do and did the other likewise. He afterwards delivered in the annual overseers' account to the vestry, making no distinction between the half years. It being urged that both overseers should sign the account,

4. Delivering over Balance, Books, Chattels, &c.

Balance to be levied by distress, payment having been ordered by sessions on appeal.

For non-payment of balance there must be distress before commitment. (a)

If the overseers, after an order to pay over the balance to their successors, which is confirmed on appeal, refuse to pay such balance, the two justices may issue their warrant to levy the same under 50 G. 3, c. 49, upon the application of one of the succeeding overseers, although the rest refuse to concur in such application: therefore, where the justices refused to issue such warrant upon such application, the court granted a mandamus.

Where a balance may be ordered to be distributed.

Repayment of balance.

One overseer reimbursing another.

Warrant of distress cannot be issued against a co-overseer on the ground that he signed the accounts.

(a) Semble, no action will lie against an overseer to recover a balance in hand, 1 McClelland & Young, 450; 2 Burr. 1157.

4. Delivering over Balance, Books, Chat-tels, &c.

Commitment should be until they account.

Books to be delivered to the new overseers.

A conviction by two justices under stat. 17 G. 2, c. 38, upon complaint of the overseers of a parish against the late overseer, for refusing and neglecting to deliver over to them a certain book belonging to the parish, called The Bastardy Ledger, convicting him of the said offence, and adjudging that he should be committed to the common gaol, to be safely kept until he should have yielded up all and every the books concerning his said office of overseer belonging to the parish, was held void as to the adjudication respecting the imprisonment, for excess, the same extending beyond what was previously required of the person convicted; and a warrant of commitment founded on this conviction, and directing the gaoler to keep him in the terms

Peppercorn, after some objection, subscribed with Wood a declaration that they believed it to be correct; but on passing the account at special sessions, Peppercorn refused to swear to its accuracy, saying that he knew nothing of it except having examined the vouchers; and it was passed on the oath of Wood only. A balance remained unpaid to the parish. Held, that the signature of Peppercorn was not an adoption of his colleague's acts during the latter half-year; and therefore (Parke, J. dubitante,) that Wood could not be considered as Peppercorn's agent during that half-year; but that at all events a distress could not issue against Peppercorn, the precise arrear during that period not being ascertained.

The Mayor v. Churchwardens of Northampton, Carth. 152; 1 Bott, 309. The mayor of Northampton committed the churchwardens, as overseers of the poor, for refusing to account: and the warrant of commitment concluded, until they be duly discharged according to law. The court held the commitment void; because the warrant ought to conclude, there to remain until they should account, as the statute doth appoint. And the difference is, where a man is committed as a criminal, and where only for contumacy: for in the first case, the commitment must be until discharged according to law; but in the latter, until he comply and perform the thing required; for in that case he shall not lie till a sessions, but shall be discharged upon performance of his duty. (See Goff's case, 3 M. & Sel. 203, ante, 243.)

Rex v. Clapham, 1 Wils. 305; 1 Bott, 301. A mandamus was granted to oblige the old overseer of the poor to deliver over the books of the poor rates to the new overseer; for, by the court, they are public books, and ought to be delivered over by one overseer to another, that all the parishioners may have access to them, and the overseer and churchwarden for the time being ought to have the custody thereof.

Groome v. Forrester, 5 M. & Sel. 314. And see Ex parte Leake, 9 Bar. & Cres. 234; and ante. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This was a motion to set aside a verdict against the defendants, justices of the peace for the town and liberties of Wenlock, in the county of Salop, in an action for false imprisonment. The imprisonment complained of was the commitment of the plaintiff to the common gaol at Shrewsbury, under the warrant of the defendants as magistrates, founded upon a conviction of the plaintiff as late overseer of the parish of Brosely, in that county; which conviction was had before the defendants, under the 17 Geo. II. c. 38, against the plaintiff, for not delivering over to the succeeding overseers of the parish a certain book belonging to the parish, called the Bastardy Ledger, in breach of his duty under that statute, which required him to deliver over all such sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things, as should be in his hands, to such succeeding overseers. In case of his refusal or neglect so to do, the statute (s. 2,) authorizes two or more justices of the peace to commit him to the common gaol, until he shall have paid and yielded up such monies, goods, chattels, and other things in his hands. The conviction, as far as relates to the withholding of the particular book in question, the offence charged in the information, is correct. After finding him guilty thereof, it proceeds to adjudge that Thomas Groome (the plaintiff and late overseer) for his offence aforesaid, (that is, in not delivering over the particular book, The Bastardy Ledger,) be forthwith committed to the common gaol at Shrewsbury, to be safely kept 'until he shall have yielded up all and every the books concerning his said office of overseer, belonging to the said parish.' This is the adjudication; and the warrant of commitment follows the adjudication, and of course directed the gaoler to keep Groome until he should have yielded up all and every the books concerning his office of overseer; thereby, in effect, casting upon the gaoler the function of inquiring and determining what were 'all and every the books concerning the office of overseer,' upon the yielding up of which the gaoler was to discharge his prisoner, instead of requiring the gaoler to detain his prisoner (as it should have done) until he should have yielded up the particular book specified and described in the information, and for the non-delivery of which he was convicted. Such a commitment was certainly not authorized either by the letter or the spirit of the act of parliament, and subjected the prisoner to the risk of an imprisonment for an indefinite period, viz. until he had complied with a condition of greater extent than was imposed by the act of parliament; and where the gaoler who should have to detain him under the warrant had no adequate means of judging whether his prisoner should have, in fact, complied with the terms of such condition, and, of course, whether he was entitled to his discharge or not. This, it will be observed, is a conviction and commitment on the ground of a supposed contumacy; but the defendant could have been guilty of no contumacy in respect of the non-delivery of any other book or thing than that book which alone he had been required to deliver, viz. The Bastardy Ledger. The conviction and commitment, therefore, in respect of a supposed contumacy to any greater extent than that in which obedience had been previously required from him, must of course be unfounded. Previously to commitment for refusing to do a thing, there must have been a charge and proof, and the party cannot be committed 'until he does something,' which is not charged and proved upon him that he has previously refused to do. Assuming that the warrant is in this respect illegal and void, the question is, whether it be therefore void in toto; and if it be, whether the defendants, as committing magistrates, are liable to an action of trespass and false imprisonment for having committed the plaintiff thereupon. And that it is void in toto, the case of Milward v. Coffin, 2 Bl. R. 1331, is an authority; there Gould, J., in the absence of De Grey, C. J., said, 'It is fairly and candidly conceded, that if one of the rates be illegal, the whole warrant is bad; and I take the first to be illegal, for assessing the plaintiff beyond the extent of his occupation. All that related to the assessment of lands, not in the occupation of the plaintiff, was coram non judice; the justices therein exceeded their jurisdiction, and their determination is a nullity.' In 2 Inst. 52, there are to be found several good rules in respect to commitments: the fifth of which is, 'The warrant or mittimus, containing a lawful cause, ought to have a lawful conclusion, viz. and him safely to keep until he be delivered by law, &c. and not until the party committing doth further order.' Likewise, in 2 Inst. 591, there is a further rule: 'Now as the mittimus must contain the cause, so the conclusion must be according to law, viz. the prisoner safely to keep, until he be delivered by due order of law, and not until he that made it shall give other order, or the like.' The case of The Mayor and Churchwardens of Northampton, (ante, 250,) is a leading case upon the proper form of conclusion of a commitment until a particular act should be done by the party committed. Bracy's case is an authority to the same effect; it is reported in 5 Mod. 308; 1 Salk. 348; 1 Lord Raym. 99; also in the margin of Carthew, 153, from which I cite it. One Bracy was committed by commissioners of the statute of bankrupts for refusing to answer; and they concluded their warrant, that he be committed to prison, there to remain 'until he conform himself to our authority, and be thence delivered by due course of law;' and upon the return of a habeas corpus he was discharged, because this conclusion was not pursuant to the statute of bankrupts; and the Mayor of Northampton's case was cited for an authority. In Lord Raymond's report it is laid down, that if he had been committed 'until he should conform to their authority,' in the special matter, it had been good. And of that opinion was Lord Holt; and he said, that the word 'submit,' (which is the word in the statute, and not 'conform') does not mean an act of humble submission, but only to make answer to the question proposed." In Salkeld's report, the court held the word 'conform,' instead of the word 'submit,' to be well enough, because it was of the same sense; but because the commissioners had other authorities besides that of examining, and it did not appear but that it might require a submission to them in other respects, and for that all powers given in restraint of liberty must be strictly pursued, and in this case they had but a special authority, and must not exceed it, they held the return naught. Yaxley's case, Carth. 291, was 'a commitment by the secretary of state, under the stat. 35 Eliz. for refusing to answer whether he was a Jesuit, &c. and on a habeas corpus he prayed to be bailed. The exception to the commitment was, that the conclusion thereof was of the adjudication, was also holden void in toto, for which trespass and false imprisonment would lie against the justices, although the conviction had not been quashed.

4. Delivering over Balance, Books, Chat-tels, &c.

'there to remain until he shall be from thence discharged by due course of law,' when the words of the statute are 'until he shall answer unto the questions;' and therefore the commitment ought to be special, according to the statute; and the Churchwardens of Northampton's case was cited and relied on; and for that objection the court held the commitment ill.' Other cases might be cited to the same effect, such as Rex v. Hall, Cowp. 60. The foregoing cases are cases of discharge from commitment, on the ground of an illegality apparent on the face of the warrant. The two following cases, Baldwin and Wife v. Blackmore, 1 Burr. 595, and Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640, establish that in such case, that is, of warrants illegal upon the face of them, for an excess of jurisdiction in the magistrate, trespass is maintainable against the committing magistrate; and this was held in the latter case, although the conviction had not been quashed. In Baldwin and Wife v. Blackmore a warrant to commit the wife, as an idle and disorderly person, for returning with her husband to the parish from whence removed, without a certificate, was holden to be void, and that trespass lay for the imprisonment under it. So, where the warrant ought to be to imprison for a month, and it is until discharged by due course of law. Crepps v. Durden, Cowp. 640, was a conviction in four penalties, for exercising his ordinary calling of a baker on a Sunday. As there can be but one offence on the same day, it was held an excess of jurisdiction, for which an action would lie before the convictions were quashed. There the question immediately before the court was, whether an objection could be made to the legality of a conviction before it was quashed, and it was held that it might. Upon these authorities, and the reason of the thing, we are obliged to pronounce that the commitment made in pursuance of the said adjudication in this case, as well as the adjudication itself, in respect to the imprisonment, being, in this particular, a clear excess of jurisdiction, was not warranted by law, and that the imprisonment thereunder was a trespass in the committing magistrates, for which this action is maintainable: which we cannot but regret, as the facts of the case would have authorized a commitment if the warrant had been framed in a manner conformable to the powers of the magistrates under the statute. The consequence is, that the rule nisi for setting aside the verdict must be discharged."

The court of K. B. will not, upon removal of an order of sessions allowing overseers' accounts, which is good upon the face of it, go into the merits of those accounts upon affidavit.

Rex v. James, 2 M. & Sel. 321. A rule was obtained for quashing an order of sessions, allowing the accounts of the overseers of Croydon. The order of sessions was upon the face of it generally, allowing the said accounts and dismissing the appeal, and further ordering that the appellants should pay to the overseers 40s. costs. The defendants, in their affidavit, stated that these accounts contained charges of sums in gross as monthly payments, without stating the items, some of which items were stated to be for charges illegal or excessive; that they contained a charge for a salary to one of the overseers, &c. And now the rule coming on, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. interposed by enquiring if there was any objection to the order upon the face of it, for otherwise the court would not go into the overseer's accounts upon affidavit. The sessions was the proper forum for deciding such matters: the time of the court would otherwise be absorbed in taking parish accounts. But it was urged that great injustice might be done if there was no relief against accounts so made up as the present, without specifying any particulars; and Rex v. Battel, a recent case, was cited, where the court had granted relief against the overseers' accounts, upon a rule obtained upon affidavit that they contained a charge for an allowance paid to the overseer. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "If there is likely to be a defect of justice, the remedy must be by application to the legislature; for the court cannot enlarge the limits of its jurisdiction in order to supply a remedy; the sessions have jurisdiction over these matters; if, on the removal of the record by certiorari, it had appeared to be erroneous, this court would then have acted upon it." Rule discharged.

The reporters presume the case of Rex v. Glyde (ante, 246), to be that alluded to in argument in the above case under the title of Rex v. Battel, which is printed by them in a note to the above case, and is stated to have been decided in Hilary term, 1813. The rule for the certiorari was obtained upon an affidavit as above stated, but the case, as it appears, was decided upon objections apparent on the face of the order.

5. Appeals relating to Overseers' Accounts.

The grounds of appeal must be stated in the notice, as in the case of an appeal against a poor rate. See 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, ante, 229.

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6, enacts, "that if any person shall find himself aggrieved by any act done by the said overseers or justices, he may appeal to the general or quarter sessions, whose order therein shall bind all parties.

And by 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, "if any person shall have any material objection to such account, or any part thereof, he may, giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens and overseers, appeal to the next sessions; but if reasonable notice was not given, then they shall adjourn the appeal to the next sessions; and the court may order and award to the party for whom the appeal shall be determined, reasonable costs, as in cases of settlement by 8 and 9 Will. III. c. 30." See the other part of this section, ante, 218.

And by s. 5, in all corporations or franchises, which have not four justices, persons aggrieved may appeal, if they think fit, to the next county sessions. See 1 Geo. IV. c. 36; ante, 216.

The decisions respecting appeals against poor rates will be found applicable in most cases when questions as to notice, the time of appealing, &c. arise upon appeals against overseers' accounts. See ante, 214 to 228.

It may be expedient to repeat, that if the management of the parish poor be vested in the churchwardens, overseers, governors, and directors by a local act, which also gives an appeal to the body so constituted to any person aggrieved by any thing done under the act, and a subsequent appeal to the quarter sessions against their determination, if he is dissatisfied with it, this course of proceeding must be strictly pursued. See Rex v. Justices of Kent, 9 B. & C. 283, ante.

5. Appeals relating to overseers' accounts.

Appeal against the account, must be to the next sessions.

Corporations, &c.

Where it is provided that appeals shall be first made to and determined by the governing body named in a local act, that course must be followed.

Upon an appeal against an overseer's accounts, it appeared that the appellant was a co-overseer, appointed with respondent contemporaneously, and it was objected that the appellant being a joint overseer with the respondent, he was, in effect, appealing against his own accounts. The sessions yielded to this objection and dismissed the appeal. Upon a rule for a mandamus, it was contended that the sessions had heard and determined the case, as they had examined a witness, quashed the appeal, and given costs to the respondent; and, although they might have come to a wrong conclusion, yet, as they had decided the question, the mandamus ought not to be granted. But the court said, "that it was clear the justices had dismissed the appeal, not upon the merits, but because they thought they had no jurisdiction, which was a question of law; and if they were mistaken in that the mandamus ought to go." It was then contended that one overseer could not appeal against the accounts of the other; that, although there were several individuals, their duties were not several, both having the same authority, and the same liabilities in the management of the poor. The court, however, were of opinion that the rule ought to be made absolute, and observed, that in this case it appeared each overseer kept a separate account; and it was clear each overseer may act by himself, and make separate disbursements, against which the other would have a right to appeal. It might happen, that one overseer might have grounds for appealing against the accounts of his colleague, which would be unknown to other persons. Besides, his being an overseer does not take away his right, as a parishioner, to appeal against the accounts of the other. The words of the act fully bear out this interpretation; and it is obviously for the benefit and protection of parishes that it should be so acted upon whenever a proper occasion presents itself. Rex v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, 1 B. & Adol. 1.

An overseer may appeal against his co-overseer's accounts.

Rex v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 5 M. & S. 457. The overseers' accounts of the parish of Elmley Lovett, for the years 1814 and 1815, were counts must be to the next general quarter sessions after the allowance of the accounts. The 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4, in this respect limits the right of appeal given generally by 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 6.

Accounts must appear to have been allowed by the justices before the appeal.

Where overseers' accounts were not allowed till the last day that an effectual notice of appeal to the next sessions could have been given, and it did not appear when the party objecting had notice of such allowance: Held, that a notice of appeal to the next subsequent sessions for which an effectual notice of appeal could be given was good.

allowed by two justices on the 31st March, 1815. Notice of appeal against the same was given for the sessions to be holden on the 23d of April, 1816, at which sessions an appeal was entered; but the court refused to enter upon the merits, or to hear the appeal, on the ground that it came too late. And the question was, whether the appeal ought to have been to the general quarter sessions next after the allowance of the accounts? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "In Rex v. Coode, Cald. 464, the case of Rex v. Lord Ashburnham was brought under the consideration of the court, and yet they came to a decision directly contrary to it; and where good sense and convenience are all on one side, one is almost led to regret that Serjt. Kerby's note of that case ever got into print. The plain meaning of the 17 Geo. II. in enacting 'that it shall be lawful to appeal to the next sessions,' where by a pre-existing act the appeal was without limitation of time, is to negative the power of appealing to any but the next. In Rex v. Coode, Lord Mansfield was of opinion that the 17 Geo. II. did confine the appeal, and the court agreed that they must decide that the statute had repealed the 43 Eliz. in this particular. I feel no inclination to disturb that decision, considering how much the public convenience is in its favour. I know not to what difficulties persons whose property is liable, and those who are bound to account, might be reduced, if we were to adopt a different construction. With respect to the objection, that the time may be too short to prepare for the appeal, if, upon any occasion, this should be made appear, the appeal may be lodged, and adjourned on a proper application." Bayley, J. "I think that the affirmative words of the 17 Geo. II. must be taken to imply a negative. If the statute had been silent as to the time of appeal, the 43 Eliz. would have attached; and it would have been open to the party to appeal at any time. But as the statute empowers the party to appeal to the next sessions, I think it virtually implies that he must appeal to those sessions, and to no other." Abbott, J. "I agree that this rule must be discharged. The construction put on these statutes by my Lord and my brother Bayley appears to be the true construction, conformably to the rule for the construction of acts of parliament so well laid down in the old cases, and adopted in Rex v. Coode." (a)

Rex v. Bartlett, 2 Str. 983. An order made at the sessions relating to accounts of overseers was moved to be quashed, because it did not appear that the accounts had been before the justices out of sessions, and they cannot come per saltum to the sessions. On the other side it was said that it appeared there was an allowance, for the appeal is said to be against the disbursements and the allowance thereof, which the court will presume was regular. But by the court: "It doth not follow that this was an allowance by two justices, for the parish might do it; and therefore, for want of jurisdiction, this order must be quashed."

Rex v. Justices of Dorsetshire, 15 East, 200. Soon after the 17th of May, 1811, when the respondents ceased to be overseers, the account of Goddard's, one of the respondents, receipts and payments as overseer, was submitted to the magistrates of the borough of Shaftsbury for their allowance, when Bowles objected to certain items, and stated, that if they were allowed, he should appeal against the allowance; and thereupon the justices refused the allowance of the said account, but did not strike out the items objected to, alleging that the stat. 50 Geo. III. c. 49, was not imperative upon them, but only authorized them to examine the accounts of overseers if they thought proper. On the 8th of July, and not before, the account was verified on the oath of Goddard before two magistrates of the borough, and by them allowed; and the said 8th of July was the last day permitted by the practice of the sessions for giving notice of appeals to the then next sessions, which were holden in the same month of July: and the items objected to still remaining in the account, Bowles gave notice of appeal against such account and allowance to the next subsequent sessions holden on the 8th of October, at which sessions, the justices, conceiving that the deponent ought to have appealed at the former sessions, dismissed the appeal. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It seems to the court that in every view of the case the mandamus should go, whether this be a proceeding under the 43 Eliz. or under the 17 Geo. II.; for supposing it to be under the 17 Geo. II. and supposing that statute in this respect to have repealed the 43 Eliz. (which from the cases cited seems by no means to be settled,) still under the circumstances of this case, we think the July sessions could not be considered the next sessions for the purpose of appealing; for the allowance by the justices was on the 8th of July, the last day when any effectual notice of appeal could have been given; and it does not appear when the appellant had any notice of such allowance; and the transaction seems to carry with it the marks of design to defeat the appeal." Mandamus granted.

Rex v. Thackwell, 4 B. & C. 62; 6 D. & R. 61; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 337. In this case the overseers of Monmouth went out of office on the 25th March. Their accounts were allowed by three justices on the 27th. On the 7th April the next quarter sessions were held at Usk, thirteen miles from Monmouth. On the same day, at two o'clock, when it was too late to enter an appeal, they delivered their accounts, allowed as aforesaid, to their successors. At the following (Midsummer) sessions an appeal against the allowance of the accounts was entered, and respite, although the respite was objected to by the respondents; and at the Michaelmas sessions the order for the allowance was quashed. Abbott, C. J. "It is quite clear that, under the circumstances of this case, the parties were not bound to appeal at the Easter sessions, and at the Midsummer, it was for the justices and not for us to decide whether it would be proper to respite the appeal to Michaelmas." Order of sessions confirmed.

In Rex v. Gwyer, 4 Nev. & M. 158; 2 Adol. & Ell. 216 (ante, 245), it was contended that the appellant, not having been a rated parishioner during the whole of the year, could not appeal against such parts of the accounts as related to the expenditure before that period for which he was rated. But the court decided that he might appeal against the whole account, because he had an interest in all the money that came to the hands of the overseer. As the surplus of that money was reduced, the subsequent assessments upon him would be probably greater in proportion; and, therefore, if there was an illegal application of the fund, he is not precluded from objecting to it.

The 50 Geo. III. c. 49, s. 2, provides "That if such churchwardens or overseers, or any of them, shall feel themselves, himself, or herself aggrieved by the disallowance or reduction of any such charges or payments, and be desirous of appealing against any order in that respect made by any such two or more justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for him, her, or them, to enter an appeal against such order at the next general or quarter sessions to be holden next after the tenth day for the making of such order, he, she, or they having first paid or delivered over to the succeeding churchwardens and overseers such sum and sums of money, goods, chattels, and other things as on the face of the account which shall have been submitted by him, her, or them to such two or more justices in manner aforesaid shall appear and be admitted to be due and owing from him, her, or them, or remaining in his, her, or their hands, and having also entered into a recognizance before one or more such justice or justices with two sufficient securities to be approved of by such justice or justices before whom such recognizance shall be acknowledged, in not less than double the sum or value in dispute, to enter such appeal at such next general or quarter sessions, and abide by such order as shall at that or any subsequent sessions be made on such appeal; and it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace assembled at such general or quarter sessions, on proof of the matters aforesaid, and on the production of such recognizance and proof of the same having been duly entered into, to adjourn such appeal if they shall see occasion, or to hear the same, and to examine into and to confirm or reverse such disallowance or reduction in the whole or in part, as to such justices at such sessions shall seem just; and in any such case the said justices at such sessions may (if they shall think fit) make an order that such churchwardens and overseers shall have the costs by them incurred upon any such appeal defrayed out of the poor rates of the parish or place; and the order of the general

Sect. 3 provides "That nothing herein contained shall take away or be construed to take away any power of appeal against any such account, by any other person entitled to appeal against the same by virtue of the said recited acts or either of them."

Sect. 4 enacts "That every mayor, bailiff, or other head officer of every town or place corporate and city in Great Britain, or any two magistrates of such town or place corporate or city, being justice or justices of peace respectively, shall have the same authority by virtue of this act within the limits and precincts of their jurisdictions as is by this act limited, prescribed, or appointed to justices of the peace of the county, or any two or more of them for the execution of this act; subject nevertheless to an appeal to the general or quarter sessions in every such town or place corporate or city respectively as aforesaid: provided always, that in any town or place corporate or city where there are not four justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, where an appeal is given by this act, to appeal, if he or they shall think fit, to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace for the county, riding, or division wherein such town or place corporate or city is situate."

Sect. 5 enacts "That no certiorari shall be granted to remove any order or proceeding of any general or quarter sessions, or of any justices, made or had under this act, into any superior court of record; but that all orders and proceedings of such sessions, and all orders and proceedings of such justices (subject to such appeal as aforesaid) under this act shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes."

Sect. 6 provides "That nothing in this act contained shall extend or apply, or be construed to extend or apply to the accounts of any churchwarden or overseer of the poor in any parish or place where by the provisions of any act or acts relating to the poor of such parish or place, or by the construction of any such act or acts, such churchwardens and overseers are exempted from the rendering the accounts required by the hereinbefore recited acts of the 43d year of the reign of her late majesty Queen Elizabeth, and of the 17th year of the reign of his late majesty King George II. or either of them; any thing hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided also that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to the city of London."

Sect. 7 provides also "That nothing in this act contained shall alter or repeal any of the provisions or regulations contained in the said recited acts of the 43d year of the reign of her late majesty Queen Elizabeth, and of the 17th year of the reign of his late majesty King George II. or either of them, other than and except only such provisions or regulations as are expressly mentioned in this act, and so far as the same are expressly amended or altered by this act."

It will be perceived that s. 5 (supra), prevents the orders and proceedings of justices from being removed by certiorari into the King's Bench, and makes the decision of the sessions final; but this only applies to appeals brought by churchwardens and overseers against the disallowance of any items in their accounts by the magistrates, leaving appeals by other persons as they stood under the prior act, 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 4. Rex v. Bird and others, 2 B. & A. 522.

Notice of Appeal.

Notice of appeal.

The 41 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 4 (which see ante, 219), prescribes that the notice shall be in writing, and shall specify the particular causes or grounds of appeal. The following decisions have taken place upon this enactment.

(a) See form of notice of appeal against overseers' accounts, post, Appendix.

A notice of appeal against the allowance of overseers' accounts, which is merely general, stating that the different items, enumerating all of them, will be objected to, without stating the particular cause or ground upon which any one was objected to, is clearly insufficient. The sessions overruled the objection, but reserved a case on the point; and the court quashed the order, on the ground that the notice was not sufficient. (Rex v. Mayall, 3 D. & R. 383; and 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 88.)

Rex v. Sheard, 2 B. & C. 856; 4 D. & R. 480; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 261. By the notice of appeal, the appellant objected to thirty-five items in the accounts specified in the notice, and set out the names of the persons on whose account the payments were made, the sums paid, and in some instances the purposes for which they were made; it also stated that the appellant would insist upon the appeal that all these items ought to be struck out of the accounts and disallowed. On the day before the appeal came on to be heard, the attorney for the respondents and the attorney for the appellant entered into the following admissions: "We do agree to admit that all the payments charged in the accounts of the respondents to which the appellant objects, were actually made to or for the use of the several persons to whom the same are charged to have been paid, and that the several sums charged in such accounts to have been paid to three several persons (named in the notice of appeal) respectively, were for debts contracted by the overseers in one or more years previous to the year in which the respondents were overseers, and were not contracted by the respondents for the service of their current year, and the respondents undertake to produce upon the hearing of the appeal the original accounts and vouchers regarding the items and sums of money objected to by the appellant. The sessions considered the admissions as a waiver of the objections to it, and entered into the merits of the said appeal, but granted a case. Bayley, J. delivered the judgment: "The 41 Geo. III. c. 23, requires one of two things, either notice in writing stating and specifying the particular causes or grounds of appeal; or secondly, consent by the overseers, to be signified by them or their attorney in open court, that the sessions may proceed, though there has been no proper notice. The notice in writing is to be signed by the party giving it, or his attorney, and to be left at the place of abode of the officers; and the sessions are not to examine into any other cause or ground of appeal than those which the notice specifies. Two questions therefore arise, has there been such a notice as the statute requires? Has there been such a waiver? In this case the original notice which was served eleven days before the commencement of the sessions, merely stated that the appellant would object to thirty-five items or charges of payment, which he specified. On what grounds he would object he did not state. The day after the sessions commenced, being the day before their adjournment day, the attornies for the appellant and respondents agreed to admit that all the payments objected to were in fact made, but that three of them were for debts contracted in prior years, not for debts contracted for the service of the year to which the accounts referred, and the respondents agreed to produce the original accounts and vouchers regarding the items objected to. The sessions expressed no opinion as to the notice, but thought these admissions a waiver of all objections to it. As to the waiver, the statute expressly provides that the sessions shall not examine or enquire into any ground of appeal not specified in the notice, with this single exception only, of consent by the overseers, signified by them or their attorney in open court: and we think that the statute has excluded, and intended to exclude, all questions of waiver in any other way, and that as there was no such consent as the statute requires, we cannot enter into the question of any other species of waiver. Then can it be said that this notice states and specifies the particular causes and grounds of appeal? It states only that the appellant will object to thirty-five items or charges of payment; but why? It may be because they are false items that they have not been paid; it may be, because they ought not to have been paid; it may be, though paid, and rightly paid, they ought not to be brought in charge against the parish, but ought to be borne personally by the overseers. And

Where the notice is insufficient.

A notice of appeal against overseers' accounts, stated that the appellant objected to certain specified payments, alleged in the accounts to have been made to persons specified by name in the notice: Held, that the notice was bad, because it did not state the cause and ground of appeal. The attornies, some days before the appeal was tried, agreed to admit that the sums objected to were paid to the persons alleged: Held, that this was not any waiver of the irregularity in the notice.

where a notice is general, and leaves it uncertain upon which of several possible grounds of objection an item is questioned, can we say that it states and specifies a particular ground? We think not. Then will the admissions supply the defect in this notice, not as a waiver, but as making it a good notice in itself? The statute prescribes no form of notice; it specifies no time within which it shall be delivered; and its only object being that the respondents may know distinctly what objections they are prepared to meet; and so long as that knowledge is fairly communicated to them in writing, it may be thought that the mode in which it is communicated is immaterial. But it can never be supposed that the respondents' attorney meant, by entering into these admissions, to waive any other objections, which would otherwise have been open to him; his authority would be to uphold the rights of the respondents, not to give them up; and where the statute requires notice in writing to be left at the place of abode of the persons on whom it is to be served, we think we ought not, except upon very clear grounds, to allow it to be dispensed with." Order of sessions quashed.

It is not necessary to state in the notice that the appellant is a party aggrieved or a parishioner.

A notice of appeal against overseers' accounts, merely stating that the party intended to try his appeal against the accounts, on the grounds and for the reasons thereafter set forth, and then specifying the items against which he intended to appeal, and the objection he intended to make against each item, was held to be sufficient, although it was not stated that the party intending to appeal was a rated inhabitant of the parish, or a party aggrieved. The right of appeal given by 17 Geo II. c. 38, s. 4, against overseers' accounts, is not within the principle of the decisions upon the 55 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 3, relating to highways; for although the same language to a certain extent is found in both, yet the former statute, in addition to giving an appeal to the "party aggrieved," extends the right to "any person who shall have any material objection to the accounts." Lord Tenterden added, "If it should turn out that he is a mere stranger, the court of quarter sessions may refuse to hear him." (Rex v. Justices of Somersetshire, 7 B. & C. 681.)

What is a reasonable notice.

A clear week's notice is usually considered "reasonable," and will satisfy the statute unless by the practice of the particular sessions a longer notice is required, or there are peculiar circumstances in the case which may induce the justices to adjourn the appeal to the following sessions. (2 Nol. P. L. 525.)

Accounts and disbursements of overseers allowed.

Rex v. Justices of Norfolk, 2 B. & Ad. 944. An appeal was entered in the following form:—W. Rodgers, appellant, and The Churchwardens and Overseers of Brancaster, respondents. The appeal was respited, and notice was given, addressed to "J. A. and T. S. now or lately overseers," but not to the churchwardens, and no notice was given to them. The sessions refused to hear the appeal, because the notice varied from the entry, and because the churchwardens had had no notice. Upon a rule for a mandamus it appeared that J. A. and T. S. were the only parish officers who received and disbursed money during the year of the accounts, and that the accounts were passed by them only, and were entered in their names only, as overseers, no mention being made of the churchwardens. It was held, that though the appeal was formally entered as an appeal against the accounts of the churchwardens and overseers, yet it was evident to any one looking at the subject-matter of the appeal, that it was substantially an appeal against the accounts of the overseers, and to them notice was given: and it was also held, that as the accounts of several parish officers may be treated as several, where the money transactions have been separate, (and in the present case the churchwardens had in fact nothing to do with the account,) it would have been useless to serve the notice upon them; and that therefore there was no valid objection to the mode in which the notice was addressed and served. Mandamus issued.

OF RECOVERING POSSESSION OF PARISH HOUSES

THE 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 24, (a) recites "That difficulties have frequently arisen and considerable expenses have sometimes been incurred, by reason of the refusal of persons who have been permitted to occupy, or who have intruded themselves into parish or town houses, or other tenements or dwellings built or provided for the habitation of the poor, or otherwise belonging to such parishes, to deliver up the possession of such houses, tenements, or dwellings, when thereto required; and it is expedient to provide a remedy for the same;" and then enacts, "that if any person who shall have been permitted to occupy any parish or town house, or any other tenement or dwelling belonging to or provided by or at the charge of any parish, for the habitation of the poor thereof, or who shall have unlawfully intruded himself or herself into any such house, tenement, or dwelling, or into any house, tenement, or hereditament belonging to such parish, shall refuse or neglect to quit the same, and deliver up the possession thereof to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any such parish, within one month after notice and demand in writing for that purpose, signed by such churchwardens and overseers, or the major part of them, shall have been delivered to the person in possession, or in his or her absence affixed on some notorious part of the premises, it shall be lawful for any two (b) of his Majesty's justices of the peace, upon complaint to them made by one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish in which any such house, tenement, or dwelling shall be situated, to issue their summons to the person against whom such complaint shall be made, to appear before such justices at a time and place to be appointed by them, and to cause such summons to be delivered to the party against whom the complaint shall be made, or in his or her absence to be affixed on the premises, seven days at the least before the time appointed for hearing such complaint; and such justices are hereby empowered and required, upon the appearance of the defendant, or upon proof on oath that such summons hath been delivered or affixed as is hereby directed, to proceed to hear and determine the matter of such complaint; and if they shall find and adjudge the same to be true, then by warrant under their hands and seals to cause possession of the premises in question to be delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, or to some of them."

The statute was not intended to take away a right, which the owner of property had at common law, to enter and take possession, if it could be done peaceably, but to provide an expeditious mode whereby parish officers might obtain possession where it was obstinately withheld; and that they might not do that which had before been sometimes done, viz., might not turn occupiers out vi et armis, which led to further expense and litigation. Where, therefore, a pauper had been permitted to occupy a parish house, but having gone from home, leaving three children there, for whose support she received an allowance from the parish, the overseers on the second day afterwards entered, took the children to the workhouse and put locks upon the doors. She having returned in about ten days, and, by breaking the locks, resumed possession of the house, the overseers went there, and, upon her refusal to open the door, broke it open, and carried away the furniture, which belonged to the parish. In an action of trespass by her, it was held, that the overseers might lawfully enter and resume possession, without giving any notice to quit, and were not bound to pursue the mode pointed out by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 24. (Wildbore v. Rainforth, 2 Man. & R. 185; 8 B. & C. 4; and see Turner v. Meymott, 7 Moore, 574; 1 Bing. 158; Taunton & Costar, 7 Term Rep.; 1 Price Rep. 4.) (a)

The 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 17, enacts, That all buildings, lands, and tenements, purchased or hired by churchwardens and overseers for the purposes of the act, shall vest in the churchwardens and overseers for the time being "in the nature of a body corporate." And this act is not confined to lands held merely for the benefit of the poor, as appears from the following decision. Lord Tenterden, in delivering the judgment of the court, observed, "These were demises in the name of the parish officers, and the tenements were certainly held for parish purposes. The lessors of the plaintiffs contended, that the premises were vested in the parish officers by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12. The other side contended, that the statute was inapplicable for two reasons; —1. Because the persons in whom the legal estate was vested were trustees only; 2. Because the profits of the premises were applicable, not to the relief of the poor, but solely to those purposes for which a church rate was levied. As to the first of these objections, we are of opinion that there is nothing in the act to limit the right of persons under that act to those who fill the situation of parish officers, and it would be highly inconvenient to give the act so limited a construction. It is often difficult for persons who claim under an ancient trust, (where the trustees are numerous,) to show who was the survivor of those trustees; and even if they should succeed in ascertaining that fact, it will not be less difficult to show who is the heir-at-law of that survivor. Upon the second point, whether this act extends to tenements the profits of which are applicable to the purposes for which church rate is levied, or is confined to those which are applicable merely for the benefit of the poor, it is undoubtedly correct, as that the primary object of the act was directed to tenements of the latter description. But s. 17 goes in its terms much further. It uses the words, 'and also all others.' To these there is no limitation. We think, therefore, that the safest course will be to give full effect to that generality of expression, as nothing appears to show that that which is held for the benefit of the church does not, under these circumstances, require the assistance of this act, as well as that which is held for the benefit of the poor. In both cases, the difficulty is the same; and we see no reason to doubt that the operation of the act was intended to be co-extensive with the mischief. (Doe and Jackson v. Hiley, 10 B. & C. 885.)

and in pursuance of a justice's order, they levied satisfaction for a poor rate. It was objected, that demand should have been made of the perusal and copy of the justice's warrant, and six days' neglect or refusal, under stat. 24 Geo. II., and that it was a remedial act. The mischief was, that justices of the peace were often ensnared by surprise on some little inadvertency into which they had fallen, and the remedy given them was a power to rectify that inaccuracy or mistake; so as neither the person affected by it might suffer, nor the justice be vexatiously harassed. In order to this, notice is required by the statute, to give the party a power of tendering amends, bringing money into court, or pleading as he shall be advised. That constables and headboroughs are likewise, by the same act, not to be proceeded against, without demand and perusal of the warrant. That churchwardens and overseers of the poor are within the same reason, and therefore within the remedy, and comprehended under "other officers." By Lord Mansfield and the court: "They are clearly within the act of 24 Geo. II. The justice's warrant is the authority under which they act. To extend the benefit of the statute of 21 James, was the intent of the statute of 24 Geo. II., and all officers acting under a justice's warrant are included in it." Plaintiff was nonsuited.

A demand is necessary before an action can be maintained against overseers for the surplus arising from a distress for poor-rates. The 27 Geo. II. c. 20, s. 2, states, that the officer making the distress shall deduct the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling such distress, out of the money arising by the sale; and the overplus (if any) after such charges, and also the said penalty or sum of money shall be fully satisfied and paid, shall be returned on demand to the owner of the goods and chattels so distrained. And in this case, where a demand is necessary to give a right of action, the commencement of the action is not of itself a sufficient demand, nor does a tender of a sum, which the plaintiff at the time refused to accept, saying it was too late, but not claiming a larger sum, supply the place of a demand; there must be an express demand, or that which is equivalent to it. (Simpson v. Routh, 4 D. & R. 181; 2 B. & C. 682.)

Abuse of Office.

Remedies against abuse of office.

Punishable for neglect of duty.

The law very properly will not sanction overseers in refusing to receive and provide for a pauper sent to them by an order of justices, however satisfied they may be that such order cannot, upon being appealed against, be supported. For if this were permitted, the pauper might perish while his settlement was being disputed. It has therefore been held that overseers are indictable for not receiving a pauper sent to them by an order of justices. Rex v. Davies, 1 Bott, 378; S. C. cited and approved, 2 Burr. 803. And it appears that formerly, for very gross abuses in office, a criminal information might be obtained; but the Court came to the resolution, some time ago, to leave their official delinquencies, however flagrant, to the ordinary punishment by indictment. (Rex v. Slaughter, Cald. 247, note (a)). An overseer is not liable to any proceeding for neglecting to inoculate paupers so as to guard against the consequences. (Anon. 5 Nev. & Man. 12.)

In many instances penalties are inflicted, to be recovered by action, or levied on conviction by magistrates. See the enactments of 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2; 3 and 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 10; 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 1; 19 Geo. III. c. 37; 56 Geo. III. c. 139, s. 6; and more particularly 33 Geo. III. c. 55, s. 1, post, 263.

The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2, provides, that overseers absenting themselves without lawful cause from the monthly meeting therein enjoined, or being negligent in their office, shall forfeit for every default 20s. to the poor, to be levied by one of the churchwardens or overseers by warrant of two justices (one being of the quorum) by distress; or in default thereof, any two such justices may commit the offender to the common gaol, there to remain, without bail or mainprize, till the said forfeiture shall be paid.

But this penalty for not meeting in the church shall not be inflicted on overseers of extra-parochial places, because they have no church to meet in.

(8 Mod. 40.) Nor can an overseer be adjudged guilty of absenting himself from the meeting until he has had personal notice of his appointment. (Rex v. Harman, 1 Bott, 376; ante, p. 234, note.)

Of the powers, duties, &c.

If an overseer do not provide for the poor, he is indictable, post; and if he relieve the poor when there is no necessity for it, it is a misdemeanor. (Tawney's case, 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Poor, 415; 1 Bott, 371.)

Overseers indictable for not relieving poor.

By 17 Geo. II. c. 38, s. 14, it is enacted, "That if any churchwarden, overseer of the poor, or officer of any parish, township, or place, shall neglect or refuse to obey and perform the several orders and directions of this act or any of them, where no penalty is before provided by this act, or shall act contrary thereto; every such churchwarden, overseer of the poor, or other officer so offending in the premises, shall for every such offence, on oath thereof made, within two calendar months after the offence committed, before any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, forfeit for the use of the poor of such parish, township, or place, a sum not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 20*s.*, to be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant from such justices; which sum shall be paid to some churchwarden or overseer of the poor of such parish, township, or place, for the purpose aforesaid."

Penalty of 20*s.* and not exceeding 5*l.*

By 33 Geo. III. c. 55, s. 1, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful for any two or more of his Majesty's justices of the peace, assembled at any special or petty sessions of the peace, upon complaint being made upon oath before them of any neglect of duty, or of any disobedience of any lawful warrant or order of any justice or justices of the peace by any constable, overseer of the poor, or other peace or parish officer, or upon complaint made to such two or more justices upon oath, by or on the behalf of any apprentice to any trade or business whatsoever, whether bound apprentice by any parish or township or otherwise, provided that not more than the sum of 10*l.* be paid upon the binding of such apprentice, against his or her master or mistress, of any ill usage of such apprentice by such master or mistress (such constable, overseer, or other officer, master or mistress, having been duly summoned to appear and answer such charge or complaint), to impose upon conviction, any reasonable fine or fines, not exceeding the sum of 40*s.* upon such constable, overseer, or other officer, master or mistress respectively, as a punishment for such disobedience, neglect of duty, or ill usage, and by warrant under the hands and seals of any two or more of such justices assembled at any such special or petty sessions as aforesaid, to direct such fine or fines, if not paid, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the person or persons so offending, rendering the overplus (if any) after deducting the amount of such fine or fines, and the charges of such distress and sale, to such offenders; and such fine or fines which may be imposed upon any such constable, overseer, or other officer as aforesaid, shall be applied and disposed of for the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place, where the offenders shall respectively reside, at the discretion of the justices imposing the same; and such fine or fines, which may be imposed upon any such master or mistress, shall, at the discretion of the justices imposing the same, be either so applied and disposed of aforesaid, or be otherwise paid and applied to or for the use and benefit of such apprentice, for or towards a recompence or compensation for the injury which may have been by him or her sustained by reason of such ill usage as aforesaid; and if any person shall be aggrieved by the imposition of such fine or fines as aforesaid, or by any order or warrant of distress for raising and levying the same, or by the judgment or determination of the said justices, or by any act to be done in the execution of such warrant of distress, such person or persons so aggrieved shall and may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace to be held for the county, riding, or division, within which such person shall reside, of which appeal ten days' notice at the least shall be given; and for want of such distress, such person or persons shall be committed to the house of correction for any space of time not exceeding ten days."

Punishment for neglect of duty, or disobedience of order of justices.

Sect. 2 provides that no person acting under any such warrant of distress shall be deemed a trespasser ab initio, by reason of any irregularity in such warrant or proceedings thereupon.

*Of the powers,
duties, &c.*

Contracts of
overseers.

Any person who thinks himself aggrieved may appeal to the next sessions, upon giving ten days' notice thereof.

A penalty is imposed on overseers who neglect to publish the rules of commissioners, 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 18.

And by 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 12, in all actions to be brought in the courts at Westminster, or at the assizes, for the recovery of any sum mis-spent or taken to their own use by the churchwardens or overseers, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be admitted.

The overseers are liable, like all other persons, upon their contracts, express or implied, for necessities furnished to the use of the poor or otherwise, in the common action of assumpsit; and they are liable in damages for acts done by them without authority or in abuse of their office. (See Simmons v. Wilmot, 3 Esp. Rep. 92; Lamb v. Bunce, 4 M. & S. 275.) An overseer proceeding through all the stages of an expensive suit, without the concurrence of the vestry, is personally liable. (Rex v. Micklefield, Cald. 507, ante.)

Overseers not to be concerned in Contracts relating to the Poor.

Persons having the management of the poor not to be concerned in contracts, &c. whilst in office. (a)

The overseers of one parish may give a bond of indemnity to the overseers of another parish against costs, charges, and expenses which may be incurred by reason of a pauper of one parish becoming apprentice to a resident in the other. (Hill v. Eastaff, 6 B. 170.)

One overseer is not liable for the other's voluntary contract. (Rex v. Justices of Gloucester, 1 B. & Adol. 2, per Parke J.) But where a joint duty is imposed they may be so. (Rex v. Essex, 3 B. & Adol. 941; and see Eden v. Titchmarsh, 3 Nev. & M. 712.)

The 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, (a) enacts, "That from and after the twenty-fifth day of March next after the passing of this act, no churchwarden or overseer of the poor, or other person or persons in whose hands the collection of the rates for the relief of the poor, or the providing for, ordering, management, control, or direction of the poor of any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, shall or may be placed jointly with or independent of such churchwardens and overseers, or any of them, under or by virtue of any act or acts of parliament, shall, either in his own name, or in the name of any other person or persons, provide, furnish or supply for his or their own profit, any goods, materials or provisions, for the use of any workhouse or workhouses, or otherwise, for the support and maintenance of the poor, in any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, for which he or they shall be appointed as such, during the time which he or they shall retain such appointment; nor shall be concerned, directly or indirectly, in furnishing or supplying the same, or in any contract or contracts relating thereto, under pain of forfeiting one hundred pounds, with full costs of suit, to any person or persons who shall sue for the same by action of debt, or on the case, in any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster; in which action or actions no essoign, protection, wager of law, or more than one imparlance shall be allowed: provided nevertheless, that if it shall happen in any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, that a person or persons competent and willing to undertake the supply of any of the articles or things required for such workhouse or workhouses, or for the use of the poor there, cannot be found within a convenient distance therefrom, other than and except some or one of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or other person or persons having the ordering, managing, controul or direction of certain cases.

(a) See the statutes and notes of decisions, 1 Chitty's Col. Stat. 840. An assistant overseer is within this act, (Bennett v. Edwards, 1 Man. & R. 482; 7 B. & C. 586; 6 Bing. 230; 3 Young &

J. 464. S. C.) A parishioner, ipso facto a guardian of the poor, though he do not act as such, is within the act. (Stanley v. Dodd, 1 D. & Ryl. 397.)

the poor, in such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful to and for any two or more neighbouring justices of the peace (proof thereof having been first duly made before them upon oath, and which oath such justices or any one of them are and is hereby authorized and empowered to administer) by certificate under their hands and seals, to permit and suffer any one or more of such churchwardens and overseers, or other such person or persons as aforesaid, to contract and agree for the furnishing and supplying of any articles or things which may be required for such workhouse or workhouses, or otherwise, for the use of the poor of such parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places, during the time which he or they may retain such appointment; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding; and such certificate shall be entered with the clerk of the peace, or town clerk of the county, city, town or district, in which such person or persons shall reside, and a copy thereof left with him, for which entry every such clerk shall receive one shilling and no more; and, from that time, every person and persons named in any such certificate shall be discharged from any penalty to which he or they would otherwise be liable under this act, for furnishing or supplying any such article or things as aforesaid; and in case any action or suit for the recovery of any such penalty as aforesaid shall be commenced against any person or persons to whom such certificate shall have been granted as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for such person or persons to plead generally, that he or they was or were duly discharged from any liability to such forfeiture, by a certificate granted according to the provisions of this act; and upon due proof being given of such certificate, and of such entry thereof as aforesaid, the jury shall find a verdict for the defendant in such action or suit; and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuited, or discontinue his, her or their action, or if verdict shall pass against him, her or them, or if judgment shall be had against him, her or them, on demurrer, then the defendant or defendants in such action shall have double costs, and have such and the like remedy for the recovery of the same as any defendant or defendants have or hath for recovering costs of suit in any other cases by law."

*Of the powers,

The remedies and penalties of this act are extended to every commissioner, guardian, treasurer, master of the workhouse, and other officers appointed under 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 72. Several actions of debt for the penalty have been brought, and the following points decided under this statute.

Extended to officers appointed under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 72.

And by s. 77, it is enacted, "that no person filling any office concerned in the administration of the laws for the relief of the poor, shall supply, for his own profit or on his own account, any goods, materials or provisions ordered to be given in parochial relief, or in respect of the money ordered to be given in parochial relief to any person in such parish or union, under a penalty of five pounds, on conviction before two justices.

No person employed in administration of poor laws to furnish, for his own profit, goods or provisions given in parochial relief.

Several actions have been brought to recover penalties under 55 Geo. III. c. 137.

Proctor v. Mainwaring, 3 B. & Adol. 145. The defendant, an overseer, kept a chandler's shop, and paid the pauper her allowance on several occasions partly with goods from his shop and partly with money. The jury found that the pauper voluntarily took part in goods. Abbott, C. J. after remarking that this penal clause must not be extended to cases which may be suggested as falling within the mischief, added, "that this case was not within the statute. It would have been easy for the legislature, had they so intended it, to have said that it should not be lawful for an overseer to deliver to any pauper articles in lieu of money ordered for relief, but they have not so expressed themselves." Bayley, J. said, "The object of the act was to prevent imposition upon the parish by the overseers. If, therefore, goods are required for the parish workhouse, or if any other general supply for the poor is wanted, the overseer is not to furnish that supply; but it seems to me these are the only cases contemplated by the act. Where a pauper carries an order for relief to the overseer, he has a right to demand it in money; and, in case of refusal, has a speedy remedy, by complaint to the justice who made the order. If the conduct of Supply of goods to individual paupers not in the statute.

An overseer, a glazier, repairing a window of a workhouse, and supplying glass, is not liable to the penalty.

I. S. being the master of the workhouse appointed by, and receiving orders from, the guardians of the poor of the parish of W., bought provisions from A. B., one of such guardians: Held, that A. B. was liable to the penalty of 100*l.* imposed by statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, s. 6.

It is no defence that the articles were furnished at a fair market price.

A guardian of the poor appointed under 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, is within the 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, s. 6, notwith-the overseer in selling the articles be oppressive, the justice may punish him for it; but if the overseer be absolutely prohibited from selling, it might be a hardship upon the pauper. For there being no words distinguishing the case of money laid out by the pauper, after full payment by the overseer, from that of a payment partly in goods and partly in money, a pauper might be compelled, in case the overseer kept the only shop in the village where the articles were supplied, to go to a very inconvenient distance for the purpose of purchasing them from some one else." Holroyd, J. "However desirable it may perhaps be, to prevent the mischief attending such cases as the present, yet we cannot extend a penal statute so as to bring this case within it. The words of this statute appear to me applicable only to a general supply of the poor by the parish officers."

Barber v. Waite, 3 Nev. & M. 611; 1 Ad. & E. 514. This was an action for penalties against the defendant, a plumber, painter and glazier, who was also overseer of Boston, and while holding that office had repaired the windows of the workhouse. In so doing he supplied glass, lead pipe and paint, and was paid for it and his labour by the parish, and it was held that this was not within the statute. That the words "for the use of the workhouse," mean for the use of the persons in the workhouse. It was also observed, that the thing did come properly under the description of work and labour, and not of goods supplied; and that work and labour was not within the meaning of the act. In West v. Andrews, (infra), sheep were supplied, which came within the act, as they were provisions, though something remained to be done to make them fit for consumption. Coals also are within the act; and so is any thing in respect of which an action for goods sold would lie. In this case, it is true, glass, paint, and other things were supplied, but the contract was substantially for work and labour, and materials used in the course of it. If the defendant had declared in assumpsit for the repairs done by him, a count for goods sold would not have been applicable. Verdict for defendant.

West v. Andrews, 5 B. & Ald. 328. The defendant was one of the guardians of the poor, the poor-house was under their controul, being managed by one Griffiths, who was the master of the poor-house appointed by the guardians, and receiving his orders from them. Griffiths having a contract at so much per head, found all the meat, and he bought of the defendant, then being a guardian, four live sheep for the use of the poor, and paid him for them. Abbott, C. J. "Here the defendant has made a bargain for the supply of provisions with a third person, who has the contract for providing for the poor, and whom the defendant, in conjunction with others, appoints to his situation, and whose conduct it is his duty to superintend. Under these circumstances, it seems to me, that all the mischief which was contemplated by the legislature would arise, if we were to hold that it was lawful. I am therefore clearly of opinion, that the defendant's case falls both within the words and spirit of the act of parliament."

Pope v. Backhouse, 2 B. Moore, 186; 8 Taunt. 239, S. C. The defendant was a farmer, and had supplied corn and flour to some of the poor of the parish for which he was churchwarden, and the jury found that he sold it only at a fair market price; and it was contended, that to bring the case within the statute, it was necessary for the jury to find that the defendant sold at a profit. Gibbs, C. J. "It is to be presumed that a farmer does make a profit by selling the produce of his land at a fair market price. If a churchwarden or overseer purchase provisions at a certain price, and afterwards, in the event of a scarcity which presses on the poor, let them have them at that price, he would not come within the act; but if he should sell them to the poor as he would to other individuals, at the market price, and make a profit on them, he would be within the act. The defendant is certainly liable, and the verdict properly entered for the plaintiff." The rest of the court concurred.

West v. Andrews, 1 B. & C. 77; 2 D. & R. 184; 1 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 213, S. C. There were several counts in this action, but the third stated that the defendant was a person in whose hands the providing for, ordering, management, control, and direction of the poor of the parish of Westhampnett was placed, by virtue of certain acts of parliament, and that the goods were supplied for the use of the poor of the said parish. The defendant was guardian of the poor of the parish of Westhamprett. The poor of that parish, together with the poor of four parishes, were jointly maintained in a workhouse, but Westhamprett was regularly united according to the 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 43, with only one of those parishes. The provisions were supplied to the master of the workhouse, who bought of the defendant four sheep for the use of the poor, and paid him for them. The master of the workhouse had a contract for providing for the poor at so much a head, and found all the meat, &c. Abbott, C. J. "If the evidence given be sufficient to sustain any one count, there ought not to be a nonsuit entered. The first objection is, that this was provided for, and must fall under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 42. But if 53 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, does not extend to a case like the present, a great many words in it would be altogether insensible. For that clause speaks of persons having the providing for, ordering, management, control, or direction of the poor of any parish or parishes, township or townships, hamlet or hamlets, place or places. It therefore clearly extends to persons having the control of the poor in more parishes than one, and applies, as it seems to me, to the present case. The next objection is, that the character of the defendant is not properly described. He is described in the third count as a person in whose hands the providing for, ordering, management, control, and direction of the poor of the parish of Westhamprett was placed. How is that allegation sustained? It appears that under Gilbert's act, (22 Geo. III. c. 83,) where more parishes than one are united, every guardian of the poor appointed under that act, has, and is invested with, all the powers and authorities given to overseers of the poor by any act of parliament, and is to all intents and purposes, except with regard to the making and collecting rates, an overseer of the poor for the parish for which he is appointed guardian. If then this defendant was lawfully appointed guardian of the poor of Westhamprett, he is a person in whose hands was placed the control of the poor of that parish for which he was so appointed guardian. The objection, therefore, that his character is improperly described, cannot prevail. The last objection is, that in the third count the supply is stated to have been for the support and maintenance of the poor of the said parish; whereas by the proof it appears to have been for their support and maintenance in the workhouse, and it is urged that as the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, describes these as two distinct classes, the allegation should have strictly conformed to the proof. I am by no means satisfied that this objection, even if taken at nisi prius, could have prevailed. But I am clearly of opinion, that a mere formal objection of this sort, if not so taken, cannot be available afterwards. I think, therefore, that all the objections are insufficient." Bayley, J. "The 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6, seems to have been intended as a general provision, and the legislature could not have meant that there should be one rule for parishes united under 22 Geo. III. c. 83, and another in cases of parishes not so united. It may be true, that this case would have fallen under Gilbert's act, previously to 55 Geo. III.; but the latter statute, when passed, contained a general provision, within which this case, if not excepted, would fall. I can see no reason for any such exception being made, and in the absence of any express exception, it seems to me that no exception can be implied from Gilbert's act. I am also of opinion that a guardian appointed under 22 Geo. III. is clearly a person having the ordering, management, control and direction of the poor of the parish for which he is appointed, and that he falls under the provisions of the 55 Geo. III. The guardians have the power of recommending the master of the workhouse, and may make agreements with respect to the diet of the poor over which they are to exercise a strict control. It is the duty, therefore, of each of them to take care that wholesome food is supplied. Now all these objects will be defeated if the guardian, who is to inspect the conduct of the governor, supplies the workhouse with provisions. The case, therefore, is clearly within the mischief to be remedied. As to the objection that the declaration does not sufficiently describe the persons for whose care and support the goods were supplied, it seems to me that the allegation is substantially standing the former act, s. 42, imposes a penalty for the supply of the provisions for the poor by such guardian.

Where a count stated that A. B. supplied the poor of the parish of W. with provisions, and the evidence was, that he supplied the poor of the parish of W., and other parishes in a workhouse: held, first, that it was no variance, the proof being larger than the allegation.

Secondly, that the objection as to a variance between the allegation of a supply of the poor, and the proof of a supply of the poor, in the workhouse, not being taken at nisi prius, could not be afterwards available.

proved, for if a person supplies the poor of any parish, it is immaterial whether he supplies them in or out of the workhouse; and if he supplies a workhouse which contains the poor of the parishes, A., B., C., and D., he does in fact supply the poor of each of these parishes." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion. The 55 Geo. III. c. 137, is not confined to cases not falling under Gilbert's act. The words seem intended to include cases like the present, and we ought to give them a liberal construction, so as to remedy the mischief contemplated. It is contended that inasmuch as this defendant was only guardian of the poor, he was not charged with the maintenance of the poor of this particular parish, and that the allegation to that effect in the declaration is not proved. It appears, in fact, that he had a control over the maintenance of the poor of the parish. And as to the description of his character in the declaration, it is sufficiently proved by the evidence; for in pleading it is not necessary that the allegation should be as extensive as the proof. Where a prescription is pleaded for a right of common for sheep, and the proof is of a right for all commonable cattle, it is sufficient; (a) and so here the allegation is, that he had the ordering and direction of the poor of one parish, and the proof is, that he had the ordering and direction of the poor of that parish and others. As to the third objection, I agree with my Lord Chief Justice, that it not being taken at the trial, it cannot prevail now." Best, J. concurred.

Skinner v. Buckee, 3 B. & C. 6; 4 D. & R. 628; 2 D. & Ryl. Mag. Ca. 360, S. C. The defendant was a coal merchant, and overseer of the liberty of Saffron Hill, &c.; and during the time that he was overseer, coals were provided for the workhouse nominally by the brother-in-law of the defendant, but the latter had an interest in them. The jury found that the defendant did not send in the coals with a view of making a profit. Abbott, C. J. "The question in this case arises upon the construction of the 55 Geo. III. c. 137, s. 6; the words are, that 'no churchwarden or overseer of the poor, either in his own name, or in the name of any other person or persons, shall provide, furnish, or supply, for his or their own profit, any goods, materials, or provisions, for the use of any workhouse, or otherwise for the support or maintenance of the poor in any parish or place for which he shall be appointed such overseer, during the time which he shall retain such appointment; nor shall be concerned, directly or indirectly, in furnishing or supplying the same, or in any contract or contracts relating thereto, under the penalty of 100*l.* Now if the overseer himself in this case had supplied all the provisions required for the support of the poor at prime cost, and not with a view to his own profit, it is quite clear that he would not have committed any offence within the words of this part of the act of parliament: that was laid down by Gibbs, C. J. in Pope v. Backhouse (ante, 266). Inasmuch, therefore, as an overseer, providing in his own name the poor of his parish with all the provisions and goods required for their support, would not be liable to any penalty, provided he made no profit, it cannot be supposed that the legislature intended that the same overseer who is concerned directly or indirectly in any contract for supplying any part of the provisions, however small, should be liable to a penalty, although he derived no profit from it; that would involve a manifest contradiction. I think, therefore, that the words, 'for his own profit,' must be taken to override the whole clause; and that the legislature intended that no overseer for his own profit, either in his own name, or in that of any other person, should supply the poor with provisions, nor be concerned, directly or indirectly, in any contract relating to it." And the court refused to disturb the verdict found for the defendant.

I. Of Settlements in General. (a)

THE recent act, 4 W. 4, c. 76, has made but little alteration in the law of settlement, excepting that the sections, 64 and 65, will prevent the acquiring a settlement by hiring and service, or by office, after the passing of that act, see post.

(a) The law relating to the binding and ordering of parish and other apprentices is stated under title Apprentices, Vol. I. The filiation and maintenance of bastard children is also given in Vol. I., see title Bastards. And the laws by which the ordering of servants and other workmen is regulated will be found under title Servants, Vol. V.

Whatever relates to the settlement of the individuals of any of these classes will be here treated of under the proper heads.

As the Poor Laws, or at least those parts which relate to settlements, are administered chiefly by the magistracy of the kingdom, it may be convenient to repeat in this place the 16 Geo. II. c. 18, which enacts, s. 1, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for all and every justice or justices of the peace for any county, riding, city, liberty, franchise,

1. Settlements in general.

1. Settlements in general.

Definition of a settlement.

"By the term settlement is to be understood a permanent indestructible right to take the benefit of the poor laws in a particular parish or place which maintains its own poor."—Gambier on P. r. Sett. 1.

"A settlement is the right acquired in any one of the modes pointed out by the poor laws to become a recipient of the benefit of those laws, in that parish or place, which provides for its own poor, where the right has been last acquired. It is not forfeitable, and may be communicated from person to person, notwithstanding an attainder, which works a forfeiture of most civil rights." (Rex v. St. Mary, Cardigan, 6 T. R. 116. (a)) Though it ceases, and is destroyed for ever in the parish or place where it once existed, upon the acquisition of the same right, or any other new right, in any other such parish or place. It will be observed that, from the language of the acts, 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, and the other statute relating to the removal of paupers, post, (26th edit. 705 to 711), that a pauper is always to be removed to the parish where his last settlement was acquired; so that where a person may have successively acquired several different settlements he has no option, but must seek relief in the parish where he acquired his last settlement.

By the earliest statute on this subject (12 Rich. II. c. 7,) in which punishment was awarded against beggars able to serve, and provision made for impotent beggars, the poor were to repair, in order to be maintained, to the places where they were born. By 11 Hen. VII. c. 2, beggars not able to work were to resort to the hundred where they last dwelled, or were best known, or were born; and by 19 Hen. VII. c. 12, to where born, or to where they had made their last abode by the space of three years. By 1 Ed. VI. c. 3, this was explained to be, where they had been most conversant by the space of three years. By 1 Jac. I. c. 7, they were to be sent to the place of their dwelling, if they had any; if not, to the place where they last dwelt by the space of one year; if that could not be known, then to the place of their birth. So that beggars not able to work were to be maintained where they were born, or where they had inhabited,—first, for any indeterminate time, next for three years, and lastly for one year. In Rex v. Inhabitants of St. George, Exeter, 5 Nev. & Man. 66, Denman, C. J. said, "At the time of passing 43 Eliz. c. 2, there was no law of settlement, nor could the children of paupers, if at a distance from their parents, be sent home by the parish officers."

Poor people going from one parish to another.

This last regulation as to the place where paupers were to be supported, continued to the time of 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, by which after reciting borough, or town corporate within their respective jurisdictions, to make, do, and execute all and every act or acts, matter or matters, thing or things appertaining to their office as justice or justices of the peace, so far as the same relates to the laws for the relief, maintenance, and settlement of poor persons; for passing and punishing vagrants; for repair of the highways; or to any other laws concerning parochial taxes, levies, or rates; notwithstanding any such justice or justices of the peace is or are rated to or chargeable with the taxes, levies, or rates within any such parish, township, or place affected by any such act or acts of such justice or justices as aforesaid."

Sect. 2 enacts, "That no act or acts, matter or matters, thing or things, which hath or have been before the making this act done, made, or executed by any such justice or justices of the peace, shall hereafter be quashed or declared void, because the same hath or have been so made, done, or executed by any such justice or justices so rated or chargeable as aforesaid; any law, usage, or custom whatsoever to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 3 provides, "That this act, or any thing therein contained, shall not authorize or empower any justice or justices of the peace for any county or riding at large, to act in the determination of any appeal to the quarter sessions for any such county or riding, from any order, matter, or thing relating to any such parish, township, or place, where such justice or justices of the peace is or are so charged, taxed, or chargeable as aforesaid; any thing herein contained to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."

(a) A settlement is not a property. Ibid. and post. It is not at all analogous to an inheritance. Per Lord Ellenborough, (Rex v. Haddenham, 15 East, 460, post, 289.)

that "Whereas the number of poor within England and Wales is very great and burthensome; and whereas, by reason of some defects in the law, poor people are not restrained from going from one parish to another, and therefore do endeavour to settle themselves in those parishes where there is the best stock, the largest commons or wastes to build cottages, and the most wood for them to burn and destroy, and when they have consumed it, then to another parish, and at last become rogues and vagabonds, to the great discouragement of parishes to provide stocks, where it is liable to be devoured by strangers:" it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish, to any justice of peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming so to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of ten pounds, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons that are likely to be chargeable to the parish shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person or persons to such parish where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant, for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish, to be allowed by the said justices."

By the above act any person might gain a settlement by residence of forty days in the parish. But by 1 Jac. II. c. 17, the forty days were to be reckoned from the delivery to the parish officers by the new comers of a notice of the place of abode and the number of the family; and by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, from the publication of such notice in the church. The object of this regulation was notoriety, in order that persons likely to be chargeable might be removed. But the latter act contemplated four cases in which no notice was to be given. First, when the person had served an annual office. Secondly, when he had paid parish rates. Third, when he had been hired (and by 8 and 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 4, served) for a year, being unmarried and having no children. And fourthly, persons bound apprentice by indenture. Notice however was never necessary when the tenement on which the person came to settle was of more than 10*l.* value by the year. The power of gaining a settlement by delivery and publication of such notice was altogether taken away by 35 Geo. III. c. 101.

Wherever a district of known limits contributes to one common fund raised within it, and which is disbursed within it, for the relief of its own poor, this right may be acquired, whether such district be a parish, a township, or hamlet, even though the township or hamlet be extra-parochial, for overseers may be appointed to an extra-parochial township or village. (Rex v. Rafford, 1 Stra. 512.)

The above rule has at different times been modified in favour of parishes in which prisons, hospitals, and other public charitable institutions are situated. The provisions to this effect in local acts have given way to the following general enactment.

By 54 Geo. III. c. 170, it is enacted, "That all enactments and provisions contained in any act or acts of parliament since the commencement of the reign of his late majesty, Geo. I., whereby an alteration is made in respect of gaining or not gaining a settlement within any particular district, parish, township, or hamlet, shall be, and the same are hereby repealed; and that all and every person shall be deemed and taken to have acquired and to acquire a settlement in every such district, parish, township, or hamlet, by any ways and means, he, she, or they would or might have done, or would or might do, in case such act or acts, or any of them, had not been made and passed; and notwithstanding the same or any of them are or was in force and operation."

Sect. 2 provides, "That no person shall be deemed or taken to acquire any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet, by reason of such person being born of the body of any mother actually confined as a prisoner within the walls of any prison; or any house licensed for the reception of pregnant women, in pursuance of an act made and passed in the thirteenth year of his present majesty's reign, for the better regulation of lying-in-hospitals, and other places appropriated for the charitable reception of pregnant women, in which any such prison or house shall be situated."

Sect. 3 provides, "That whensoever any person shall be born of the body of any poor person in any house of industry, or house for the reception and care of the poor of any district, parish, township, or hamlet which shall be locally situated in any district, parish, township, or hamlet, contributing to the expenses of maintaining the poor in such house, or in any other district, parish, township, or hamlet, not contributing to such expense, such person shall, so far as regards the settlement of such person, be deemed and taken to be born in the district, parish, township, or hamlet, by whom the mother of such person was sent to, and on whose account the mother of such person was received and maintained in such house."

Sect. 4 provides and enacts, "That no person shall be deemed or taken to gain any settlement by reason of any residence within any district, parish, township, or hamlet, while he, she, or they shall be detained or confined as a prisoner within any such district, parish, township, or hamlet, on any civil process, or for any contempt whatsoever."

Sect. 5 provides and enacts, "That no gate-keeper or toll-keeper of any turnpike-road or navigation, or person renting the tolls and residing in any toll-house of any turnpike-road or navigation, shall thereby gain any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet." (The general turnpike act, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 51, is to the like effect.)

Sect. 6 provides and enacts, "That no person or persons shall gain any settlement in any district, parish, township, or hamlet, by reason of any residence in any house or other dwelling-place provided for the residence of such person or persons by any charitable institution, while such person or persons shall be supported and maintained at the expense of such charitable institution as an object or objects of such charity."

And by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 11, it is enacted, that every house and building which shall be purchased or hired under the authority of that act, (vide, sections 8, 9, 10, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, ante.) shall in all questions relative to the settlement of persons born or lodged therein, be deemed and taken to be part of the parish, on behalf of which the same shall be purchased or hired, and by which the same shall be used as a poorhouse or workhouse.

By 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 42, which enables the parish officers to provide land for the employment of the poor, and inclose waste lands for cultivation, it is provided by the fifth section, that no poor inhabitant of the parish to whom land shall be let which shall have been hired or inclosed under that act, shall gain a settlement by renting, or occupying or paying parochial taxes for such land either alone or with any other land or tenement.

Similar power is given by the 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 59, for inclosing land belonging to the crown; and that act contains the same restriction as to gaining settlements.

By the 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 33, (see Appendix), the guardians of the parishes forming any union are empowered to agree that, for the purpose of settlement, such parishes shall be considered as one parish.

A settlement attaches to those persons only, concerning whom those circumstances may be affirmed, which acts of parliament say shall give a settlement. It is not universally true that every person in this country must have a settlement to which he may be removed, for bastard children born in an extra-parochial place which is not a vill, have no settlement, nor foreigners who come into this country. (Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 2 B. & C. 889; 4 D. & R. 462.) Such persons are denominated casual poor, and must be provided for in the parish where they happen to be. See Casual Poor, ante, 88 to 100.

Although a foreigner has not necessarily a settlement in this country, he may acquire one in some of the modes by which natural born subjects obtain this privilege; thus, the wife of a foreigner was removed to Eastbourne (the place of her maiden settlement), from Seaford, where he had for two years before, and at the time of the removal, resided, and rented a house of above the value of 10*l.*, exercising the trade of a baker. The husband acquiesced in the removal, and accompanied them to Eastbourne. The sessions confirmed the order of removal, and the question was, whether a foreigner can gain a settlement in this country? St. Giles's v. St. Margaret's was cited, and it was urged that the 13 & 14 Car. II. referred only to the poor of this kingdom, i. e. England and Wales. Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This man was not an alien enemy, but a German by birth, an alien amy. And as such, though he may not take a lease (a) of a dwelling-house or shop, by reason of the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 16, yet he may occupy a tenement of 10*l.* a-year, and carry on his trade there like any other person. Then if he may do so he has that interest which enables him to gain a settlement by the provision of the legislature: the law of humanity obliges us to afford relief to poor foreigners, to save them from starving." Lawrence, J., in answer to the observation, that the statute of Car. II. did not extend to any but the poor of England and Wales, said, that, "without dispute, Scotchmen and Irishmen may gain settlements here." Both orders quashed. (Rex v. Eastbourne, 4 E. 103.)

1. Settlements in general.

A foreigner may gain a settlement by occupying a tenement of 10*l.* for a year.

St. Giles v. St. Margaret's, 1 Sess. Ca. 97. An Englishwoman was married to a foreigner who had no settlement in England: the husband continued for the space of forty days in a parish irremovable, for that there was no place to which he could be removed; and it was urged that the wife continuing with him as part of his family for forty days, in a place whence he hath not a right to be removed, gains a settlement. But Lord Holt, C. J., thought "That where a person stays forty days in a place whence he hath a right not to be removed, that gains a settlement; otherwise, where he only stays in a place because they do not know whither to remove him."

A foreigner does not gain a settlement by mere residence of 40 days in a parish.

Ellinor Conred's Case, Comb. 287; 2 Bott, 17. She and her two children landed at Harwich from Holland, and removing to another place, were sent back to Harwich by order of two justices. Darnel, Serj. "Landing makes no settlement." Sir Barth. Shower, "Tis within the equity of the act." Eyres, J. (absente Holt), "You must keep them where you have them for aught I know; it seems to me to be casus omissus." The order was quashed.

Married women, during their coverture, cannot by any act of their own acquire a settlement. What is their proper settlement will be considered in another place.

Married women. (b)

"There never was an instance where a wife was held to acquire a settlement during the life of her husband." Lord Hardwicke, in Berkhampstead v. St. Mary, North Church, 2 Bott, 51, "Nor can she by residence of her husband on an estate devised to her, acquire a settlement either for her husband or her children. If she only be irremovable (R. v. Oakley, post), and if her husband resides with her he will acquire a settlement; and thereby, indirectly, she will acquire one.

Infants cannot be removed from the parish in which they have a freehold (Rex v. Hasfield, Burr. S. C., 147; 2 Bott, 613); but no case has decided, though it has been intimated in some, that a settlement could not be gained under such circumstances. (Ib.) A child under seven years of age, removed with a parent for nurture, will gain no settlement. (Rex v. Cumnew, 2 Bott, 36.)

Persons attainted may communicate their settlement to children born after the attainder (Rex v. St. Mary, Cardigan, 6 T. R. 116, post); and in Rex v. Haddenham (15 East, 463, post), an attainted felon who had been discharged upon the sign manual, but never received a formal pardon, acquired a settlement by the purchase of an estate.

Attainted persons.

In some former editions of this work it has been said that a deserter can gain no settlement, and Rex v. Norton (9 East, 206) is cited as an authority. But that case determined only that he could not gain a settlement by hiring and service, on account of the superior claim to his service by the country. But suppose a deserter executed an annual office, or rented a tenement, it seems doubtful whether his desertion from the army would prevent his thereby acquiring a settlement.

Deserters.

(a) This section applies only to leases of dwelling-houses or shops granted to stranger artificers or handicraftsmen. A vintner is not within the statute, 3 Mod. 94; 1 Saunders, 3.

In Rex v. Ashton-under-Lyne, 4 M. & Sel. 357, the wife had taken the premises, and occupied part of them with her family, long before the husband deserted, and the argument proceeded chiefly upon that ground, leaving it to be inferred that if the husband had himself entered into the contract, and done all the other acts necessary to establish a settlement, the circumstance of his being a deserter at the time would not have defeated it. A soldier may, during his service in the army, gain a settlement by renting a tenement, although he could not by hiring and service. (Rex v. Brightelmstone, 1 B. & A. 270; Rex v. Beaulieu, post.) It is no objection that his estate was defeasible. (Rex v. Haddenham, 15 East, 460.)

2. Of a Bastard, 275.
 1. In general, 275.
 2. How Settlement of Bastard affected by a Certificate, 282.
 3. When Removable from Mother, 284.
3. Evidence of a Settlement by Birth, 284.

1. Of a legitimate child.

The settlement of a legitimate child is that of the father, or, if any, that of the mother; but until one of these is ascertained, the place of birth is, primâ facie, that of settlement.

1. OF A LEGITIMATE CHILD.

Legitimate children take the settlement of their father, or if they have no settlement, they are entitled to the settlement of their mother; and it is only when both these sources fail, that their right accrues to a settlement in the place in which they were born. But until the settlement of the father or of the mother has been ascertained, the settlement of a legitimate child, like that of a bastard, is primâ facie in the parish where the birth took place; and if that cannot be ascertained, then the child is not removable from the place where it was found, and must be relieved there as a casual pauper.

A child was removed to the place of its birth, neither father nor mother having a settlement; and on appeal the sessions were of opinion that birth gains no settlement, but only in case of bastardy. Per Curiam (absente Holt, C. J.) "Birth makes a good settlement, and the labour lies on them where it was born to find another." The order made on appeal was quashed. (Spitalfields and St. Andrews, Holborn, Fort. 307; Rex v. St. Mary, Leicestershire, 5 Nev. & Man. 215, S. C.)

Cripplegate v. St. Saviour's, 2 Bott, 27. A child of three years of age was removed from one of these parishes to the other; and it appeared in the order that they removed him there because he was born there, not having any other settlement. By the Court: "The father's settlement is the settlement of the children, when it can be found out; otherwise the birth of the child primâ facie is the settlement of the child, until there is another settlement found out."

The place of birth is primâ facie the place of settlement (Rex v. Heaton, 6 T. R. 653); even if the pauper is a widow or a married woman. (See Rex v. Ryton, post.) But per Bayley, J. "I cannot concur in the argument, that the mere fact of a pauper being first found in a particular parish, is presumptive evidence of his having been born there; and if the cases that have been referred to go that length, I, for one, must be allowed to doubt their authority." (Rex v. Trowbridge, 1 M. & R. 12; 7 B. & C. 252.) And in many cases proof of the place of birth will afford but slight evidence of settlement, though of course it may be acted upon if no proof tending to fix the settlement elsewhere be offered. (See Rex v. Wakefield, 5 East, 335.)

In Clavely v. Burton, 2 Bulst. 351, it was holden by the judges, that if the mother of a child born in one parish die in another parish, while passing to a third, such child shall be settled where it was born, and not in the parish where it was left destitute by the death of the mother.

Whitechapel v. Stepney, Carth. 433; 2 Bott, 24. It was holden that a legitimate child, where its parent is a vagabond, gains a settlement by birth; but where the settlement of the parent of a legitimate child is known, such child must follow the settlement of the parent.

A travelling woman, having a nurse child, was apprehended for felony, and sent to gaol, and was hanged; this child is to be sent to the place of its birth, if it can be known, otherwise it must be sent to the town where the mother was apprehended, because that town ought not to have sent the child to gaol, being no malefactor. (Dalt. c. 73, p. 168.)

And where a child is first known to be, that parish must provide for it till they find another. (Comb. 364, 372.)

Children born in England, but of Irish or Scotch parents, may be sent to Ireland and Scotland under 59 Geo. III. c. 12. (See post, and Rex v. Great Clacton, 3 B. & Ald. 410; Rex v. Whitehaven, 5 B. & Ald. 720; 1 Dowl. & R. 384.)

By 13 Geo. II. c. 29, for confirming and enlarging the powers conferred by charter upon the governors and guardians of the hospital for the maintenance and education of exposed and deserted young children, it is provided by s. 7, that no child, nurse, or servant, received or employed in such hospital shall, by virtue thereof, gain any settlement in the parish where such hospital shall be situate. The settlement of foundlings, therefore, is left to be determined by the same rule as prevails in all other cases wherein those particulars as to their birth and parentage can be ascertained, which determine the settlement of the child in such other cases. According, however, to the popular notion of a foundling, these facts are not made known, nor are they easy to be discovered. But it is to be inferred that the institution to which the above statute relates, is not limited to the reception of children whose destitution is of that aggravated description. It involves no absurdity, therefore, to say that foundlings, if they are legitimate children, follow their father's settlement, if it is known; if not, they take their mother's; and if neither of these be known, or they are bastards, their settlement will be in the place of their birth. But if that also cannot be discovered, they must be provided for in the place in which they may happen to be, as casual poor. The effect of an admission upon this charitable establishment, is only to take those children from the parish where they must otherwise have been supported, and to give them the benefit of the provisions of the hospital. See 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 2 and 3, ante, 271, 272.

The place of birth of a legitimate child as a vagrant, is its settlement, until another be found.

2. OF A BASTARD.

2. Of a Bastard.

1. By Birth of a Bastard in general.

An illegitimate child could not derive a settlement from either of its parents, and generally speaking was settled in the place where it was born. (Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 2 B. & C. 880; 4 D. & R. 462, infra; Rex v. Astley, 4 Doug. 391.) But by 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 71, it was enacted "That every child born a bastard after the passing of that act, shall have and follow the settlement of the mother of such child until such child shall attain the age of sixteen, or shall acquire a settlement in its own right; and such mother, so long as she shall be unmarried or a widow, shall be bound to maintain such child as a part of her family until such child shall attain the age of sixteen; and all relief granted to such child while under the age of sixteen shall be considered as granted to such mother: provided always that such liability of such mother as aforesaid shall cease on the marriage of such child, if a female." (See Appendix.)

If the mother of the bastard afterwards marry, then, under the 57th section, her husband is bound to maintain such child till the age of sixteen or the death of the mother; and the liability of the putative father is sus-pendent whilst the husband is of ability to maintain the child. (Lang v. Spicer, 1 Tyr. & Gr. 58; 3 Crom. M. & Ros. 129, S. C.) Before this statute an illegitimate child was settled where he was born.

A settlement by birth seems to be founded on the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, by which justices are directed to remove any poor person come to inhabit and likely to become chargeable to the parish where he or she was last legally settled, either as a native, householder, &c. for the space of forty days at the least, and therefore it would seem that a residence of forty days is essential to the acquisition of a birth settlement. But there is no decision to this effect, and the tacit convention of parishes not to insist upon it would most probably induce the Court of King's Bench to overrule such an objection if it were now attempted to be set up. (See 1 Nol. P. L. 288, n. (1).)

And this is so, whether the parent be a housekeeper or a lodger merely. (Rex v. Spitalfields, 1 Lord Raym. 567.) In Whitechapel v. Stepney (Carth. 433), it is said that a bastard gains a settlement in its place of birth ex necessitate, for being nullius filius, it cannot otherwise be provided for, except a reputed father can be found. But this proposition is laid down rather too largely, because if the birth happen in an extra-parochial place, which does not maintain its poor, no settlement is gained, and such child can only be relieved as casual poor till it acquires a settlement in some other way, as appears by

A bastard child, born in an extra-parochial place, which is not a vill, has no settlement.

Rex v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 2 B. & C. 889; 4 D. & R. 462; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 253. Caroline Littlewood was removed from All Saints, in Derby, to Saint Nicholas, in Leicester. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was the illegitimate child of Elizabeth Littlewood, deceased, and was born in May, 1822, in an extra-parochial place, called the Black Friars, in Leicester, which is not a vill, and for which no overseers have ever been appointed. She was shortly afterwards taken by her mother to All Saints, Derby, where she remained until the death of her mother, and up to the time of this order of removal. The mother was legally settled in St. Nicholas, Leicester, at the time of the pauper's birth and of her own death. Per Bayley, J. "The argument in support of the order of sessions is founded upon the assumption that every person is by law entitled to a settlement in some place; but that is by no means the case, for foreigners have not any settlement in this country. A settlement attaches to those persons only concerning whom those circumstances may be affirmed, which acts of parliament say shall give a settlement. Generally speaking, an illegitimate child is settled in the parish where it is born. There are some exceptions to this general rule, noticed in the treatises on the poor laws. In most of the excepted cases the mother, at the time of the birth, is in law supposed to be in the place of her settlement, where she ought to be: as where a woman with child is removed out of one parish into another, through the fraud or collusion of its officers, or where the child is born pending an order of removal. In one of these cases the child, when born, is settled in the parish from which the mother has been fraudulently removed; in the other in the parish to which she is ordered to be removed. In this case the child was born in an extra-parochial place. It therefore has not any settlement by birth, and being a bastard, it can derive none from its parent. In such cases however it is entitled to remain with its mother as long as the purposes of nurture require it, and it will afterwards be entitled to relief as casual poor, although it has not any settlement. We are all of opinion that the order of sessions must be quashed."

Bastard born in a place by collusion.

If a woman come into a place by privity and collusion of the officers where she belongs, and be there delivered of a bastard, such bastard gains no settlement there, notwithstanding its birth. (Sett. & Rem. 66.)

The collusion must be by the parish officers. Where the occupier of land and putative father caused a pregnant woman to remove out of

Rex v. Mattersey, 4 B. & Adol. 211; 1 Nev. & M. 49. William Green Otter was removed from Kettering to Mattersey. Order confirmed. Case:—Elizabeth Otter, the mother of the pauper, lived with William Green, in Mattersey, for eight years, during which time she was delivered of two illegitimate children, of whom William Green was the putative father. The pauper was one of them, and was born at the Lodge-on-the-Wolds, an extra-parochial place. The mother was sent there by W. Green, her master, when she was far advanced in her pregnancy, in order to prevent the pauper from being born in Mattersey. He was proprietor and occupier of considerable land in the parish. He had never, to the knowledge of E. Otter, spoken to the parish officers on the subject of so removing her. She returned to the house and service of W. Green as soon as she was recovered, namely, in six weeks after her confinement, the expenses of which, and also of her maintenance during her stay at the Lodge-on-the-Wolds, were paid by W. Green. Denman, C. J. "The general rule is, that an illegitimate child is settled in the parish in which it is born. Unless this case therefore comes within some of the exceptions to that rule, W. G. Otter would be settled in the place of his birth, if it were not extra-parochial, and certainly not in Mattersey. It is said that he is settled in Mattersey, because the mother, when pregnant, was fraudulently removed from that parish by a parishioner liable to pay rates there. But I think it may be collected from Tewksbury v. Twynning (a) and Masters v. Child, (b) that in order to fix the settlement of an illegitimate child in the parish from which the mother has been fraudulently removed, the fraudulent removal must have been by the parish officers. Here it was not so. No case has gone so far as to show that if the fraud be by an individual, not a parish officer, the child shall be settled in the parish where the fraud was committed." Parke, J. concurred. Taunton, J. "It does not appear by the statement in the case that the mother of the pauper was settled in Mattersey. It is merely said that she lived there. In Masters v. Child it is stated that if a woman being with child of a bastard, and settled in one parish, is persuaded by the parish officers to go into another, and there to be delivered, this fraud will make the parish chargeable where the mother was settled, though the child was not born there. But if the woman accidentally come into a parish, and is persuaded by some of the parishioners to go into another, which she doth, and there is delivered, this shall not charge that parish which persuaded her. That is precisely in point. Here the mother of the pauper was persuaded by one of the parishioners to go to an extra-parochial place. Independently of that decision I should have been bold enough to come to the same conclusion. The general rule is, that an illegitimate child shall be settled in the place where it is born, and the fewer exceptions there are to that rule the better." Patteson, J. concurred.

the parish during her confinement to an extra-parochial place, the child will not be settled in the parish from whence she removed.

The fraud must be of the parish officers.

Rex v. Llanfihangel, Abercowin, 4 Nev. & M. 355. An order of removal of Hannah Thomas from Mydrim to Llanfihangel, Abercowin, was confirmed. Case:—Esther Walters, single woman, in January, 1833, being pregnant of the pauper, was removed by an order to Llanfihangel, and was, together with the order, delivered to one of the overseers of Llanfihangel; she was left there by the overseer of Mydrim, but on the same day returned to her mother's house in Mydrim, under a promise from the overseer of Llanfihangel, made after the departure of the overseer of Mydrim, that a certificate should in a few days after be given to Mydrim, acknowledging her to be legally settled in Llanfihangel, Abercowin; she was at the same time told by the overseer of Llanfihangel, Abercowin, to go to the parish of Mydrim and look for a place for herself there, until a few days, when she could bring such certificate, and in the mean time to conceal herself from the parishioners of Mydrim. She accordingly returned that day to Mydrim, and concealed herself until the child was born. The overseer of Llanfihangel did not bring the certificate, nor was such certificate ever after given to Mydrim. In about three weeks after her return, E. Walters was, at her mother's in Mydrim, delivered of the pauper, a bastard, she having directed her mother and sister to conceal the fact of her being there, and three weeks after, the parish of Llanfihangel paid the nurse for nursing the pauper. Upon the discontinuance of such payment, the parish of Mydrim, on 14th September, 1833, by the order of the two justices, removed the pauper (who had become chargeable to Mydrim) from Mydrim, where the pauper then was at nurse with her mother, to Llanfihangel. Upon the hearing of this appeal, it was on the behalf of the parish of Llanfihangel objected, that the two justices who removed the pauper from Mydrim had no jurisdiction to do so, inasmuch as the pauper was under the age of seven years, and at the time with her mother at nurse in Mydrim. Lord Denman. "It is quite clear that we cannot infer fraud; but we think that upon the whole matter stated there is enough to warrant us in sending the case back to the sessions to be re-stated."

In Masters v. Child (3 Salk. 66; 2 Bott, 5), and Tewkesbury v. Twining (2 Bott, 3,) if a woman with child of a bastard, and settled in one parish, is persuaded to go into another, and there be delivered, this fraud will make the parish chargeable where the mother was settled, though the child were not born there; but if a woman with child of a bastard come accidentally into one parish, and is persuaded by some of the parishioners to go into another parish, which she doth, and there be delivered, this shall not charge that parish which persuaded her. (Rex v. Astley, 4 Doug. 389.)

2. Also if a bastard be born after an order of removal has been made, and before the mother can be sent to her place of settlement, being hindered by water or otherwise; such bastard shall not be settled where so born, but at the mother's settlement. (Reg. v. Ickleford, 1 Sess. Cas. 33; Sett. and Rem. 66; 2 Bott, 9.)

3. By 35 Geo. III. c. 101, the removal of persons during sickness may be suspended; and by s. 6, if during such suspension any unmarried woman shall be delivered of a bastard child, every such bastard shall be deemed and taken to be settled in the parish, township, or place in which was the legal settlement of such mother at the time of her delivery. Provided that all acts heretofore made touching bastard children, or concerning the mothers or reputed fathers of such children, shall remain in full force, as well in cases where by this act the settlement of such child is directed to be the same as that of the mother, as where the settlement remains as it did before the passing of this act.

4. If the officers be carrying a woman, by virtue of an order of removal, to another parish, and she be delivered on the way thither in transitu, the bastard shall go with the mother where she is going by virtue of the order, notwithstanding the birth. (Jane Gray's case, Sett. & Rem. 66; 2 Bott, 8.)

5. Rex v. Great Salkeld, 6 M. & Sel. 408. Order of removal of Lancelot Walker, otherwise Nicholson, from Morland to Great Salkeld, confirmed. Case:—The mother of the pauper, Catherine Nicholson, whilst a single woman and pregnant with the pauper, was removed from Great Salkeld to Lowther, and the order was confirmed on appeal, but on a case stated was quashed by K. B. Whilst the appeal was depending, and before the decision of the court, Catherine was delivered of the pauper in Lowther, born a bastard. Lord Ellenborough, "The birth settlement of the pauper, though in fact born at Lowther, was in Great Salkeld, for there he was in judgment of law born, because the order of removal being vacated, the mother's right to be in Lowther was void ab initio." Abbott, J. "An illegitimate child is, as it cannot derive a settlement from its parents, in the first instance settled where born; but where the mother is improperly removed, the law says that the parish whence the removal was made, and where, but for this, the child would have been born, is to be considered the place of its birth." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Martlesham, 5 Man. & R. 82; 10 B. & C. 77. Order of removal of Athrol from Playford to Martlesham confirmed. Case:—Sarah Athrol, single woman, being pregnant, was removed by an order from Playford to Stutton. Before the sessions she was delivered at Stutton of the pauper, a bastard. At the sessions, Stutton appealed, and the order was quashed. At the time of the bastard's birth the mother belonged to Martlesham. Bayley, J. "It is quite clear that a bastard cannot gain a settlement by parentage: the pauper therefore was not settled in Martlesham, and the order of sessions must be quashed."

Rex v. St. Andrew Holborn, 6 M. & Sel. 411. Order of removal of Mary Aldridge and child from Painswick to St. Andrew Holborn, confirmed. Case:—

(a) Here the act of God prevents the execution of the order. Lord Tenterden, in Rex v. Halifax, post, 279.

The divisions of St. Andrew Holborn, Saffron Hill, Middlesex, and St. Andrew Holborn, London, although divisions of the same parish, are separate districts as far as the maintenance of the poor is concerned. Pending an appeal upon an order removing the pauper as a single woman with child from Painswick to St. Andrew Holborn, London, she was delivered of a child in the latter district. The judgment on appeal was against Painswick, for misdirection of the order of removal. Another, the present, order was then obtained to St. Andrew Holborn, Saffron Hill, the admitted settlement of the mother. Per curiam, "The statute has no regard to orders of removal improperly made, so as to give them a kind of floating existence until the blunder is cured by a fresh order. The order in question being to a wrong district, is the same as if it had been directed to the wrong parish." Order quashed as to the child.

35 Geo. 3, c. 101.

The same principle had previously been acted upon in Much Waltham v. Peram, 2 Salk. 474, and also in Westbury v. Coston, 2 Salk. 532; 1 Salk. 121; in which it was held, that if a woman, pregnant, be removed by an order, and she be delivered, and there be an appeal, and the order be reversed, the child must be sent back; and Holt, C. J. said "Though there be no fraud in this case, yet here is a wrongful removal, and the reversal makes all void ab initio: fraud or not fraud is not material in this case; but the settlement of the child depends upon the removal; for if that was wrong, they shall not ease themselves by it."

Rex v. Halifax, 2 B. & Adol. 211. An order of removal of Ann Smith and Thomas her child, was confirmed as to Ann, and quashed as to the child. Case:—Ann Smith, who was settled in Manchester, lived at Halifax in January, 1829, and was then pregnant of a child likely to be born a bastard. On the 30th of January, by an order of two justices, made before but executed after the Epiphany quarter sessions, she was removed to Manchester, and delivered to the overseers of the poor there. They requested her to go into the workhouse, but she refused, and on the next day (January 31st) returned to Halifax, where she remained till the 20th of February following, and was on that day delivered of a bastard, the child mentioned in the order. The Easter sessions for the riding in which Halifax is situate were holden on the 27th of April, and by the practice of those sessions, when an order of removal is appealed against, there must be ten days' notice previous to the sessions, but no notice of appeal was given against this order, nor was any appeal entered against it at the Easter sessions. The return of Ann Smith from Manchester to Halifax was without the knowledge of the appellants or respondents, and no fraud was imputable to either. The point made for the respondents was, that as the pauper Ann Smith had been removed after the Epiphany sessions, and had returned of her own accord and without any notice into the respondent township, and had been there delivered of a bastard child, whose settlement was in question, without the knowledge of the respondents, before the time of giving notice of appeal for the next sessions had expired, the order must be considered as pending, and the settlement of the child must follow that of the mother. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that the order of sessions was right." Littledale, J. "It seems to me that in this case the child was settled in the place of its birth according to the general rule on the subject of bastards. There is an exception to that rule where the child is born while the order is under execution, and before it can be completely fulfilled, the interruption happening by the act of God, and the officers having done all in their power to carry the order into effect, as where the birth takes place on the road or during detention by floods. But here the order had been executed, and the woman afterwards returned from the appellant to the respondent township, without any fraud on the part of either. It is admitted, that if the child had been born after the time for appealing had expired, the settlement would have been good; and I think it is the same in this case, as there was no appeal depending at the time of the birth. Landinaboe v. Much Birch seems an authority to the contrary, but the reporter himself questions that case, and admits that it was not well considered." Parke, J. "The order in this case had been executed, and the parish officers of Manchester had received the pauper, and after that she returned to Halifax, and was there delivered. The parties stand on just the same footing as if this had happened after the order had been appealed against and confirmed at sessions. An order can no more be said to be pending during the time in which an appeal may be instituted, than a judgment while a writ of error may be brought. Here was a complete execution of the order; no fraud appears in the appellants, and the overseers of Manchester had no power to detain the pauper there. The order of sessions must therefore be confirmed." Patteson, J. "The order had been completely executed, and was not depending. Although the pauper became a vagrant by returning to Halifax, that can make no difference in the question between these parishes." Order of sessions confirmed.

Bastard born in the house of correction.

And in Elsing and the county gaol of Hereford, 1 Sess. Ca. 94; 1 Nol. P. L. 290, a bastard was born in the county gaol: Resolved, that the settlement was with the mother. (Rex v. Astley, 4 Doug. 391.) See 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 2, (ante, 271.)

In the house of industry of an incorporated district.

7. By 20 Geo. III. c. 36, all bastard children born in the house of industry, of any hundred, or other district, incorporated by act of parliament for the relief and employment of the poor, shall be deemed to belong to the parish or place where the mother of such bastard child was legally settled.

8. Although the 10 Geo. IV. c. 56, for consolidating the laws relating to friendly societies, repeals the following enactment, and makes no similar provision, yet as cases may arise upon the law as it stood prior to the repeal, it has been thought best to retain it.

Bastard born under the act for establishing friendly societies.

By 33 Geo. III. c. 54, s. 25, for the encouragement and relief of friendly societies, every child which shall be born a bastard in any parish or place, the mother whereof shall at the time of the birth of such child be a member of any such benefit society, and be residing in such parish or place under the authority of that act; such child shall have the same settlement which the mother had at the birth of such child; any usage or custom to the contrary notwithstanding. Vide Vol. II. title, "Friendly Societies."

If she is residing with her father, as a member of her family, and he has a certificate under this act; she is residing under the authority of the act, and her bastard will follow her settlement.

Rex v. Idle, 2 B. & Ald. 149. Order of removal of M. W. and her bastard child from Idle to Rawden: confirmed by the sessions as to the mother, but discharged as to the child. Case: For several years prior to the 4th October, 1817, J. W., father of M. W. was an efficient member of a friendly society, established in pursuance of the 33 Geo. III., "An act for the encouragement and relief of friendly societies." On the 4th October, 1817, a certificate as to that fact was duly made and verified. [The case then set out the certificate, which was regular.] This certificate and the verification were, on the 7th October, 1817, delivered to the overseers of Idle. The bastard child was born in that township on the 19th November, 1817, whilst J. W. and his family (of which M. W. was then a member) were residing there under the supposed authority of the certificate and the acts relating to friendly societies. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that the original order of the two magistrates was good, and that the sessions were mistaken in their judgment. It has been argued that the friendly society act was repealed by the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, which provides that no person shall be removeable from any parish until actually chargeable, and thus, it is said, rendered wholly unnecessary the former protection by certificate under the friendly society act. But I think that it is not so; for it may be very convenient, notwithstanding the effect of the 35 Geo. III. to keep the provisions of the 33 Geo. III. in force. In many cases, a labourer who might wish to come into a parish might not be able to obtain employment there, for fear that by so doing he might bring burthens upon the parish. But if he came with a certificate from a friendly society, that fear would be removed. It would, therefore, be depriving the members of such societies of a material benefit, if we were to hold the 35 Geo. III. to be a virtual repeal of the provisions of the 33 Geo. III. Then the question arises, who are the persons protected by the latter act? The object of the act being to facilitate the finding of employment, it should receive a liberal construction. I think therefore that the certificate granted to the head of the family protected not only him, but also all the members of the family, and placed them in the same situation in which he stood. If so, then they would not be removable till they became actually chargeable. According to Rex v. Great Yarmouth (8 T. R. 68), this woman, under the circumstances stated to us, was removable; but although that was so, still it may be very questionable, whether, in this particular case, the parish officers were bound to remove the mother? There is an obvious distinction between the effect of a certificate under the 33 Geo. III. and that of one under 8 & 9 W. III. For the former of these two statutes enacts, "that every child born a bastard in a parish during the mother's residence therein, under the authority of that act, shall have the same settlement as the mother." The attention, therefore, of the parish officers, would naturally not be called to the situation of a woman residing under a certificate granted under 33 Geo. III.: and I think, therefore, that they were justified in not removing in this case. No inconvenience can arise to the other parish from this; for if the mother had been actually removed, the child would have been born in their parish, and so would have been settled there. They, therefore, are placed in no worse situation by our holding that the child shall follow the mother's settlement, though she was not removed. I think, therefore, that the parish officers were not bound in this case to remove the mother, and that the child being born in Idle, whilst the mother was residing there under the authority of the 33 Geo. III. c. 54, followed her settlement in Rawden, and that the order of sessions was therefore wrong." Bayley and Holroyd, Js. gave similar judgments.

9. By 13 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 5, a bastard born in a lying-in hospital, shall follow the mother's settlement. It may be observed that no such hospital can be established without licence from the justices in sessions. See 54 Geo. III. c. 170, s. 2, ante, 271.

Bastard born in a lying-in hospital.

Rex v. Manchester, 4 B. & Ald. 504. M. the wife of J. C. and her two children, E. aged eight years, and J. aged six weeks, were removed from Manchester to St. Andrew's, Canterbury. Upon appeal, the order was confirmed as to the wife and E., her daughter, and quashed as far as it respected J. Case:—In the Manchester workhouse there is a room, for which a licence has been obtained, for the reception of lying-in women. This room has been duly licensed pursuant to the 13 Geo. III. c. 82. The room is appropriated by the officers of the town of Manchester to the reception of women resident within the township, but settled elsewhere, and pregnant with children likely to be born bastards, and also to the reception of pregnant women chargeable to the township, and settled in Manchester; and in some few instances, pregnant women have been received from other districts, upon a compensation paid by the overseers of the place in which such pregnant women were resident. Women having settlements elsewhere than in Manchester, if too far advanced to be safely removed to their settlements, are placed by the town's officers in this room for the purpose of being delivered. The expences incurred in respect of the room are defrayed in common with the general expences of the workhouse out of the parish rates. M. C. being settled in St. Andrew's, Canterbury, but resident in Manchester, and pregnant with a child likely to be born a bastard, was placed by the officers of Manchester in this room, and was there delivered of the pauper J. who was born a bastard. The question was, whether this room is a hospital, or place within the act referred to, and whether by the force of that act, the settlement of J. is in St. Andrew's, or whether it is in Manchester. Abbott, C. J. "It seems to me that in this case we cannot consider this a hospital or place within the act. By the 10th section, the person having the management of it is directed, before the admission of any pregnant woman into such hospital, to take her before a justice to be examined whether she be married or single; and other duties are cast upon them for that purpose. By the 4th section, an inscription is to be placed over the door or public

A room in a parish workhouse, licensed pursuant to 13 Geo. 3, c. 82, and appropriated to the reception of, and used for the purpose of, delivery of pregnant women resident within the parish, whether settled there or elsewhere, and the expence of which room was defrayed in common with the general expences of the workhouse out of the parish rates, is not an hospital or place within the 13 Geo. 3, c. 82, s. 3.

entrance of every such hospital, stating that it is licensed for the public reception of pregnant women, and supported by charitable contributions. In the present case, it is only a room set apart for this purpose in the workhouse, the expences of which are defrayed out of the poor's rate. I think, therefore, that this cannot be said to be used for the public reception of pregnant women, nor supported by charitable contributions. Manchester, therefore, is not protected by the 5th section; and the sessions have come to a right conclusion." Order of sessions confirmed.

10. By 9 Geo. IV. c. 40, s. 49, no bastard child which shall be born of any insane person, in any such county lunatic asylum, shall thereby gain a settlement in the parish in which such asylum shall be situated; but that the place of the legal settlement of any such child so born as aforesaid shall be in the parish where the mother of such child was last legally settled. See tit. "Lunatic," Vol. III.

The 51 Geo. III. c. 79, was repealed by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 40. The latter act applies only to county asylums; the former act was general.

Vagrant's child.

11. By 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 25, if a vagrant woman were delivered of a bastard, the overseers might take her before a justice, and then the settlement of the child would follow that of the mother. By 3 Geo. IV. c. 40, s. 41, (24th of June, 1822), the bastard child of any vagrant woman followed her mother's settlement. But these acts are repealed by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, (21st of June, 1824), and no similar provision re-enacted. As to legitimate children of vagrants see Coxwell v. Shellingford, post, and see 4 Dougl. 391.

12. Bastards born in the workhouse of a Union will follow the mother's settlement till the age of sixteen (ante, 275.) but after that period, it seems that the child will be settled in the parish to which it was chargeable, and not to the parish in which the workhouse may be situate. See 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 20 & 21, appendix.

By 22 Geo. III. c. 83, s. 39, an illegitimate child born in any workhouse established under that act would follow the settlement of the mother.

2. How Settlement of a Bastard affected by a Certificate.

The nature and general effect of certificates, given by parishes to enable their poor to reside in other parishes where they can best earn a subsistence, is explained under the head, "Acknowledgment of Settlement by Certificate." But the settlement of a bastard in the place where he is actually born, may be affected by the mother being certificated at the time.

The general rule is, that bastards born in a place in which the mother resides under a certificate, are settled where born. But a bastard of which the mother is pregnant at the time the certificate is given, may be included in the certificate, but is not comprehended under the term "family."

Bastard born under certificate is settled where born.

Windsor v. White Waltham, 1 Stra. 186. John P. being settled in Waltham, where he had lived two years with a woman his reputed wife, went with a certificate, owning them as man and wife, from thence to Windsor, where they had six children. The man died, and the woman swearing they had never been married, the justices adjudged the children to be bastards, and settled in Windsor where they were born. And by the Court: "There is no doubt but the bastard of a certificate person is settled in the place of his birth, for he is not such an issue as will follow the settlement of his father or mother, neither is such bastard his or her child within the intention of the statute, so as to be sent back with the parent." (a)

A bastard is not included in the word "family" in the certificate acts, and, therefore, is settled where born.

In Hilton v. Lidlinch, 2 Stra. 1168; Burr. S. C. 187; 2 Bott, 13; a single woman went into Lidlinch with a certificate from Hilton, where she lived a year, and then had a bastard child. The only question was, whether the child should be settled in the parish where it was born, or in the parish which gave the certificate? By the court:—"The certificate must be taken to be good, and all fraud to be laid out of this case, it being a year that she dwelt in the parish before she was delivered of the child; and wherever this Court in determining a settlement, adjudges upon the point of fraud, that fraud must be expressly stated; for as fraud is odious, it is never to be presumed. The cases hitherto adjudged as to this point have either depended upon some point of fraud or an illegal removal. So where the child is born in a gaol, he shall be settled in the parish where his mother is: for she shall be construed to be in custody of the law, and in all other respects a parishioner. But the present case stands entirely on 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, which, for the encouragement of labour and industry, gave power of removing persons by certificate, which certificate obliges the parish to whom given to receive and continue them in that parish till they become actually chargeable; and then such person is to be removed, together with his or her family, and in another place, with his or her children, to the place from whence the certificate was brought. The question, then, is, whether the bastard is included under the words family or children? And we take it he is not; for the law takes no notice of bastard children; they are filii nullius, filii populi, and are prima facie settled where born."

Rex v. Wyke, Burr. S. C. 264; 2 Bott, 14. John Catton, a bastard, was removed from Wyke to Hipperholm, the place of his birth. Order quashed. Case:—S. Catton, mother of the pauper, came on the 25th of March by certificate from Shelfe to Hipperholm, being then pregnant with the pauper, and was in April following delivered of him at Hipperholm. The certificate undertook that Shelfe should provide for her and her child whenever they should become chargeable, and it was insisted, that the certificate expressly undertakes to provide for her and her child, and had this very child in contemplation, no other child being hinted at. Lord C. J. Lee and Mr. J. Wright agreed that they must take the child referred to by the certificate to be a legitimate child then in being. And Mr. J. Foster observed, (to which observation the other two justices agreed,) that it did not at all appear that the parish who gave the certificate knew that the woman was then with child.

Although the certificate undertake to provide for a woman and her child, she being then pregnant of a bastard.

Rex v. Ipsley, Burr. S. C. 650; 2 Bott, 15. Anne Causier came into Ipsley with a certificate from Studley, acknowledging Anne Causier, spinster, and the child or children that she now goeth with, (a) to be legally settled in Studley: and if at any time Anne, or her child or children which she now goeth with shall become chargeable to Ipsley, Studley thereby promised, when requested, to receive and provide for them as their inhabitants. The child was born at Ipsley, within about a month after she came to reside there under the certificate. The court were clearly of opinion that Studley was bound by this certificate, which takes notice of the woman's being then unmarried and with child, and acknowledges the child she then went with to be legally settled with them in their parish. And Lord Mansfield, C. J. observed, "that the woman was very big with child; and was understood by both parishes to be so: and Studley expressly promised to provide for the infant she then went with. Therefore they ought to be bound by their certificate. An infant in ventre sa mere may be, to a variety of purposes, considered as born."

A certificate including the child with which a woman whom they state to be unmarried is at the time pregnant, is settled in the mother's parish, though born in the certificated parish.

Rex v. Mathon, 7 T. R. 362. R. Cagear was removed from Cradley to Mathon. Order confirmed. Case:—Margaret Cagear, a single woman settled at Mathon, and pregnant of an illegitimate child that was afterwards born a bastard, went to Cradley in 1738, under a certificate from Mathon, wherein Mathon "engaged to relieve and receive Margaret Cagear with the child of which she was then pregnant, and all other children that she might thereafter have, until she or they should acquire a subsequent settlement, whenever she or any of them should become chargeable." She resided in Cradley under that certificate until her death; and in 1746 had the present pauper, an illegitimate child, who continued to reside in Cradley until removed by the present order, without having done any act to gain a settlement for himself. Rex v. Ipsley was cited, and it was urged that there was

But certificate engaging to relieve a woman and her child, with which she was pregnant, and all other children which she may have, will not include bastards born eight years afterwards.

(a) This distinguishes this case from the prior one of Rex v. Wyke.

2. Of a Bastard.

the same reason to extend the present certificate to this pauper; the certificate mentioning the mother's situation, and extending to all after-born children. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is not now necessary to question the propriety of Rex v. Ipsley. That certainly went much beyond the former cases on this subject. However, that is distinguishable from the present case: that only extended to the child with which the woman was then pregnant, and a child in ventre sa mere is capable of being described. But this child was not born until eight years after the certificate was granted, and being illegitimate, he is not included in the general words in the certificate, which extends only to legitimate children." Order of sessions quashed. [It does not appear that the woman was stated to be unmarried in the certificate; but the case called her "single woman."]

3. When removeable from Mother.

Bastard not to be removed whilst a nurse child.

It will have appeared from the above cases, that the settlement of the mother will frequently be in a different parish from that in which her child is settled, and as both may stand in need of parochial relief, the burthen will have to be divided between the two parishes. The many objections to the separation of the child from the mother, in the earlier period of infancy, need not be described; they are sufficiently obvious, and have yielded to the humane maxim of the law, that children shall go with the mother for nurture until the age of seven years, and during that time be inseparable from her. Thus, in Cripplegate v. St. Saviour's (post, Fol. 265; 2 Bott, 27), it was agreed by the whole court, that the age of a nurse-child, so as not to be separated from its mother, is until seven years of age. Skeffreth v. Walford, 2 Sess. Ca. 90; 2 Bott, 11. The order was to remove a woman to her settlement; and her child of two years of age to a different parish at a distance from the mother, being the place of its birth. It was objected, that the child being a nurse-child, they could not separate it from the mother, on account of the care necessary to nurture so young a child, which none can be supposed so fit to administer as its mother; and therefore it should have been sent with her to the place of her settlement. And the orders were quashed by the court.

Except when deserted by the mother.

But the reason upon which this rule is founded does not apply if the mother voluntarily desert her child, and in that case it may be sent to its place of settlement.

To be maintained whilst a nurse-child by its own parish.

And although where the child continues with its mother as a nurse-child, and during that time is not removeable to its place of settlement, yet the parish where the child's proper settlement is, shall maintain the child in the parish where it resides with the mother. See Rex v. Henlington, post, and the form of an order for relief, Appendix.

Evidence of Settlement by Birth.

3. EVIDENCE OF SETTLEMENT BY BIRTH. (a)

The place of birth is prima facie the place of settlement, as well of legitimate as of illegitimate children. (See ante, 274, 275.) But, to establish a conclusive settlement by birth it must be made to appear either that the child is illegitimate, or, if legitimate, that neither of its parents had obtained a settlement at any time before the question arises. (Id. ibid.) To this must be added, proof of the place in which the birth happened.

The ordinary cases of illegitimacy arise from the circumstance of the mother being single down to the time that the child is born; but the child of a married woman may be a bastard, in which case it also takes a birth settlement. (See ante, 275.)

But what is termed a birth settlement is the weakest species of settlement, and exists only when no other settlement can be ascertained, and it may be answered by proof of the maiden settlement of the mother, without showing that the father had no settlement. (Rex v. St. Mary, Leicester, 5 Nev. & Man. 215.)

After proof of the marriage, a child is presumed to be legitimate, though the contrary may be proved. The presumption will still be in favour of legitimacy, though the parents were separated by voluntary deed; but the presumption is the other way, if they are separated by a divorce a mensâ et thoro; and the child is, of course, a bastard, if begotten and born after a divorce a vinculo matrimonii.

Either of the parents may be examined as to the legitimacy or illegitimacy of their children. The treatment of a child by a parent in his family as illegitimate would be good evidence. And declarations of parents in their lifetime, that the child was born before marriage, are admissible in evidence. (Rex v. Bramley, 6 T. R. 330.)

The parents may prove the time of birth; and after their death, their declarations, made in their lifetime, are evidence of that fact: but the register is only evidence of the christening; and non constat thence, when the child was born. Per Lord Mansfield, C. J. (Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 591.)

The locality of the birth may be proved by some person who saw the mother in the parish just before and immediately after that event, and who also saw the offspring, and can give evidence of identity. The party himself can have no recollection of the place of his birth, and the fact of his remembering himself when he was four years of age, in the parish of A., is no proof that he was born there. (Rex v. Trowbridge, 1 Man. & R. 7; 7 B. & C. 252.)

In Rex v. Erith, 8 East, 539. It appeared on the evidence of the pauper, that he remembered being at Erith with his father; that they had no fixed residence; and that his father, who was now dead, had told him that he was born a bastard at Erith, and had pointed to that place as they were passing, telling him that that was the place of his (the pauper's) birth. A search was made in the books of the parish of E., and no register of the pauper's baptism was to be found there. The sessions thought this sufficient evidence of the pauper's birth at E. Lord Ellenborough, "The controversy was not, as in a case of pedigree, from what parents the child derived its birth, but in what place an undisputed birth, derived from known and acknowledged parents, has happened. The point thus stated turns on a single fact, involving no question but that of locality, and therefore not governed by the rules applicable to places of pedigree; and is to be proved therefore as other facts generally are proved, according to the ordinary course of the common law; that is, by evidence to which the objection of hearsay does not apply. We are, therefore, upon this ground, of opinion that the evidence of the father's declaration as to the birth-place of the pauper, the bastard, ought not to have been received." Order of sessions quashed, (post, "Hearsay Evidence." See Phill. Ev. 229, 6th edit.; 3 Stark. on Evid. 1115.)

The declaration of a deceased mother as to the time of birth is admissible in evidence, upon a question as to the place of birth of the child, though the father be living. (Rex v. Birmingham; Rex v. Aston, K. B., Oct. 1829; Steer's Par. L. 599. See post, "Hearsay Evidence."

Rex v. North Petherton, 5 B. & C. 508; 8 D. & R. 325; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 79. Joseph Rich was removed from North Petherton to West Monckton. Order quashed. Case:—To make out the settlement of the pauper's father, it was proved by a copy of the parish register of Spaxton, that he was baptized in that parish. There was no other evidence of his having been born in that parish, and the sessions thought, on the authority of Creech St. Michael v. Pitminster, that they were bound to consider the register by itself, prima facie proof of the place of his birth. When that case was quoted in King's Bench, Bayley, J. said, "We do not know at what age the pauper's father was baptized. It was urged that he was baptized within a very short time after his birth. According to the doctrine of the church touching baptism, 'the pastors and curates are directed to admonish the people, that they defer not the baptism of infants any longer than the Sunday next after the child be born, unless upon great and reasonable cause declared by the curate and by him approved.'" Gibson's Codex. Jur. Ecc. Bap. tit.

3. Evidence of Settlement by Birth.

Presumptions as to legitimacy.

Parents may be examined as to the legitimacy of their children.

Time of birth may be proved by parents.

Place of birth, how proved.

Hearsay declaration of the father, as to the place of his son's birth, is not evidence.

The register of baptism is not alone sufficient evidence of the place of a person's birth.

3. Evidence of Settlement by Birth.

18, c. 9. Bayley, J. "The register of baptism per se is not evidence of the place of birth. If the age of the child at the time when it was baptized could be ascertained, the register might in some cases be evidence of the place of birth. If the child were then very young, the register would be presumptive evidence that it was born in that parish where it was baptized; but if the child were not then young, the circumstance of its having been baptized in a particular parish would afford no presumption that it was born there. Here there was no evidence to show the age of the child when it was baptized. We think, therefore, that the case must go back to the sessions to be reheard, in order that they may ascertain by other evidence whether the father of the pauper was born in the parish of Spaxton or not. We do not say that a register of baptism is not evidence of the place of birth, when accompanied with proof of other circumstances, but that, taken by itself, it is not evidence of the place of birth." Holroyd, J. "I am of the same opinion. I think the register alone is not sufficient to establish the place of birth. It would be sufficient, coupled with proof that the pauper's parents were living within the same parish at the time of the baptism, or that the birth had been shortly previous to the baptism, which latter circumstance would afford a strong presumption that the child was born in the same parish where it was baptized." Littledale, J. concurred.

Birth settlement may be proved by the copy of the parish register of christenings, and by identifying the person.

Creech St. Michael v. Pitminster, Burr. S. C. 765; 2 Bott, 28. A copy of the parish register of Pitminster was produced. "Christenings, 1735, John, son of John Every and Mary his wife, baptized Dec. 5." And one of the witnesses swore that the pauper lived many years ago with him; that John Every, who lived in Pitminster, and died long since, was considered as the pauper's father; and that he knew Mary Every, who lives in Pitminster, and whom he understood to be the pauper's mother, and has heard the pauper call her mother. Lord Mansfield, C. J. seemed to think, and so it was afterwards determined, that this evidence was sufficient.

Illegitimate children.

Evidence of bastardy after the mother's death, by the father, who contradicted his own assertions made during the mother's life, that he had been married.

St. Peter's v. Old Swinford, Burr. S. C. 25. The son of J. H. was removed from St. Peter's to Old Swinford, as a bastard, born there of Hannah Ashe. Order quashed. Case:—J. H., the father, proved that for seven years together he travelled with H. A., as wandering persons, till the death of H. A., about fifteen weeks since; during that time they cohabited as man and wife, and it did not appear that the marriage was ever questioned in the lifetime of H. A. During the time she was delivered of three children, one of whom, the pauper, was born in O. S. They were reputed to be his children, and the pauper was baptized as the legitimate child of him and H. A. He and H. A. were never married. The sessions were of opinion that the evidence of J. H. was not admissible to bastardize the pauper. Lord Hardwicke, C. J. "There is no ground to support the order of sessions. It is an apparent fact, that this man and this woman were never married. The evidence of the man is admissible to prove this fact. The child is therefore a bastard, and must be settled where born."

Parents may prove that they were never married.

In Rex v. Bramley, 6 T. R. 330, the sessions refused to receive the mother as a witness, to prove that she never had been married, or had been illegally married; and also the declarations of the father and mother to that effect, they having cohabited together, and been reputed as man and wife till the death of the father. But Lord Kenyon, C. J. held that this evidence was certainly admissible: that parents may be called to prove the children illegitimate. But he observed that such evidence was open to very great observation.

It had been doubted whether, after thirty years cohabitation as man and wife, the husband shall be permitted to deny his marriage.

Rex v. Stockland, Burr. S. C. 508; 2 Bott, 91. Case:—John Moes and Elizabeth Mason, father and mother of the pauper, being both resident in Chardland, about 1723, went from thence together, declaring they were going to be married, and soon returned, declaring they had been married; and from thenceforward cohabited as man and wife for about thirty years, until the death of Elizabeth. The pauper was born at Chardland in 1725, and there baptized, and his baptism registered as the son of John and Elizabeth Moes. John and Elizabeth Moes, some years before the death of Elizabeth, removed from Chardland to Stockland, and there acquired a settlement. They carried with them the pauper, whose settlement depended upon this question, viz. "whether John and Elizabeth were to be considered as husband and wife at the time of his birth?" It was contended at the sessions that they were never married; or, if they were, that Elizabeth had a former husband then living. Concerning which, several witnesses having been examined on both sides, John Moes, the father, was produced, in order to prove that he and Elizabeth were never married, and that the supposed other husband was then living. But the court refused to receive his testimony, and were of opinion that the marriage of John and Elizabeth was proved, and that the pauper gained a settlement at Stockland. Lord Mansfield, C. J. seemed to think that thirty years cohabitation as man and wife was sufficient proof to the justices to found an order of removal upon. However, a rule was made to show cause; but on the last day of term the objection was given up, and, by consent, the order of sessions was affirmed.

Rex v. Luffe, 8 East, 193. An order of bastardy was made, adjudging M. Taylor to be the mother of a bastard child: and the order stated her to be the wife of J. T., and that it appeared as well on the oath of the said M. T., as otherwise, that her husband had been beyond the seas, and that she did not see her said husband, or had access to him, from, &c. &c., and that her husband returned only fourteen days before the birth, and adjudging as well on the oath of the said M. T. as otherwise, the said H. L. to be the reputed father of the said bastard child. One point was, that the wife was admitted to prove non-access, which, it was contended, ought not to have been. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The wife might prove the fact of her connection with that person whom she charged as being the real father of the child. And the whole of the judgment of the C. J. and the other judges went upon the supposition that she was not a witness to the fact of non-access, but only to the fact of criminal connection; and that the words 'as otherwise' implied that other persons were examined on oath. The second point discussed in the case is not material in this place. The third point was, that the non-access of the husband ought to have been proved during the whole time of pregnancy." In answer to this, it was said by the court, that natural impossibility, the being within the age of puberty, and great infirmity, would bastardize the issue though the husband had access. And that it was always a matter of evidence, whether the husband could, by possibility, be the father of the child. But they left in full force the rule of law, that marriage before the birth made the after-born child, the conception of which commenced before marriage, the legitimate child of the parties marrying. (See tit. "Bastard," Vol. I.)

3. Evidence of Settlement by Birth.

The wife may prove the fact of connection with the person she charges as the father of the child.

In Rex v. Kea, 11 East, 132, the sessions received the evidence of a person who had been the wife of the father (since deceased) of the pauper, and was now the wife of another, to prove that her first husband had not had access to her during a certain period, viz. at the time of the conception of the pauper, and for many months before. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "that to hold this evidence receivable, would be to overthrow Rex v. Reading, which were not meant to be overruled in Rex v. Luffe; the court intending in that case that the wife had only been examined to the facts she might legally prove, and not to the non-access of the husband. And the court also said that the death of the husband made no difference. Where the husband is within the realm, it is not incumbent on the party alleging bastardy to prove that the husband could not, by any possibility, have had access to the wife; it is sufficient to adduce such circumstantial evidence as satisfies the minds of the jury. The removal of the husband to a place distant from the wife, her cohabiting with another man, and the fact that the son, whose legitimacy is questioned, took the name of the latter from his birth, and which he and his descendants afterwards retained, is strong evidence of illegitimacy.

But not the non-access of the husband.

Goodright v. Saul, 4 T. R. 356. A parish may also be estopped by a certificate acknowledging the bastard to be settled with them. (See ante, 282, 3, 4.)

2. Derived from the Mother, 290.
3. Of Emancipation, 292.

1. Derived from the Father.

Legitimate children derive their settlement from their parents.

I. DERIVED FROM THE FATHER.

Settlement by parentage, and settlement by marriage, form the two species of what are called derivative settlements, and it was only legitimate children who could acquire a settlement by parentage; for a bastard, according to Holt, C. J., has no father, or rather none that the law looks upon as such, and consequently can derive no settlement from the relation of child and parent. (Hard's Case, 2 Salk. 427.)

And now 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 57, enacts, "That every man who from and after the passing of this act shall marry a woman having a child or children at the time of such marriage, whether such child or children be legitimate or illegitimate, shall be liable to maintain such child or children as a part of his family, and shall be chargeable with all relief, or the cost price thereof, granted to or on account of such child or children until such child or children shall respectively attain the age of sixteen, or until the death of the mother of such child or children; and such child or children shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed a part of such husband's family accordingly." It has been considered by the poor law commissioners that that introduced a material alteration. As the law formerly stood, the settlement of a second husband was not communicated to the family of the wife by a former husband; but under the new act it is otherwise, during the continuance of the marriage, as will appear by the following communication from the poor law commissioners, which has been received by the several magistrates:—"The commissioners desire to state to you their opinion that the settlement of the second husband is communicated, during the continuance of the marriage, to the family of the first, until one of the contingencies pointed out by the 57th section of the Poor Law Amendment Act occurs, viz. 'until such child or children shall respectively attain the age of sixteen, or until the death of the mother of such child or children.' In either of these cases occurring, it is the opinion of the commissioners that such children revert to their former, that is, their father's settlement, which has been suspended whilst they formed a part of the second husband's family."

It seems to have been erroneously thought at one time, that if a legitimate child were born whilst the parents were in a state of vagrancy, or in a parish different from that in which the parents were settled, or was born an idiot, that it was settled where born. (Ib.; Coxwell v. Shillingsford, Fost. 313; Fol. 269.)

But the rule is, that a legitimate child is only entitled to a settlement where it is born, in case the parents have no settlement, or none that is known in this country. This applies to foreigners who come into England and have children here—they themselves having acquired no settlement. But in the case of children of Irish and Scotch parents, and forming part of the family of such parents, they are not to be relieved in the place of their birth if their parents become chargeable, but must be removed with their parents to Ireland or Scotland, under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33.

If a father whose settlement is in A. removes to B. and before he has gained a settlement there, has a son born in B., the son is settled in A. But if the father gain a new settlement either in B. or any other parish, he gains it for his son as well as for himself, so long as the son remains part of his family, or is (as it is called) unemancipated. Such was the judgment of Holt, C. J. in Cumner v. Milton, 2 Salk. 528; where a man settled at Cumner and having several children born in that parish, afterwards removed to Milton with his children and gained a settlement there, where he becoming chargeable, the justices erroneously supposed the children were removable to Cumner, and made an order accordingly, which was quashed.

Children, wherever born, take their parents' settlement, and each successive settlement acquired by him.

St. Giles's, Reading, v. Eversly, Blackwater, 1 Stra. 580; 2 Ld. Raym. 1332. It was ruled by all the court, that where a father gains a second settlement after the birth of his child, that settlement is immediately communicated to the child. And a child may be sent to the place of his father's settlement without ever having been there before.

And in Sowton v. Sydbury, Andr. 345, Lee, C. J. said, "The true distinction, I think, is, that where children have gained no settlement, but continue part of their father's family, they shall follow their father's settlement."

The death of the father before the child is born will not defeat its right to a settlement where the father was last settled before his death. (Rex v. Clifton, Vin. Abr. 382; 2 Bott, 38.)

Rex v. Stone, 6 T. R. 56. M., the wife of T. Davenport, and her infant daughter, were removed from Stone to Leighford in Staffordshire. The sessions quashed the order, stating that T. had left his wife and family for three quarters of a year, during which time she had not heard of him, nor had he since been in either township. The settlement of T.'s father was in Leighford, but T. himself was not born there, and it did not appear by any evidence that he had gained any settlement in his own right. It was further stated, that the removal had been made without any examination of Thomas, the husband of Mary, and that due diligence had not been used by the respondents to find him out. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "That there was nothing in the case; that the evidence produced was legal evidence, and if not contradicted, sufficient to establish the settlement in Leighford; but that the sessions seemed to have thought it indispensably necessary to procure further evidence, in which they were mistaken." The order of sessions was therefore quashed.

Rex v. St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green, Burr. S. C. 482; 2 Bott, 54. A man whose settlement was not known, married a woman who was settled in the precinct of St. Katherine's; they had a son born in Bethnal Green, which son married a woman settled in St. Leonard, Shoreditch, and had several children by her. It was argued that these children ought to follow the acquired settlement of their mother, and not their father's, which was only a derivative one from their grandmother, who had married a Frenchman, who had no settlement. But the court said, that there is no difference between an acquired and a derivative settlement. And the rule laid down was this: that the child's settlement follows that of its father, if its father's can be found, and that no recourse shall be had to the mother's settlement, till that of the father can be traced no further. And these children were adjudged to be settled at St. Katherine's.

Rex v. St. Mary, Cardigan, 6 T. R. 116. E. J., her daughter M., and J. and J. J., sons of her husband by a former wife, were removed from St. Mary, Cardigan, to L. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper's husband was settled in L.: he was convicted of sheep-stealing in 1770, and sentenced to death, but before execution he escaped from gaol. Two years afterwards he returned to Cardigan, and continued there till 1792; during that time he married, and his wife had by him John, one of the persons removed; on her decease he married the pauper C., and had the pauper Mary: he afterwards absconded in 1792. The wife's settlement before marriage was in St. Mary, Cardigan. It was argued that the father's settlement was destroyed by his attainder. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "A settlement is not the property of any man; it cannot escheat, neither can it be called a franchise: in the case of a franchise it was rightly decided, that by attainder the franchise was lost, and that the party had no right to vote at an election. But this person was before his attainder settled in the parish to which the paupers were removed, and I think that the father's settlement was communicated to them. It would be another question whether the man himself could acquire a settlement after the attainder."

Rex v. Haddenham, 15 East, 463. Removal of E. Hill, from Thame to Haddenham, was confirmed. Case:—E. Hill was born in Thame, in May, Vol. IV.

1. Derived from the Father.

Where the father gains a settlement after the child's birth, the child takes it also.

Therefore a child may be removed with the father to his settlement, though it have never been there before.

A child born after the father's death follows his settlement.

Proof of the father's settlement will establish the settlement of the child, if nothing appear to the contrary.

The children take the father's settlement, derived from their grandmother, in preference to that of their own mother.

The settlement of a parent, acquired before his attainder, is communicated to his children born afterwards.

A settlement not a property.

A convicted felon, discharged under the sign manual, may acquire a settlement by purchase.

1791, and at the time of her birth the settlement of her father, S. Hill, was in Thame. She had not acquired any settlement in her own right. In 1790, S. Hill was convicted of horse-stealing, and received sentence of death. An instrument, under the sign manual, was then produced, which recited that S. Hill had been convicted of horse-stealing, and had sentence of death passed upon him; and that the king was induced to grant him a free pardon; and it directed S. Hill to be forthwith discharged out of custody, and that he be inserted in the next general pardon that shall come out for the Oxford circuit, without any condition whatsoever. Given, &c. By his majesty's command, W. W. Grenville. Search had been made in the office of the clerk of assize of the Oxford circuit, and it did not appear that any general pardon including S. Hill had been made out: it did not appear, by any evidence, that any general pardon, including S. Hill, or any special pardon to him under the great seal, had been granted. Pursuant to the direction of the instrument under the sign manual, (a) S. Hill was shortly after discharged, and has been since at large unmolested. In 1803, S. Hill purchased, for 100 guineas, two cottages in Haddenham, copyhold of inheritance, held of the manor of H., which were surrendered to the use of S. Hill, his heirs and assigns, and he was admitted tenant thereof, according to the custom of the said manor, and took possession of and resided on the premises so purchased by him, and still continues to reside on part thereof, and has sold and surrendered the remainder. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "The point raised is of some doubt, and of more general importance than usually arises on settlement cases. In the form of it a purchase was made, which satisfies the terms of 9 Geo. I. c. 7, s. 5, 'that no person shall acquire any settlement in any parish for or by virtue of any purchase of any estate or interest in such parish, whereof the consideration for such purchase doth not amount to 30*l.* bonâ fide paid for any longer time than such person shall inhabit in such estate,' &c. Now this was in its form a purchase for more than 30*l.*, and he resided on it for more than forty days, and he has not been removed from it. Who then was in a condition to remove him for the forty days? The lord, who has, by admitting, accepted him for his tenant, (even if he could, after that admission, object to him,) has not objected. If the lord had no notice of the objection at the time of the admission, I do not mean to say that he was afterwards precluded from making the objection; but he has not in fact objected, and the tenant has now continued for nine years in possession; and, by the statute of limitations, part of the rents, issues, and profits, can be no longer recovered from him; so that if he had a defeasible estate during the first forty days, he has held the estate undefeated for more than that period, which cannot now be impeached. And whether or not the crown could have impeached his title, he has now held the estate under a title, not defeated for above forty days." The other judges assented. Order confirmed.

2. DERIVED FROM THE MOTHER.

2. Derived from the mother.

The child's settlement follows that of its father, whether acquired by his own act or derived from his parents, till it can be traced no further; recourse shall then be had to the settlement of the mother.

Rex v. St. Mary, Leicester, 5 Nev. & Man. 215. A prima facie case of settlement, by evidence of the place of birth of the pauper, may be answered by proof of the maiden settlement of his mother, without showing that his father had no settlement.

Berkhamstead v. St. Mary, North Church, 2 Sess. Ca. 182; 2 Bott, 51. The father ran away, and the mother went and resided on an estate devised to her. One question was whether the children could gain a settlement by residing with the mother (a) on such estate, where the father had never lived? Lord Hardwicke, C. J. held, "That as it did not appear that the father was dead, the court must suppose him to be living; and in such case the children could gain no settlement but what was derived from their father."

Rex v. Westerham, Fol. 252; 2 Bott, 108. An Englishman, whose settlement was not known, married, had a child, and ran away: the child was then nine years of age. By the court: "The mother and children ought to be settled where the mother was settled before marriage."

St. Giles's v. St. Margaret's, Fol. 251; 2 Bott, 107. S. E., with her daughter, aged five years, was removed from St. Margaret's to St. Giles's, as being the place of their mother's settlement before her marriage, she having married an Irishman who had no settlement. And it was adjudged that her daughter should be settled with her mother in St. Giles's, where her mother's settlement was before marriage. (S. P. St. Botolph v. St. John's, Burr. S. C. 367; 2 Bott, 109).

Rex v. St. Paul's, Shadwell, 2 Sess. Ca. 113. Resolved by Eyre and Fortescue, Js., that where the father, being a foreigner, had no settlement, the children should have the benefit of their mother's settlement; for that her right should descend to them, and they should not be sent to the place of their birth.

St. George's v. St. Katherine's, Ld. Raym. 1474; 2 Bott, 47. A man settled in St. Katherine's married, and had six children born there, and died. After his death, the widow went into St. George's with her children, and rented a house of 12l. a-year, and lived in it with her children four months. The question was, whether the children should have the settlement of the mother in St. George's? And the whole court were of opinion that they followed the mother's newly-acquired settlement. Parker, C. J. "There is no distinction between the settlement of children with the father or mother; for they are as much her's as the father's, and nature obliges her, as much as the father, to provide for them; so does the law: and every argument that holds for their settlement with the father, holds as to their settlement with the mother. The reason why children shall not gain a settlement where the widow gains a settlement only by intermarriage is, because it is then not her family, but her husband's; and she cannot give the children any sustenance without the husband's leave. But in this case, since she is equally punishable with her husband for deserting her children, and therefore could not leave them behind her, they must gain a settlement with her."

Woodend v. Paulspury, 2 Ld. Raym. 1473; 2 Stra. 746. J. Buncher was settled at Woodend, and died, leaving a widow and one daughter, aged 14 years. The widow removed to Paulspury, into a messuage of her own for life, and took her daughter with her, and the daughter lived with her there two years. And the question was, whether the daughter gained a settlement at Paulspury? And it was judged that she did; because the mother being a widow, having gained a new settlement after her husband's death, the daughter gained a settlement also as part of her family. And there is no difference between a father's gaining a settlement and a mother's, in such cases as this; for the mother is obliged to provide for her children after her husband's death, as the father was when living; and she could not leave this daughter behind her, neither could she be removed from her.

Barton Turfe v. Happisburg, Burr. S. C. 49; 2 Bott, 52. T. Man being settled in Barton Turfe died. After his death his widow removed to Happisburg, and occupied lands there, devised to her by her father. Her daughter, of the age of thirteen years, lived with her mother as part of her family for a year and a half. By the court: "The daughter gained a new settlement in Happisburg, by living with her mother there, as part of her family, upon the mother's own estate. For a child may gain a settlement

2. Derived from the Mother.

Father having no known settlement and run away, the child shall be settled with the mother.

So where the father was an Irishman, having no settlement.

So where the father was a foreigner.

Children follow the settlement of the mother, acquired after the death of the father, and during her widowhood.

Same point.

Same point.

(a) The mother herself could gain no settlement by this estate, as her husband was living, and as he had not resided on the estate at all, no settlement in that parish could be derived from him in that parish.

2. Derived from the Mother.

But if the mother gain a subsequent settlement by intermarriage, the children by the first marriage will not follow such settlement.

under its mother after the father's death, equally as under its father whilst alive. The mother's settlement has the same effect upon the child as the father's had."

Same point, Rex v. Oulton, 2 Burr, S. C. 64; 2 Bott, 53.

Wangford v. Brandon, Carth. 449; 2 Salk. 482. Three men of Wangford married three widows of Brandon, each of which widows had children by their former husbands, some under seven, some above seven years of age. It was holden that the children did not gain a settlement in Wangford, nor were removable thither, to charge that parish. As to the nurse children, they indeed might be sent thither for nurture only; yet still Brandon must relieve them there, and not Wangford. But the children above the age of seven years ought not to be removed at all, being settled inhabitants of Brandon; and the removal of the mother shall have no influence on the settlement of her children.

In Cumner v. Milton (ante, 288), it was said that if, after the death of the father, the mother marry again to a husband who is settled in another parish, this is an accidental settlement of the mother, and as she is now become one person with him, shall not gain a settlement for her children.

Same point.

St. Giles's in the Fields v. St. Clement's, Burr. S. C. 2; 2 Bott, 49. J. M., the pauper, was an infant of nine years of age. His father's settlement was not known: his mother's settlement before their marriage was known: his father died: his mother married a second husband, who had a settlement; and she gained a new settlement by this second marriage. By the court: "J. M.'s settlement is where his mother was last settled before her marriage with J.'s father; the new-gained settlement of his mother not being gained in her own right, but only in right of her second husband." And in this case the court agreed, that where children are sent with their mother for nurture, they are to be supported at the expense of the parish where their legal settlement is.

But now every man who marries a woman having children, legitimate or illegitimate, is liable to maintain them till they are sixteen, or the mother dies; and for the purpose of the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 76, they are to be deemed part of his family. (Id. S. 57, Appendix.)

3. OF EMANCIPATION.

3. Of emancipation.

A child will follow each newly-acquired settlement of his parents so long as he continues a member of the family, that is, until he is emancipated, and no longer. In case the father have no settlement, the mother is the head of the family, for the purpose of communicating a settlement to the children, or subordinate members thereof; and she assumes the same rank, with the like capacity to confer the same privilege, after the death of her husband, who had a settlement, until she herself becomes again a subordinate member of another family, by contracting a fresh marriage.

General rule for children under twenty-one.

Emancipation is effected when the child ceases to be a subordinate member of his father's or mother's family. This may be accomplished in various ways, but the rule laid down by Lord Tenterden supplies a safe criterion by which to ascertain when the emancipation is complete. His lordship, in Rex v. Wilmington, (1 D. & R. 140; 5 B. & Ald. 525,) said, "It is of importance to lay down a general rule for the guidance of magistrates on the subject of emancipation, and the best which I can suggest is this, 'that during the minority of a child there can be no emancipation unless he marries, and so becomes himself the head of a family, or contracts some other relation, so as wholly and permanently to exclude the parental control.' I say nothing about his acquiring a settlement of his own, because that does not, as it seems to me, properly fall under this head. There can be, however, no question, that in that case he is only removable to his own acquired settlement. Here the pauper was under twenty-one, and had neither married nor contracted any such relation as I have described at the time when his father had acquired the settlement at Bow. He was, therefore, not emancipated." See also Rex v. Oulton, 3 Nev. & Man. 62.

To the same effect is the rule laid down by Lord Kenyon, in Rex v.

Roach, (6 T. R. 247.) "The rule to be extracted from the cases is this: if the child be separated from the parents, and without marrying or obtaining any settlement for himself, return to them again during the age of pupillage, he is to all intents a part of his father's family, and his settlement will vary with that of his father; but if, when that time arrives when, in estimation of law, the child wants no further protection from the father, the child remove from the father's family, he is not, for the purpose of a derivative settlement, to be deemed part of that family; this rule will reconcile all the cases, and will be found to be an intelligible one."

Subject to the above exceptions of marriage, and the acquiring a settlement of his own, it may be further stated that, "during the minority of the child he will remain, under almost any circumstances, unemancipated; but where a new settlement is acquired by the parent after the child has attained the age of twenty-one, it will not be communicated to the child unless in fact the child continues part of the family. Where therefore at that period he is absent, employed in gaining a livelihood for himself, or serving in the militia, he no longer remains a member of the family."—Lord Tenterden. Rex v. Hardwick, 5 B. & A. 176.

An infant then will be emancipated by marriage; by acquiring a settlement. But absence from in any service, and independence of, his parents, and return to the parental control before twenty-one, does not emancipate him.

Adults may be emancipated by actual separation, or by remaining separate after coming of age.

Although it is said that the acquisition of a settlement by a child does not properly fall under the head of emancipation, yet as it has been generally classed under that title, the decisions upon that point are enumerated here.

Rex v. Much Cowarne, 2 B. & Ad. 861. J. Yarnold was removed from Great Wittley to Much Cowarne. Order confirmed. The pauper was born in 1793, and was always an idiot. He and his parents resided in Great Wittley, the place of his father's settlement, till 1822, when the mother died. In 1824 the father left the pauper (then 31 years old) in Wittley, and hired himself as servant, and in 1826 married a second wife, and then went to Much Cowarne, and resided there upon some property belonging to his second wife until her death in 1830, and there gained a settlement. After the father left Wittley he never returned to it, but the overseers took care of the pauper and never applied to the father for any assistance or remuneration for what they paid. The sessions found that the pauper was incapable of taking care of himself through imbecility of mind at the time of the separation from his father, seven years since, and that previously he was not emancipated from the same cause. Lord Tenterden, "The general rule is, that until a child reaches twenty-one he is not emancipated, unless he becomes the head of a family or gains a settlement; but if after twenty-one, he separates himself from his father's family, he is emancipated. Why is twenty-one the period thus fixed by the law? Because at that age the party is presumed by law to be competent to take the management of his own affairs. Here the pauper never was and never will be competent to do so. The reason therefore for which that period was fixed fails upon other cases wholly fails in this." Parke, J. "If the pauper were a minor, he would continue unemancipated. Now it is found that he is incapable of maintaining and taking care of himself, he must therefore be considered in the same situation as if he had remained a minor." Taunton, J. "The rule has been correctly stated to be, that where a party after twenty-one separates from his father's family and can provide for himself, and requires no further protection, he is emancipated. That rule does not apply here." Patteson, J. "The words in Rex v. Hardwick, (supra) must apply only to a member of the family capable of supporting himself." Order confirmed.

3. Of Emancipation.

General rule for adults.

An idiot is always a minor and not emancipated.

So also where a child was rendered incapable of work by her hands being burnt off, she followed her father's settlement, although she continued in the workhouse after twenty-one. (Rex v. Broadhembury, 4 Doug. 241.)

3. Of Emancipation.

Marriage by a son of age, is, of itself, an emancipation, although he continue to reside with his father's family.

1. Emancipation by Marriage.

Rex v. Everton, 1 East, 526. The pauper's father was settled in E. and resided there from 1779 to 1790, with his family, including the pauper. In 1782, the pauper, then twenty-two years of age, married, still living in the family of the father as part of it: in 1783 his wife died. The pauper still continued with his father. In 1790 he removed with his father to Great Barford, and while the pauper continued there with the father, the father acquired a settlement there. In 1796 the pauper married again, still continuing with his father, and had children, but he gained no settlement in his own right. The pauper and his family were removed from G. B. to E., and the sessions affirmed the order; considering that the pauper was emancipated by the first marriage. And Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "The sessions could not intend more by the statement that he continued a part of his father's family, than to inform us that locally and personally the pauper lived in the same house with his father, and took his fare at the same board with him; but they wish to be informed, whether that so far constituted him in point of law one of his father's family under the circumstances, as that after his marriage he would follow a newly acquired settlement of the father, and I am of opinion that it did not." Order affirmed.

Before this case, separation from the family, as well as marriage, seems to have been thought requisite.

Eastwoodhay v. Westwoodhay, 1 Stra. 438; 2 Bott, 57. Thomas Baker, the father of the pauper, in 1699 purchased a copyhold estate of 11l. a year in Westwoodhay, whither he and his family and servants removed, and staid there till 1716: in 1716 he purchased a cottage of 1l. 12s. 6d. a year in Eastwoodhay, and went and lived upon it till his death; but Robert his son, the pauper, who in 1716 was of age, staid behind in Westwoodhay, where he married, and had worked ever since on his own account. Pratt, C. J. "The question is not, where this man and his family are settled, but whether there appears a settlement of him in Eastwoodhay? If he had gone thither with his father, as part of the family, possibly it might have been a settlement of him there: but by staying behind, he was divided from his father, and therefore there is no colour to make it a settlement in Eastwoodhay. I think his settlement is in Westwoodhay, which was the last place where he lived as part of his father's family." To which the rest of the Court agreed.

St. Michael's Coslany in Norwich v. St. Matthew's in Ipswich, 2 Sess. C. 129; 2 Stra. 831; 2 Bott, 58. E. Williams, Anne his wife, and E., S., and A., children of the said E., the father, were removed from St. Michael in Norwich, to St. Matthew in Ipswich. Case:—Edmund Williams, the grandfather, was settled at Shepton Mallet and removed to Bruton, with a certificate from Shepton Mallet, where Edmund the son was born; he continued there with his father till he was nineteen years of age. Then E. the son left his father and came to Norwich, and there he married two wives; by the first he had E. the grandson; and ten years after his wife died. Then he married Anne, his now wife, by whom he had S. and A., two other children; since whose birth, about two years ago, E. Williams, the grandfather, gained a new settlement at St. Matthew's, Ipswich: but Edmund the son hath never lived with his father at Ipswich, or any where else, since he lived with him at Bruton. Mr. J. Reynolds, "I do not see how the father can gain a settlement for the son, nineteen years after the son has left him." Lord Raymond, C. J. "I think it odd, that an old man of sixty, who has left his father for forty years, shall follow the settlement of his father as often as his father removes. In the case of young children it is otherwise; for they cannot be severed from their parents because of nurture." And per Cur. "The reason why we inquire into the ages of children is, because if they are grown up, and above seven years old, they may gain a settlement by their own act: but it is almost a contradiction in terms to say, that a man, who has left his father forty years, shall follow the settlement of his father."

Bugden v. Ampthill, Burr. S. C. 270; 2 Bott, 60. J. G., the father of the

A son is emancipated by the father's removing to another parish and the son remaining behind and marrying, and his settlement will be in the parish where he and his father last lived together.

A son at nineteen, leaving his father and going into another parish and marrying, is emancipated, and his children can derive no settlement from their grandfather.

Marriage and pauper, came by certificate from R. to A. They remained together at A., under the certificate, till the pauper came of age. After which, the pauper married in A., and left his father, and lived there with his wife and children, distinct from his father, till removed by this order. Three years after the marriage the father removed to B. and there gained a settlement, but the pauper never lived there. And it was held that "the pauper ceased to be part of his father's family, upon his marrying and living separate and distinct from his father."

Same point in Rex v. Heath, 5 T. R. 583, and Rex v. Mortlake, 6 East, 397. See post, Certificate.

Rex v. Walpole, St. Peter's, Burr. S. C. 638; 1 Bla. Rep. 669. The pauper being settled at Outwell as part of his father's family, enlisted for a soldier, and continued in the service four years; after his discharge he came home to his father, who had removed from Outwell, and then lived at Walpole, and rented and occupied a farm there of about 50*l.* a year, and continued there with his father about twelve or fourteen weeks, and afterwards worked at different places as a labourer, till he was removed by an order from Wisbech to Walpole. He had never gained any settlement of his own. The sessions confirmed the order. But both the orders were quashed by the court, no cause being shown.

It does not appear whether the pauper was under age or not at the time of the discharge, and therefore the case is of very little authority; for it is clear that if the return to the father's family be while the son is still a minor, the emancipation is not complete. See Rex v. Rotherfield Greys, post, 297; and Rex v. Whitehaven, ante, 99.

Rex v. Stanwix, 5 T. R. 670. Jane and Isabella Campbell, and the five children of Isabella, were removed from St. Mary's, Carlisle, to Stanwix. Order confirmed. Case: Jane (since dead) was the widow of A. Campbell, a Scotchman: Isabella is the widow of W. Campbell, the son of Alexander and Jane; and the five children are the children of William and Isabella. Alexander became seised of a messuage and tenement in Stanwix by descent, upon which he resided upwards of a year, about 1774 and 1775. Some time before, and until the premises in Stanwix descended to Alexander, he resided in Scotland, where William, about nineteen years of age, enlisted and left his father's family in Scotland, which was some years before the above premises descended to his father. William, after having been for some time beyond the seas as a soldier, returned to England, (his father being then dead,) and married the pauper Isabella at Plymouth, and went beyond sea again as a soldier, and at the end of two years returned again to England; and he came to Rickergate quarter, adjoining to Stanwix, where he lived six years, and then removed into St. Mary's, where he lived four years, but never acquired any settlement by any act of his own. Alexander sold part of the estate in Stanwix in his lifetime, and resided upon the residue, consisting of a house and garden of the yearly value of 2*l.* 5*s.* till his death, which premises he devised to Jane his wife for life, and after her death to William his son, his heirs and assigns for ever. But William never became possessed thereof, nor resided thereon, having died in the life-time of Jane, who, after her husband's death, continued to reside upon the premises for several years, when she removed to her son in St. Mary's, about four years ago, and continued to live with him there till his death, and afterwards with his widow, until Jane herself died in January last. And it being urged, that in Rex v. Cold Ashton it was said that a child cannot be emancipated unless he has gained a settlement of his own, for that until that time the derivative settlement of his parents is not abandoned, Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "that means as long as the son continues a part of his father's family. But here the son was emancipated when the father acquired a settlement in Stanwix; (b) he had ceased to be a part of his father's family some years before, and had put himself under the control and government of others; and it is immaterial living separate from the father, amounts to emancipation.

A son enlisted for a soldier, and was absent four years, and then returned to his father: Held to be emancipated.

Where the son enlists as a soldier, and thereby puts himself under the control of others, it is an emancipation. (a)

(a) But see how this doctrine is limited and explained by the subsequent cases.

(b) At which time it appears by the facts that the son was of full age and a soldier.

3. Of Emancipation.

Serving in the militia is not, of itself, an emancipation, although he continues after twenty one. (a) whether or not he had gained a settlement for himself. The case of Rex v. Walpole (ante, 295), where the son had enlisted himself as a soldier, was considered so clearly to be the case of an emancipation, that it was not even argued." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Woburn, 8 T. R. 479. J. Williams, the father of T. Williams, the pauper, previous to 1756 was settled with his family at Leighton Buzzard. The pauper was born in that parish and baptized there in 1756. In 1763 J. W., with his family (including T. W.) removed to Woburn, and gained a settlement there in 1774. In 1772, previous to such settlement, the pauper entered into the militia with the consent of his father, then a serjeant in the same militia; the pauper continued therein a drummer till he was twenty-three years of age: during which time his pay was received by his father. From the time of the pauper's entering into the militia until the year 1788, when he married, he lived in his father's family, except at the times when he and his father were absent upon duty in the militia. He was removed from L. B. to Woburn, and the sessions affirmed the order. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The argument that has been used in support of the present rule, if it proves any thing, proves too much; for it tends to show that if a child be for any period of time, however short, under any other control than that of the father, he is thereby emancipated from his father's family. That is the case of every private in the militia, even in time of peace; he is subject to military control during a part of the year, and therefore not under the father's control during that time; and yet it was contended that such a person is by that means emancipated. A drummer is generally taken at a very early period of life, and if he only continue in that situation for twenty-four hours, he is, it is said, emancipated from his father, he is to be taken from the protection of his father, and if his father is removed elsewhere, the child is to remain unprotected. The proposition is monstrous. In Rex v. Walpole St. Peter's (ante, 295), the court proceeded on this ground, that he was engaged to serve for life, and was liable to be sent into foreign countries. But a son is not emancipated by the circumstance of his being under some other control than that of his father. For in Rex v. Halifax (post 301), where the son served an apprenticeship for four years, it was decided that he was not emancipated. There may be two kinds of control: a son may be under the control of his father and also under the control of the law; as if he be ordered to assist a constable in the execution of his duty, that is a temporary control. I am, therefore, of opinion that this pauper was not emancipated from his father at the time when the latter gained a settlement at W." Grose, J. Of the same opinion, as it appeared that he was only sixteen years of age when he entered; that he did so with his father's consent, a serjeant in the same militia; that his father received his pay: and that till he married he lived in his father's family. Le Blanc, J., said, "That in Rex v. Walpole St. Peter's, the son was totally independent of his father for four years." He added, "suppose he had engaged to live as a servant unto a farmer in the neighbourhood for six months, he would during that time have been under the control of his master, but on returning to his father's family he would again become subject to his father's control and would not have been emancipated."

A person serving in the militia when he comes of age is emancipated.

Rex v. Hardwick, 5 B. & Ald. 176. Removal from Stanton Harcourt to Hardwick. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was born in Hardwick, and resided there as a part of the family of his father, who was settled there. In 1817, when the pauper was eighteen years of age, he was drawn for the militia, and served therein for five years as a balloted man, the regiment during that period being embodied and in actual service. He joined the regiment in 1808, and in 1809, having obtained a furlough for three weeks,

(a) It will be observed, that in Rex v. Woburn the pauper remained with the father's family during the whole period when he was on duty as a militia-man, and then when he was on duty he was still in some sense under the parental control, the father being in the same service and receiving his pay. In Rex v. Hardwick these facts did not exist, and this seems to be the ground of distinction between the two cases.

he returned to the house of his father, who was still residing at Hardwick, and lived with him for about a fortnight. In 1811 the pauper obtained a second furlough for a fortnight, and went again to his father's, who was then residing in Stanton Harcourt, where he remained for about twelve days. The pauper was discharged from the militia in 1813, when he returned to his father in Stanton Harcourt, who gave him lodgings in his house till his marriage. After the pauper's return from the militia, and before his marriage, his father gained a settlement in Stanton Harcourt. Abbot, C. J. "The rule of law is, that every new settlement acquired by the parent is communicated to the children so long as they remain members of his family; and the question in this case is, whether at the time the father gained his settlement in Stanton Harcourt, this pauper remained a member of his family. Now, during the minority of the child, he will remain almost under any circumstances unemancipated; but where the new settlement is acquired by the parent after the child has attained twenty-one, it will not be communicated unless the child in fact continues part of the family. Where therefore at that period he is absent, employed in gaining a livelihood for himself, or serving, as in this case in the militia, I think he no longer remains a member of the family. In the present case, I think that the sessions have come to a right conclusion, in deciding that the legal settlement of the pauper was at Hardwick." Bayley, J. "If a child be separated from his father's family, and does not return till after twenty-one, he ceases to be a member of that family, and consequently his settlement will not, after twenty-one, shift with that of his father. I think therefore that the sessions are right, and that this case is hardly distinguishable from Rex v. Walpole St. Peter's." Holroyd, J. "The distinction between a compulsory and a voluntary separation seems to me to be immaterial. The case must follow the same rule as Rex v. Walpole St. Peter's." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Rotherfield Greys, 1 B. & C. 345; 2 D. & R. 268. Thomas Binfield was removed from Tooting Graveney to Rotherfield Greys. Order confirmed. Case:—In 1807, the pauper's father removed with his wife and family, including the pauper, to Tooting, and took a cottage there, which he has held ever since at 3s. per week. The pauper resided at Tooting with his parents till 1813, when he enlisted in the marines, and went abroad in that service. He remained in the marines till the 8th September, 1815, when in consequence of the reduction of that corps he received his discharge, and returned the same day to his parents at Tooting, being then under the age of twenty-one years, and resided with them from that time until some time after his father hired a stable in Streatham. About a year after the pauper's return home, the pauper being then more than twenty-one years of age, his father hired a stable in Streatham, at 4s. a week, which he held for about nine months, still continuing to reside at the cottage at Tooting. The cottage and the stable together were above the annual value of 10*l*. The pauper had never done any act to acquire a settlement for himself. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the pauper was not emancipated. In order to constitute emancipation, the party ought to be wholly and permanently free from the parental control. In this case, the pauper by enlisting into the marines, became subject to the control of the crown, and continued subject to that control as long as the period of his service continued; and if he had remained in the army till the age of twenty-one years, his emancipation would undoubtedly relate back to the time of his enlistment: but before he attained the age of twenty-one years, the relation between him and the crown ceased, and he returned to and constituted part of his father's family, and of course again became subject to the parental control. He, therefore, was not emancipated. This is consistent with the opinion of Lord Kenyon, C. J. and Lawrence, J. in Rex v. Roach (6 T. R. 247), with the general rule laid down by Lord Tenterden in Rex v. Wilmington and Rex v. Hardwick (ante, 296). The pauper therefore was not emancipated, and he acquires his father's settlement in Tooting." Holroyd, J. "By entering into the marines, the pauper ceased to be under the control of his father, and became subject to the control of the crown, as long as that state of circumstances continued. But before he attained the age of twenty-one, he ceased also to be under the control of the crown, returned to his father's family, and again became subject to his control, and consequently was not emancipated. It has been said, that this, being an engagement for life, constitutes in itself a complete and perfect emancipation. It was an engagement for life, so as to bind the pauper to serve for life, if required; but the duration of the service depends on the discretion of the crown." Best, J. "By the general policy of the law of England, the parental authority continues until the child attains the age of twenty-one years: but the same policy also requires that a minor shall be at liberty to contract an engagement to serve the state. When such an engagement is contracted, it becomes inconsistent with the duty which he owes to the public that the parental authority should continue. The parental authority, however, is suspended, but not destroyed. When the reason for its suspension ceases, the parental authority returns." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Bleasby, 3 B. & Ald. 377. Removal from Bleasby to Thurgarton. Order discharged. Case:—The pauper was born at Gonalstone, the place of his father's settlement, in June, 1785; and at thirteen years of age was hired and served for a year with J. Hind, of Gonalstone. When the pauper was about sixteen years of age, his father gained a settlement in Thurgarton by renting a tenement of the yearly value of 10*l.* on which the father continued to reside during the remainder of the pauper's minority, and the pauper continued during such period (that is, from about two years after the expiration of his service in Gonalstone, until he was twenty-one years of age,) to reside in his father's house at Thurgarton, working during the time as a journeyman frame-work knitter, and occasionally paying part of his earnings to his father, who was a labourer, as a compensation for his board. Abbott, C. J. "I take it to be settled law, that if a child acquire a settlement of his own, although he may afterwards during his minority return and live with his father's family, he does not follow the settlement of his father subsequently obtained. In this case the pauper did acquire a settlement by the hiring and service in Gonalstone, and after that time he derived his settlement no longer from his father, but from the contract of hiring." Bayley, J. "I cannot agree with what is stated in Rex v. Keel (a) (Cald. 144, cited post, 310), on this subject; and indeed the point was no part of the decision in that case. Both there and Rex v. Ingworth (8 Term R. 339, cited post, 310), the question was, whether a certificate was discharged by a hiring and service in the certifying parish. And the court held it was not, probably on the ground that it was better to hold that no settlement gained in the parish granting the certificate should affect the parish to whom it was granted, it not being a question into which the latter would be likely to inquire. These cases are only distinguishable from the present. The cases relating to certificated persons ought to be wholly laid out of the question. It has long been settled that the settlement of a child, who has acquired one of his own, does not shift with that of the father. It is said that the pauper has not gained a settlement of his own in Gonalstone, because he had one there before; but the words of 3 W. & M. expressly provide, that if an unmarried person shall so be hired and serve, he shall be judged and deemed to have a good settlement." Holroyd, J. "I can see no reason why a party should not gain a new settlement in the parish in which he had one before, where originally he had it in another right, as derived from his father, and subsequently in his own right, under the contract of hiring and service." Order confirmed.

If provision be made for a child under age, and independently of the parents, and the child lives away from the father's family, so that he exercises no superintendence or immediate actual control over the child, still this will not amount to an emancipation, as is established by the following cases."

(a) The dictum quoted in Rex v. Keel, settlement in the place where he was was "that the party can acquire no new settled before."

If a child gains a settlement in his own right, though in the parish in which he was previously settled by parentage, he is thereby emancipated.

Rex v. Tottington Lower End, Cald. 284; 2 Bott, 64. E. Holt, wife, and family, were removed from Broughton to Tottington Lower End, Lancashire. Order confirmed. The pauper was the son of T. Holt, who at the time of the pauper's birth was settled in Tottington. When he was seven years old his mother died, and he and his father went to live with his uncle in Pilkington; his father boarded; but his uncle, out of charity to his father, who had four other children, and to keep him off the town, took the pauper and provided for him meat, drink, lodging and clothes; in about eighteen months his father went to reside in the adjoining township of Ratcliffe, but the pauper continued with his uncle till he was ten years old, about which time his uncle's wife beat him (his uncle being from home), and he went to his father's house and stayed there about a fortnight; but his father not having a loom to accommodate him as a weaver, desired him to return to his uncle, which he did, and his uncle taught him to weave in the day, and sent him to school in the evenings; his uncle provided him with meat and clothing, and received the money he earned; he stayed with his uncle on these terms until he was sixteen years old; but from his first going to his uncle to that time, he now and then went to see his father at a holiday time or so, and sometimes stayed all night. When he was fourteen years old, his father came into Pilkington, and gained a new settlement there by renting 15*l.* a-year. The pauper considered his father's house as his proper home, because he was his father; and that he could have gone to him when he pleased, and his father would have received him. The father thought himself obliged to provide for the pauper whenever the uncle turned him away; and when he was sixteen years of age, having been struck by his uncle, he told him he would leave him and return home to his father; his uncle said he might; upon which he went to his father and told him the circumstances. The father said he was liable to take him in, and did receive him as part of his family; he stayed with his father about a week, and helped him to get his hay; and when that was done, his father not having a loom, desired him to return to his uncle and see if he would take him in. He did return, and agreed with his uncle to work for himself, and pay for his board; and it did not appear to the sessions he ever returned to his father. Some time after his last return to his uncle, having taken 2*s.* 6*d.* or more of him, his father gave his uncle 2*s.* 6*d.* as amends for the same. The pauper had gained no settlement in his own right. The father says, if the uncle had gone to live a great distance from him, he would not have suffered the pauper to have gone with him.—Lord Mansfield, C. J. “The pauper considered himself as part of his father's family, and the father considered him the same. When a man acquires a settlement, he acquires it for himself and his family. There is no reason to say this boy was not a part of his father's family. The uncle was under no obligation to do any thing for him, or to keep him an hour: and the boy, in point of fact, on every disagreement went to his father's house as his home, and he received him, as he was bound to do. I see no ground for considering this as an emancipation.”

Rex v. Uckfield, 5 M. & Sel. 214. The sessions confirmed an order for the removal of J. Marshall from Hurstperpoint to Uckfield. Case:—The pauper, being settled in Uckfield, on the 10th of April, 1802, was hired and served for a year to Jeffery, residing in Tonbridge. The pauper was a widower at the time of this hiring, and had one daughter, Frances, eighteen years of age, who had been separated from him at the age of four years, and had lived with her grandfather until his death in 1801, during which time she was entirely supported by the grandfather, the pauper contributing nothing for her maintenance. The grandfather by his will devised the residue of his estate (which amounted to 1600*l.*) to his executors in trust, to place the same out upon security, and pay the interest to his wife for life for her own use; and he directed that his wife should, during her life, thereout educate and maintain Elizabeth and Frances, the children of his late daughter Elizabeth Marshall, and after the decease of his wife he gave the residue equally to be divided between the said Elizabeth and Frances; but in case his wife should die before they attained twenty-one, the interest was to be applied to their Residence of a child by his father's direction at an uncle's house for support, the child visiting his father's house occasionally as his home, is not an emancipation.

Where pauper, at the time of hiring himself, had a daughter of the age of eighteen, who, from the age of four, had lived with her grandfather, and had been maintained by him until his death, and afterwards by her grandmother, the grandfather having by his will directed the grandmother to educate and maintain her out of a fund given to maintenance and education during their minority, and upon their attaining twenty-one respectively, the principal to be paid to them; and if either of them should die under age and without leaving issue, her share to go to the survivor; but if either should die under age leaving issue, her share to be equally divided between such issue, as they attained twenty-one, the interest in the mean time to be applied towards their maintenance and education. After her grandfather's death, Frances continued to live with her grandmother, and was entirely supported by her until she had attained twenty-one, and was living with her at the time when the pauper hired himself to Jeffery, and never returned to her father. The question was, if the pauper gained a settlement in Tonbridge by this hiring and service. It was contended, that from the death of the grandfather the daughter became suo jure entitled to a maintenance of her own, for such was the effect of the direction in her grandfather's will: (a) so that from that time, which was prior to the hiring and service, she was no longer dependent on any one for support; and the relation between the parent and child, so far as regards any dependence or support, was entirely at an end. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This is a perfectly new head of emancipation. The question is, if, on account of a testamentary bounty left to this child by her relation, the child shall be deemed to be emancipated from all control of the father, and the father to be discharged from all claims of the child for maintenance, if that should become necessary. If such a provision as this amounts to an emancipation, the consequence will be, that the devolution of an estate to a child, from the mother for instance, would operate in the same way, and discharge the father from the duty of maintenance. This, then, is quite a new head of emancipation. The cases of emancipation put by Lord Kenyon, in Rex v. Witton cum Twambrookes (post, 304), are the child's attaining its full age, or being married, or gaining a settlement for itself; or as in the case of the soldier, contracting a relation inconsistent with the idea of his being in a subordinate situation in his father's family. Not one of these is the case here; it is a case sui generis. If, therefore, it is to be considered as an emancipation, it must be on some reason or principle. Now, the reason why it should be so considered is said to be this, that the provision made for the child secures to her an independence and maintenance, and to the parish a discharge from all probability of burthen on her account. The statute 3 W. & M. enacts, 'that if any unmarried person not having child or children shall be lawfully hired, &c.,' which has been construed to mean, that if he has no child that can be a burthen to the parish in consequence of his acquiring a settlement there, he shall be considered as not having a child within the meaning of the statute. But was that the case of this pauper when he hired himself? The property devised was merely in trust for the use and benefit of the grandmother, in the first instance, with a direction to her, certainly amounting in equity to an obligation, to maintain the child, and after the grandmother's death to the child. But this trust might have failed; the trustees might have violated it and not paid the interest to the grandmother, or she might have proved unfaithful to her trust and refused or neglected to maintain the child; in which events, so long at least as they continued, the child must have resorted to her father for maintenance, who was not discharged by any emancipation of the child from the parental obligation of providing for her maintenance. It seems to me, therefore, under these circumstances, that the father was not in the situation of a person not having a child within the meaning of the statute; because he had a child, who would have a right to share with him, if he should be unable to provide one, a maintenance from the parish where he should have become settled, and who consequently might be a burthen to the parish. He was a person having a child, who might, in the eventual failure of the funds bequeathed for her support, claim a provision from him, and he again might have claimed to have the control and custody of her at any time. The case has certainly been ingeniously argued; but I think it does not amount to an emancipation, either to discharge the rights of the one or the duties of the other." Bayley, J.

(a) See Eacles v. England, 2 Vern. 466.

"I am of the same opinion. The question is, if such a provision can be said to deprive the parent of his rights over his child, to resume to himself the care and custody of her, or can relieve him from the duty of maintaining her. If this case amounts to an emancipation, would it not be the same, under the like circumstances, at whatever age the child might be? For the law makes no distinction in respect of the different ages of infants under twenty-one, at which time the parental authority ceases, and the father has no right to reclaim his child. Let us then put the case of an infant of very tender years, for whose maintenance the grandfather should make a provision by his will; could it be contended that such a provision would preclude the father from insisting upon having his child returned to him? I think that could hardly be contended. But, to come nearer to the present case, suppose, after the year's service of the father, the child then being of the age of nineteen, had returned to the roof of her father, the father having then acquired a new settlement by such service, can there be a doubt that the child would have taken that settlement? and yet, if she was once emancipated, she could not, because she would be emancipated for ever. If then she would have been entitled to the father's subsequent settlement, that shows that the separate provision made for her by her grandfather's will, could not operate as an emancipation; I therefore think that as she was not emancipated, but, notwithstanding the separate provision made for her, continued part of her father's family, and capable of deriving from her father any settlement which he might acquire, she was a child who might become chargeable to the parish in consequence of his acquiring a settlement. If so, it follows that the father was not in the situation of a person who is capable of acquiring a settlement by hiring and service; that is, a person not having a child within the meaning of the statute." Holroyd, J. "The maintenance provided for the child by the will was precarious, and the obligation of the father to maintain her still continued. The father's control over the child also continued; and, therefore, there is no ground upon the cases, or upon principle, to hold that the child was emancipated. I therefore think that the father was not in a situation to acquire a settlement by hiring and service." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Sowerby, 2 East, 276. R. Murdock and his children were removed from St. Mary to Sowerby. Order confirmed. Case:—Richard Stokell went with a certificate from D. to Sowerby, and there had a son born: R. S. died, and the son, being arrived at manhood, followed his father's business at Sowerby, hiring servants for it, but living with his mother in a house which she hired and rented after his father's death, and he never left this house or his mother, except for a few weeks in harvest time in one year. She had no concern with the business. The pauper was during this time, and ten years after the father's death, engaged by the son as his servant, and continued so for eleven years, and during that time was hired by him for a year and served the time. The main question was, whether the son was or was not emancipated? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "that here was nothing like emancipation; that while the father was living, the son resided under his roof, and after the father's death he continued to reside with his mother, who was the representative of the father, and equally protected by the certificate: and this brought it within Rex v. Hampton." Grose, J. "There is no pretence for saying that his going out for a few weeks at harvest time would operate as an emancipation." (See however Rex v. Oulton.)

Rex v. Halifax, Burr. S. C. 806; 2 Bott, 63. John Bragg, the father of the pauper, went with a certificate from Skircoat to Halifax, where the pauper was born. The pauper, when about fifteen years of age, bound himself apprentice by indenture to W. Smith of Halifax for four years, and served his master there for that time. (a) After he was out of his apprenticeship, and when he was about nineteen years of age, his father took a farm of 12*l.* a-year in Warley, and went and resided there several years: his son, the pauper, always after the father went to Warley, worked about the country as a stuff-weaver, but came to his father at Warley when he pleased, and kept his holiday clothes there, and considered his father's house as his own home: when he came to his father's house, he paid for what he had, and was his own master to go and work for himself whenever he pleased. Lord Mansfield, C. J. was absent. The other three judges thought that the son could not be considered as emancipated, or independent of or separated from his father. He went to his house when he pleased, and had his clothes there. Mr. J. Aston said, "that where a son is become independent of his father's family, or emancipated from it, he would not acquire a settlement where his father goes to reside: but if he remains part of his father's family, he will acquire a derivative settlement where his father goes and settles." The distinction was well laid down, he said, in the Bugden case; and he observed that in the case of Walpole St. Peter's, the son had been four years a soldier, and was emancipated from his father's family, and had ceased to be part of it.

Rex v. Huggate, 2 B. & Ald. 582. Removal from Nunburnholme to Huggate. Order confirmed. Case:—Thomas Lazenby, the father of the pauper, was originally settled in Huggate, where his father rented a farm. During the time that William L., the father of Thomas L., so rented the farm at Huggate, the latter was bound out apprentice till his coming of age. The master, during the whole of the apprenticeship, resided at Spaldington, under a certificate, at which place the apprentice served him until the expiration of the term. About the middle of the apprenticeship, William L. took another farm of 80*l.* a year, at Storthwaite, where he went to reside, and continued there during the remainder of his son's apprenticeship, and after it expired. He found his son, the apprentice, with clothes, except shoes and aprons, during the apprenticeship. Thomas L. occasionally visited his father during that time; and on one occasion, when he was ill, went to reside with him there for a fortnight during his illness. At the time when William L. went to reside at Storthwaite, Thomas L. was between eighteen and nineteen years of age, and when the apprenticeship expired, he went home for one night. The next day he went away, and went to work at various places for himself, but never gained any settlement by so doing. Bayley, J. "It seems to me, that Thomas L. was not emancipated. He is bound apprentice to a certificated person, and consequently could not by such service gain any settlement. Unless he does so, his domicile continues to be his father's house, and he is liable to be removed thither at any time. If, indeed, he had withdrawn himself from his father's family after twenty-one, no doubt it would be an emancipation from that period. But a separation whilst under twenty-one does not produce that effect, unless a subsequent settlement be gained. Here none was gained, and, therefore, his settlement shifted to Storthwaite with that of his father." Holroyd and Best, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Collingbourn Ducis, 4 T. R. 199. E. Chandler and his wife were removed from Collingbourn Ducis to Collingbourn Kingston. Order quashed. Case:—E. Chandler was born in Collingbourn Kingston, where his parents were residing under a certificate from Froxfield. At the age of nineteen he was hired for a year to serve J. Childs, of Buckholt Farm, as a carter, which he served. Buckholt Farm is extra-parochial, and has no parish officers. After the pauper had served the year at Buckholt, he returned to Collingbourn Kingston, and then being unmarried, under age, and not having done any act to gain a settlement in his own right further than aforesaid, was hired to and served S. Andrews of that parish for a year. The sessions being of opinion that the pauper was not emancipated, and that the certificate was not dis-self, but none can be derived from or gained by a service under him. Besides, a pauper cannot gain a settlement by apprenticeship in a parish into which the family, of which he continues a member, charged so as to enable him to gain a settlement in Collingbourn Kingston, by hiring and service, quashed the order of removal. Lord Kenyon, C. J. (after observing upon the certificate) "In cases of this kind, where the decisions of this court are to guide the judgments of the magistrates, it is of great importance that they should be consistent. Now I am not able to distinguish this case from the principle laid down in Rex v. Witton-cum-Twambrookes. It was there held, that a person under age, who after being absent from his father's family for a considerable time, returned to it before he was an adult, or married, and before he had acquired a settlement for himself, was not emancipated, but was entitled to the benefit of his father's settlement. So in this case the son returned before he had attained the age of twenty-one, not having gained any settlement for himself distinct from that of his father, nor having become the head of a family, and therefore this case must be governed by that of Witton-cum-Twambrookes. The distinction which has been attempted to be taken between some of the former cases and the present, that here the son put himself out to service, is not material; for until the age of twenty-one, not having done either of the acts above alluded to, he continued a part of his father's family." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Hardwicke, 11 East, 578. (Among many points in this case, one related to emancipation.) An appeal against an order for removal of J. Vipond, his wife and children. The sessions confirmed the order, and stated that John V., the father of Joseph, was settled in Fornsett St. Mary, in Norfolk, and about forty years ago came to reside in Hardwicke, on a tenement at 5*l.* 10*s.* per annum. The pauper, Joseph, was born in that parish; and at the age of fifteen, his father then residing on the said tenement, was apprenticed to S. W. of Besthorpe, and regularly served his time with his master, who resided in Besthorpe, under a certificate from Bunwell. During the first year of the son's apprenticeship, John, the father, purchased the tenement on which he resided at Hardwicke, for 87*l.* During his apprenticeship he was clothed by his father, and he occasionally visited him. At the expiration of the apprenticeship, the pauper, being then nineteen years of age, returned to his father's house in Hardwicke, where he stayed two days, and received some new clothes: he then went back to his former master, and engaged to work with him by the piece; and did so work at Besthorpe for a year and a quarter. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said "As to the point of emancipation, that the son must be considered as having been re-incorporated in his father's family, having returned, and required and received his father's assistance, and therefore he followed his father's settlement, which he had acquired in the mean time;" and he said "that none of the cases of emancipation which had been decided on the ground of the children's marriage, or obtaining a settlement of their own in another parish, or being under a different control, incompatible with that of their parents, till after the age of twenty-one, applied to this case." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Offchurch, 3 T. R. 114. H. West and his wife were removed from Thurlaston to Offchurch. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was born in Offchurch in 1765, and resided there with his father until 1770. On his father's leaving Offchurch, the pauper was left with one Leeson, at Offchurch, to be taken care of, his father paying for his lodging and board. The pauper continued at Leeson's at Offchurch for two years, and then went to reside with his uncle, who also lived at Offchurch, and continued to reside with him about two years, during which his uncle provided him with board, clothes, lodging, and pocket-money, and he worked with his uncle, but received no wages, and was not hired as a servant. At the end of two years the pauper went to his father's at Ladbroke, and stayed there a week; and then went to reside with another uncle, Salmon of Weston, with whom he lived six years as he had done at his uncle Haddon's. Salmon provided him with board, clothes, lodging, and pocket-money, he working for Salmon without having been hired as a servant or receiving any wages. On leaving Salmon, he went and lived three weeks with his father at Ladbroke, where his father had obtained a settlement. The pauper had never done any act to gain a settlement. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "This is the weakest case of emancipation that ever was attempted to be made out. When the father left Offchurch, the son was only five years old; now it cannot be pretended at that time he was emancipated, and yet he then ceased to reside in his father's family. Ordinarily speaking, one of these things must happen before the son can be said to be emancipated: either he must have obtained a settlement for himself, or have become the head of a family, or at most he must have arrived at that age when he may set up in the world for himself. But here the son does not fall within either of those descriptions: no time can be stated when the emancipation may be said to have commenced. For when he went to live with his uncle Haddon, he was only eight years old at the most; and he could gain no settlement either by living with that uncle or his other uncle Salmon as a servant, because the case states that he was not hired as a servant by either of them. Now during all this time the father had a right to the custody of the son, and might have obtained him by habeas corpus, for the parental care was not then done away. It is not necessary in these cases of derivative settlements, that the child should remove with the father from place to place, for the settlement of the father will be communicated to the child: otherwise children who are sent out into the world for education, and are of course separated for a time from the father, might lose the benefit of their father's settlement; and when they were about to return home, would find themselves excluded from parental care, if their parents had in the mean time gained a new settlement. How long the power of communicating a derivative settlement may continue it is not necessary to determine; for in this case it certainly remained longer than till the child was nine or ten years old, and that is sufficient for the determination of this question." Both orders quashed.

A son was apprenticed to a certificated person for four years, and after serving the time, returned to his father at the age of nineteen: Held not emancipated.

A child is not emancipated till he has gained a settlement in his own right, or has contracted a relation inconsistent with the idea of his being part of his father's family; and a person at the age of nineteen (his father having run away), hiring himself for four years, but not gaining a settlement thereby, is not emancipated.

Rex v. Witton-cum-Twambrookes, 3 T. R. 355. G. Hewitt and his wife and family were removed from Stockport to Witton-cum-Twambrookes. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's father, J. Hewitt, rented a tenement of 16*l.* a-year in Witton, and resided upon it above a year, when the pauper was about six years old. The father then went to Middlewich, where he did no act to gain a settlement; and about two years after ran away from his family; and the pauper's mother, taking the pauper with her to Congleton, died in half a year; the pauper was there left in the care of Jane Brookes, with whom he lived at Congleton, and worked at the silk mills there. The overseers of Witton paid for his maintenance for four years to J. Brookes, after which the pauper supported himself to the age of sixteen, at which time he got 3*s.* 9*d.* per week, and boarded himself where he liked. During the first part of the time he lived at Congleton he saw his father twice, at the distance of about four years, at which time his father did not give him any thing (except a pair of breeches, and 2½*d.* the first, and 1½*d.* in money the second time). At eighteen or nineteen years of age, the pauper went from Congleton to Sheffield, and hired himself for four years, but gained no settlement. He heard that his father had been to inquire after him at Congleton, and that he then lived at Dunham, to which place he went to see him, and was at that time twenty-three years of age, and married. (a) The father had made the above inquiry of the pauper's sister, with intent, as he said, to give him a suit of clothes, as he had done less for him than any of his other children. The father married a second wife, and held a tenement in Dunham of 11*l.* a-year, and he had lived upon it eight years, when his son went to see him there, upon which visit he stayed only one hour, and never saw his father but as above. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said "It was never conceived in any case that a son who was only sixteen years of age, and who had not gained any settlement in his own right, was not part of his father's family. The cases of emancipation have always been decided on the circumstances either of the son's being twenty-one (Rex v. Roach, post, 305), or married, or having gained a settlement in his own right, or (as in the case of the soldier), having contracted a relation which was inconsistent with the idea of his being in a subordinate situation in his father's family." Order confirmed.

Rex v. Edgeworth, 3 T. R. 353. H. Rothwell and family were removed from Castleton to Edgeworth. Order confirmed. Case:—H. Rothwell, the father of the pauper, when the pauper was about thirteen or fourteen years old, came to live upon a tenement at Edgeworth of 5*l.* a-year, and resided there about two years; during which time he put out the pauper to J. Pollit, who then resided in Spotland, for four years, to learn the trade of a woolcomber. (a) The pauper accordingly left his father's house, to which he never afterwards returned but as a guest, and resided with and worked for Pollit, at Spotland, for four years, and by him was provided all that time with meat and clothes, and was considered by his mother as part of Pollit's family. During these four years the pauper was sometimes a quarter or half a year without seeing his father or mother, but sometimes came to his father's house on a Saturday evening, and returned home to his master's either on the Sunday evening or Monday morning following. After the expiration of the four years he never returned to his father's family, but worked at his trade of a woolcomber at different places about the country, and supported himself thereby until he married, and resided with his wife and family in a house of his own. After the pauper was put out to Pollit, and before the four years expired, Henry, the father, took another tenement in Edgeworth, of the yearly value of 8*l.*, which he occupied with the former tenement for a year, whereby he gained a settlement at Edgeworth. The pauper never gained any settlement for himself; he had been put out apprentice by indenture, which was void for want of the stamp denoting the payment of the additional duty. The court (without argument) confirmed the order.

Rex v. Wilmington, 5 B. & Ald. 525; 1 D. & R. 140. The order of removal of J. Moore from Crayford to Wilmington was confirmed. Case:—The pauper in 1814 was removed with his father to Wilmington. The pauper in the same year returned with his father into Crayford, and was hired by the week to Sir H. Crewe in that parish, in whose service he continued as a weekly servant for nearly two years. Upon leaving Sir H. he followed the occupation of mole-catching in Crayford, by which he obtained his own living. He never resided with his father's family, nor did his father exercise any control over him. In 1815, when the pauper was about seventeen, his father left Crayford, and went to live at Poplar, and about February, 1817, went to Bow, where he rented a house and orchard at 20*l.* per annum, and in which he still continues to reside. Whilst the pauper followed the business of mole-catching in Crayford, he used occasionally to visit his father both at Poplar and at Bow, and once slept at the father's house in Poplar, but he did not receive any maintenance or assistance from his father. After the father had occupied the house at Bow for rather more than a year, the pauper, who was then about nineteen years of age, married. The question was whether the pauper before his marriage was emancipated. Abbott, C. J. "It is of importance to lay down some general rule for the guidance of magistrates on the subject of emancipation; and the best which I can suggest is this, that during the minority of a child there can be no emancipation, unless he marries, and so becomes himself the head of a family, or contract some other relation, so as wholly and permanently to exclude the parental control. I say nothing about his acquiring a settlement of his own, because that does not, as it seems to me, properly fall under this head. There can be however no question that in that case he is only removable to his own acquired settlement. Here the pauper was under twenty-one, and had neither married nor contracted any such relation as I have described, at the time when his father acquired the settlement at Bow. He was therefore not emancipated, and the order of sessions must be quashed."

Emancipation takes place by becoming head of a family, or contracting some other relation, so as wholly and permanently to exclude the parental control. It seems that the acquiring a settlement of his own does not properly constitute an emancipation.

in Roach, and gained a settlement there, and the pauper lived with him until after she was twenty-one years of age; when she was twenty-two she had a bastard child, for the maintenance of which a bond of indemnity was given to Roach, and she continued still living with her father. About half a year after, she left her father's house, and went to Mr. Henwood's in Roach, as a wet nurse, and lived there eight weeks, for which she was paid 8s. A few days after she left her father's house, the father removed to St. Columb, where he rented some mills at 12*l.* a-year, and has lived there from that time; at the end of the eight weeks the pauper returned to her father in St. Columb, where she has since remained, but made no contract with him as a servant, nor gained any settlement for herself except as aforesaid. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It has been very properly observed on former occasions, that this court ought to be anxious, in determining questions arising on the settlement laws, to lay down clear and distinct rules for the information of a very useful class of persons, the magistrates, who are to decide in cases of this kind. And I hope that the rule of decision which we are about to establish in this case, will fall in with every case that has been cited. For with regard to a supposed expression of mine in Rex v. Witton-cum-Twambrookes, there is an inaccuracy in it. I think I could not have said, because it never was my opinion, that the mere circumstance of a son's attaining the age of twenty-one was an emancipation, so as to prevent his having a derivative settlement, gained by his father afterwards, if the son continued to live with the father; for if the son, with unbroken continuance, remain with and a member of the father's family, he is not emancipated. But this proposition will not break in upon any of the cases, but may be reconciled with all of them, namely, that 'if a child under the age of twenty-one leave his father's home, and is thereby quâ severed from his father's family, and return to his father during a state of pupilage, during which time policy requires that the child should be under the protection of his father, he must be considered as incorporated with his father's family, unless he have gained a distinct settlement of his own, or have become the head of a family himself: but if a child, after a state of pupilage, sever himself from his father's family, he cannot afterwards be incorporated with it.' The case of the soldier proceeded upon that principle; he had neither gained a settlement nor was in a situation to gain one, but he had ceased to be under the control of his parents, and had become liable to the control of others; and as he did not return to his father until after he was of age, the case was thought too clear to be argued. But it must not be inferred from the circumstances of that case not having been argued, that it passed without consideration, and is not entitled to much notice; because in Rex v. Halifax, Aston, J. who was a very good sessions lawyer, alluded to it as a case properly decided. And if so, it must govern the present, for I cannot distinguish between them. Some stress however has been laid in the argument to-day on the circumstance of that person having engaged in the situation of a soldier; but that cannot be material in any other way than as showing that the son was no longer under the control of his father. So in this case this woman was above twenty-one; she had contracted the relation of servant with another family; she was out of her father's family; she was under no control to him other than that arising from moral obligation and gratitude; and I cannot see how she could afterwards be deemed to be incorporated with the father's family." The court agreed. Order confirmed.

Rex v. Cowhoneyborne, 10 East, 88. Removal from Teddington to Cowhoneyborne. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper being settled in Cowhoneyborne, after the death of his wife went to service, and hired himself to Clarke, of Cowhoneyborne, who afterwards removed to Teddington, and the pauper left him at Michaelmas, 1806, having served him five years under a hiring for a year in Teddington. On the death of the pauper's wife, W. Nightingale, who had married his sister, maintained his infant, out of kindness to the pauper; and the pauper's daughter, Elizabeth, then about eleven years of age, went, with the pauper's consent, to Nightingale, to nurse her infant sister. The infant died in about a year; and from that time to this

Elizabeth continued to live in the house of Nightingale as one of the family, but doing the work of a servant. Nightingale, previous to the pauper's daughter living with him, kept a servant, and would have hired one if she had left him; but he never hired her, or paid her any wages, though he found her in board, clothes, and such pocket-money as he thought fit. Elizabeth will be twenty-seven years of age in June, 1808. During the time she so lived with Nightingale she considered herself liable to be sent away whenever he pleased; and he considered her at liberty to quit him when she chose; and the pauper considered himself, as her father, bound to receive and support her if Nightingale ceased so to do. But the pauper was not a house-keeper at any time after he went into Clarke's service. The question was, whether Elizabeth was so emancipated as to enable the pauper (her father) to gain a settlement by his hiring and service with Clarke in Teddington. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The daughter having been originally placed, when an infant, by her father in her uncle's family, continued to live with her uncle after she came of age, as part of his family, receiving no assistance from her father, and being at liberty to depart from her uncle when she chose. She was of age, living apart from her father, having her support from sources independent of him, and was at liberty to quit her uncle when she pleased, as she herself considered. If this be not emancipation it would be difficult to say what is so, and when it can take effect. Then if she were emancipated after she came of age, it follows that the father, by the construction which has been put upon the statute of Will. III. gained a settlement by the subsequent hiring and service for a year in Teddington, as 'an unmarried person, not having any child.'" Grose, J. "The daughter lived apart from her father, after she was twenty-one, not under his control, nor having any contemplation of it, nor receiving any assistance from him; she was therefore emancipated when her father was hired for a year, and served in Teddington." Le Blanc, J. "Under these circumstances, living away from her father before and after the age of twenty-one, he having no house of his own, nor giving her any support; I think she ceased, after she came of age, to be part of her father's family, and consequently no future settlement gained by him could be communicated to her; and if so, he gained a settlement by the hiring and service in Teddington." Bayley, J. "To constitute emancipation, it is clearly not necessary for the child to have acquired a new settlement of his own: Rex v. Roach is in point to that. Where is the difference between going out from the father's house after twenty-one to seek a livelihood, and continuing out for the same purpose after that age, where the absence from the father is so long as it was here: the father too during all that time having no house of his own, and having indeed contracted a relation which precluded him from receiving his daughter at home." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Oulton, 5 Bar. & Adol. 958; 3 Nev. & M. 62, S. C. Hannah Barnes was removed from Arkton to Oulton. Order confirmed. Case:—John Barnes, the father of the pauper, had a settlement in Oulton until 1830, when he acquired a settlement in Arkton, the pauper at that time living with him as part of his family. The pauper was born in 1806, and had never gained any settlement in her own right, but up to the time of the removal lived with her father as part of his family. She did the work of her father's house, and before and at the time of the appeal was the main support of his family. In the autumn of 1829, the pauper then being of the age of twenty-three years, with the consent and at the desire of her father, hired herself to William Wilson, residing at some miles distance, in an adjoining parish, at weekly wages, to work for him during his harvest. She remained living with Wilson and working for him under the hiring for three weeks and upwards, when she received her wages and returned home, having been absent from her father's house three weeks and two days. In the following autumn she hired herself again, with the consent and at the desire of her father, to Wilson, to assist him in his harvest. On this occasion she served Wilson, living with him under this hiring a fortnight, received her wages, and returned home as before, having been absent from her father's house at this time two weeks and two days. On this latter occasion she gave her wages to her father, who expended them for the use of the family. The pauper had not on either of these occasions any intention of abandoning her home, but on both occasions she fully intended to return, and her father expected that she would return to him as soon as the harvest work at Wilson's was done. The sessions found that the pauper was emancipated, and did not follow the settlement acquired by her father in Arkton in 1830. Denman, C. J. "It seems to me that the sessions were right in finding that the daughter was emancipated. It appears that she and her father were on very good terms, and that on one occasion she paid her wages to him; but she being twenty-one years of age, and having hired herself during the harvest, it was in her option to pay her wages to her father or not. Rex v. Lytchet Matraverse (1 M. & R. 25; 7 B. & C. 226), tends strongly to show that a pauper who hires himself under twenty-one years of age, and continues to serve after that period, will be emancipated. We are extremely anxious to make the rules on this subject as clear as possible. A party under age is not considered to be emancipated unless some distinct act be shown producing that effect; as if he marries, and so becomes the head of a family; or contracts some other relation, so as wholly and permanently to exclude the parental control; but where a child has attained the age of twenty-one, and is then separated from the father's family, the burden of proof that the child is not thereby emancipated lies on the party asserting that fact." His lordship then read the words of Abbott, C. J. in Rex v. Hardwicke (ante, 303). "Now here the pauper, after she attained twenty-one, made a contract whereby she bound herself to work during a certain period. In performance of that contract she was absent from her father's house three weeks, employed in gaining a livelihood for herself. During that period, consequently, she no longer remained a member of his family; and I am, therefore, of opinion that the sessions were warranted in the conclusion they came to, that she was emancipated." Littledale, J. "I am of opinion that the pauper was not emancipated. It appears to me that her temporary absence from her father's house during the harvest was not, under the circumstances stated in this case, a severance from his family, and therefore does not amount to emancipation. It is the common practice for country people to hire themselves during the harvest, and their temporary absence from home under such a hiring, and when they are of full age, has never been considered such a severance from the father's family as amounts to emancipation. In this case the daughter did not intend to separate from her father's family, and her intention is very material in a case like the present, where her absence from the parent was for so short a period. For anything that appears, her room or her bed may have been kept for her during her absence. She maintained her father, and her hiring herself during the harvest may have been intended as a means of making her earn something towards his support. It is said that the pauper is emancipated, because, having contracted to work during the harvest, she had for a time put herself out of her father's control. That argument would equally apply if she had agreed to work by the day, because during the hours of work she would be free from her father's control. There must be a severance of the child from the family of the parent to constitute emancipation. I think that the pauper here, during the harvest time while she was working for another, continued, under the circumstances stated in this case, part of her father's family. In Rex v. Roach (6 T. R. 247, ante, 305), Lord Kenyon said, 'This woman' (the pauper) 'was above the age of twenty-one, she had contracted the relation of servant with another family, she was out of her father's family, she was under no other control to him than that arising from moral obligation and gratitude, and I cannot see how she could afterwards be deemed to be incorporated with the father's family.' In this case the pauper never contracted the relation of household servant with another family, she was to work in the fields, not in the house. She was therefore never out of her father's family, to use Lord Kenyon's expression; her wages contributed to his support, she intended to return home, and her father expected she would as soon as the harvest work was done. In Rex v. Roach

(6 T. R. 247), Ashhurst, J. considered the question, whether absence from the father's family amounted to emancipation, to depend upon the intent. He there says, 'In some cases, perhaps, it may be difficult to say what shall amount to a severance from the father's family. When a child becomes of age it is optional in him either to continue with his parents or not, as he pleases. He is then sui juris, and if he leave his father's house and put himself under some other control, this is a kind of public notification that he means to leave his father's family.' Now I think here that the fact of the pauper having left her father's house, and put herself under the control of another during the harvest, was not under the circumstances of the case any indication of an intent to leave her father's family. In Rex v. Sowerby (2 East, 276), it was found that the son of the certificated person never left his father or mother's house, except for a few weeks in harvest time in one year, and it was then considered that he was not thereby emancipated." Taunton, J. "Certainty in the administration of every department of the law is of the greatest importance, and in none more so than in sessions law. The yearly expense of the country is increased greatly by splitting hairs in questions of this description. I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Roach (6 T. R. 247). That decision, whether wisely come to or not, is binding on us. It certainly is not in contravention of any leading principles of law, if it were, I might think it right to reconsider it. It is true, that in this case the pauper hired herself at the desire and with the consent of her father, but every parent consents and desires (if his mind be properly constituted) that his children should go to service to obtain an honest livelihood. Here the pauper agreed not merely to do harvest work, but to work for Wilson during his harvest. It is by no means uncommon for farmers to employ their own domestic servants to do the harvest work, and to hire others to do the household work. Whether that was the case here does not appear; but the pauper lived with her master during the whole harvest time, and slept in his house, and she was absent on the first occasion three weeks and two days. And as it is expressly found that on the second occasion she gave her wages to her father, it may be fairly inferred that on the first she kept them for herself. Then the only difference between Rex v. Roach (6 T. R. 247), and this case is, that there the pauper served eight weeks, here only three weeks and two days. In each case the pauper served under a contract, and as it was held in the former case that the pauper was emancipated by having been absent from his father's family eight weeks, I think we are bound to adhere to that decision, and to hold that the pauper was emancipated here by her absence for three weeks." Patteson, J. "I cannot distinguish this case from Rex v. Roach, (6 T. R. 247.) The only difference is, that in that case the pauper served eight weeks, here she served three weeks and two days; but she was bound by her contract, and compellable to serve her master during that period. It is found, indeed, that she hired herself with the consent and at the desire of her father, but he could not enforce or prevent her so doing, for she was of full age, and that being the case the onus of showing that she was not emancipated is thrown on that party who contends that she was not so. As to Rex v. Sowerby (2 East, 276), the decision there did not turn on the question of the emancipation of the son; he was born after the father had come into the certificated parish, and always resided with him during his lifetime, and after his death with his mother; and the question was, whether or not after that time he still resided under the certificate by living with his mother as part of a family of which she was the head, in which case his hired servant was prevented by the statute 12 Anne, c. 18, s. 2, from gaining a settlement." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Morley, 2 M. & Sel. 417. Removal from Armley to Morley. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's father resided in Armley under a certificate from Morley, dated 1st June, 1761, acknowledging him, his wife, and three children, not the pauper, to be settled in Morley. The pauper, when about twelve years old, (his father being then lately dead, and he residing with his mother in Armley under the certificate, as part of his late father's family,) was bound apprentice by the overseers of Morley to one and then, with his master's consent, served the remainder of his time, till twenty-one, with a person in the certified parish, where his mother and family resided under the certificate; and afterwards he hired himself to the same person for a year, and served that and three successive years in the certified parish: Held, that he gained a settlement by such hiring and service.

Lister, of Morley, till twenty-one. He served in Morley under the indentures seven years, and then with his master's consent returned to Armley, where his mother and family then resided under the certificate, and still reside, to serve one Gaunt, in Armley. The pauper continued in Gaunt's service till the expiration of his indentures. He was then hired by Gaunt for a year, and served a year, and remained with Gaunt four years in the whole, living with him in Armley during all that time. Upon the pauper's going to Armley to serve out the remainder of his apprenticeship with Gaunt, he did not go to his mother's house, nor at any time, during the rest of his apprenticeship, resided at his mother's as part of her family. The question made was, whether the pauper gained a settlement in Armley by hiring and service with Gaunt? Lord Ellenborough, C. J. after observing on the effect of the certificate, said, "that brings it to the question whether he was a part of his father's family. In the case of Collingbourne Ducis, the pauper, after leaving his father's family, returned to the parish where his father was living under the certificate, being under age, and was hired in the certified parish, at which time he continued a part of his father's family. So in Rex v. Keel, the pauper returned to a branch of her family in the certified parish, and was there hired and served whilst under age. Rex v. Ingworth is the nearest to the present case; but there is this distinction, that there the pauper returned under age to the father's house, and hired himself whilst under age to a person in the same parish; and although by comparing his age when he first let himself, with the time when he last let himself, it does appear that he must have been of age at the commencement of the second year's service under the last letting, yet that circumstance seems to have escaped the notice both of the counsel and the court; and the case was decided entirely on the authority of Rex v. Keel, which it was supposed exactly to resemble, but which, for the above reason, is not so. We do not think, however, that this is an authority to warrant us in deciding that where a child, not named in the certificate, separates himself from his father's family at an age when he is by law capable of supporting himself, he shall either derive a settlement acquired subsequently by his father, or shall be prevented by the certificate from gaining a settlement for himself, which is a disability that can only attach on him as being one of the family. This is illustrated by Rex v. Roach, where a daughter, being of age, left her father's family, and hired herself to a farmer for eight weeks; during the time of her absence her father acquired a subsequent settlement, and it was determined that she was not entitled to such subsequent settlement, on the ground that she had ceased to be a part of the father's family, or in the language of the cases, was emancipated. That case was fully argued and considered, and it lays down a rule in precise terms, which may serve to govern others in future. The same point was determined in Rex v. Cowhoneybourne. It is true that these latter were cases where the question did not arise upon a certificate; but they establish a principle which shows what it is that constitutes a child a part of his father's family; and whatever divests him of the capacity as one of his father's family in the one case, divests him of the incapacity in the other. We are of opinion, therefore, that the pauper ceased to be a part of his father's family, and by the hiring and service gained a settlement in Armley." Orders quashed. (a)

Up to the age of eighteen, his parents resided at Manningtree, and while

there, the vessel on board of which their son was serving being stationed on the river near that town, his mother washed for him, and occasional visits were paid by the son to the parents, sometimes of a few days' continuance. During the period from 1805 to 1810, the parents, having quitted Manningtree, removed to St. Anne's, Limehouse, and resided on a tenement of the value of twelve guineas a year; and twice during those five years the son visited them there, and stayed eight or ten days at a time, returning to his ship after each visit. The distance prevented the mother from continuing to wash for the son while she and her husband were resident at St. Anne's; but she occasionally sent him small sums for pocket money. The son attained the age of twenty-one while his parents were residing in St. Anne's Limehouse. In 1810 the parents quitted that parish, and took a tenement of 24*l.* a year at Gravesend, on which they resided when the son married, having been in the occupation of it upwards of a year before such marriage. Bayley, J. "It is extremely desirable in cases of this nature to preserve an uniformity of decision, and to act, wherever it is possible, upon broad and general principles, and not to give effect to such nice and subtle distinctions as have been advanced in the argument in support of this order of sessions. It was laid down as the rule, by Lawrence, J. in Rex v. Roach, that if a child leaves his father's family under twenty-one, and returns while he is under age, he continues to be part of that family, and his settlement will shift with that of his father; but that if the child, when he attains twenty-one, is absent from his father's family, the father thereby loses all control over him, he becomes emancipated, and his settlement will not shift with that of his father, but will continue to be in that parish where the father was settled when the child attained twenty-one. That learned judge there says, 'In the case of the soldier, the son was enlisted when he was under age, and if he had returned home before he was twenty-one, he would have been considered part of his father's family; or if he had quitted the army before twenty-one, without returning home, the father might have reclaimed him by suing out a habeas corpus; but it appears from the case that he had attained the age of twenty-one before he left the army: therefore, during the time that he continued a soldier, his father lost all control over him, he being of age; and the subsequent settlement gained by the father was not communicated to him.' After applying the reasoning in that case to the one before the court, the learned judge adds, 'If, after such a service as this, the daughter had returned to her father before she was of age, she would have continued as part of her father's family; but not returning till after, she can no longer be considered as part of his family.' Rex v. Cowhoneyborne, was decided upon the same principle. There, a widower having a daughter placed her at eleven years of age with an uncle, by whom she was wholly maintained after that time, and with whom she continued to reside after she came of age, doing service for him, but without any contract of hiring to give her a settlement of her own; the father in the meantime having gone out to service. It was held, that on her coming of age she was emancipated. There, at the time she became twenty-one, she continued absent from her father's family. The same doctrine was laid down in Rex v. Hardwicke, the only distinction between that and the former cases being that the original separation of the child from his father's family was not voluntary; he having been drawn for the militia while he was under age, and served in it until he was twenty-three years of age. That distinction, however, does not vary the question of emancipation; and the principle deducible from that latter case is, that a child is not part of his father's family while he remains subject to a control paramount to that of his father; and that if, while under age, he contract a relation inconsistent with the parental control, which relation continues until after he attains twenty-one, the authority of the father thereby wholly ceases, and he can no longer insist upon the child's returning into his family, and the child is emancipated. In this case, when the pauper's husband attained twenty-one, his father's settlement was at Limehouse, and he was absent from his father's family, in a service, in which he voluntarily continued after he was twenty-one. The consequence was, that he then became emancipated, and was settled in the parish where his father was then settled.

3. Of Emancipation.

If a son at sixteen hire himself for a year, and serve that year, the emancipation commences from the termination of the service.

A pauper, under age, hired himself to serve on board a ship trading to Newfoundland. While he was so serving, and before he attained twenty-one his father acquired a new settlement. After he had attained the age of twenty one, the pauper returned to his father's house: Held, that the pauper was not emancipated when his father acquired the new settlement, and that his settlement shifted with that of his father.

pated, and that his settlement continued at Limehouse, though his father's had been transferred to Gravesend." The order of sessions must be quashed.

Rex v. New Forest, 5 T. R. 478. On old Martinmas-day, 1777, E. Coates hired himself for a year to G. Bowe of New Forest, and served that year: on the 22d December, 1777, E. Coates married his present wife: William Coates, a legitimate son of his by a former wife, being within one month of the age of sixteen years, and having gained no settlement in his own right, on the same Martinmas-day, 1777, hired himself for a year to R. Nelson of Ellerton, which he served. The question was, whether, by reason of the service and settlement thereby gained by the son under his hiring, the father could be considered as being an unmarried man, by the emancipation (which, it was contended, was by relation at that moment complete,) of his son? Lord Kenyon, C. J., (after reciting the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 6,) said, "That in this case the son was not separated from the father; when the father was hired, the son had gained no settlement for himself; he indeed did on the same day enter into a contract which might or might not have been completed, and which, when completed, would confer a settlement on the son; but at the time when the father entered into the relation of servant at New Forest, the son formed a part of his family."

Rex v. Lytchet Matravers, 7 B. & C. 226; 1 M. & R. 25. Isaac Orchard and his wife were removed from Lytchet Matravers, Dorset, to St. James, Poole. Order quashed. Case:—The father of the pauper was settled in Lytchet Matravers, and while he was so settled, the pauper hired himself to serve for two summers and a winter on board a ship trading to Newfoundland. In February or March, 1816, being then twenty years of age, he entered upon that service, during which he continued during the stipulated time. There was no evidence that his father ever exercised any control over him during his service. He attained the age of twenty-one years before his return from the voyage. Shortly after he had left this country, and before he had attained the age of twenty-one years, his father acquired a settlement in St. James, Poole. On the pauper's return from Newfoundland, he went to reside in his father's house, who, before that time, had left Poole, and returned to Lytchet. After a few weeks he left his father's residence, and lived with his sister, working on his own account as well there as during his residence with his father. The sessions were of opinion that the pauper was emancipated at the time when his father acquired the settlement in Poole. Bayley, J. "The question in this case is, whether at the time when the father had gained a settlement in St. James, Poole, the pauper was emancipated? There can be no doubt that the settlement of a son, if he have none of his own, shifts with that of the parent, so long as the son continues part of the parent's family. When he ceases to constitute part of the parent's family, he is emancipated. The different instances of emancipation put by Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Offchurch, and Rex v. Witton cum Twambrookes, and recognized by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Uckfield, are the child's attaining its full age, or being married, or gaining a settlement, or, as in the case of the soldier, contracting a relation inconsistent with the idea of his being in a subordinate situation in his father's family. In Rex v. Roach, Lord Kenyon qualified what he was reported to have said as to a son's being emancipated on attaining the age of twenty-one years, by limiting that observation to cases where the son at that age was severed from his father's family; and then adverting to the case of the soldier, he observes that the soldier had ceased to be under the control of his parents, and had become subject to the control of others; and that as he did not return to the father until after he was of age, the case was thought too clear for argument. It is insisted that this case falls within the fourth class of cases mentioned by Lord Kenyon, and that the pauper, as soon as he entered into the contract, like the soldier who had enlisted, was emancipated, because he had subjected himself to the control of others, and continued so subject until he had attained twenty-one. But there is this distinction between the case of the soldier and the present: the soldier, by enlisting, became subject to an authority paramount to that of his parent; here the pauper, by contracting to serve the owner or the captain of the ship, subjected himself to an authority not paramount but subordinate to that of his parent; for, by the law of England, the parental authority continues until the son attains the age of twenty-one. This distinction is pointed out by Holroyd and Best, Js., in Rex v. Rotherfield Greys; the latter there says, 'by the general policy of the law of England, the parental authority continues until the child attains the age of twenty-one years; but the same policy also requires that a minor shall be at liberty to contract an engagement to serve the state. When such an engagement is contracted, it becomes inconsistent with the duty which he owes to the public that the parental authority should continue.' Lawrence, J., in Rex v. Roach, seems to take the same view of the subject, and to consider the authority of the state paramount to that of the parents, so long as the minor continues in the public service; but as soon as he leaves it, then the parental authority is restored. He there says, 'In the case of the soldier the son was enlisted when he was under age, and if he had returned home before he was twenty-one he would have been considered as part of his father's family; or if he had quitted the army before twenty-one without returning home, the father might have reclaimed him by suing out a habeas corpus.' Blackstone, in his Commentaries, vol. 1, p. 453, says, 'The legal power of a father over the persons of his children ceases at the age of twenty-one, for they are then enfranchised by arriving at the years of discretion, or that point which the law has established, when the empire of the father or other guardian gives place to the empire of reason. Yet, till after that age arrive, the empire of the father continues even after his death; for he may, by his will, appoint a guardian to his children. He may also delegate part of his parental authority during his life to the tutor or schoolmaster of his child, who is then in loco parentis, and has such a portion of the power of the parent committed to his charge, viz. that of restraint and correction, as may be necessary to answer the purposes for which he is employed.' It appears then that in ordinary cases the authority of a father over his child continues until the age of twenty-one; but the case of a soldier is an exemption from the general rule. For an infant may by law enlist, and become bound to serve the state; and if he does contract to serve, and the state adopt him as their servant, that adoption severs him from his father's family, and he then becomes subject to the paramount control of the state. In Rex v. Woburn the son enlisted at the age of sixteen into the same regiment of militia in which his father served, and lived with him to the age of twenty-three. Lord Kenyon thought as he lived in his father's family, the parent's control was not altogether destroyed, the guidance and direction of the child to a certain extent not being inconsistent with the occasional military situation in which he was. He seems to have thought that such a person might be subject to a double control. So in this case, if the father did not interfere, the son might be subject to the control of his master whom he had contracted to serve; but being part of his father's family, and subject to his paramount authority, the latter might have claimed his services at any time before he attained the age of twenty-one years. But in the case of a minor who enters into the army, the state will be entitled to his services, and against the public the father cannot claim them. Considering the principle upon which a minor who enlists as a soldier becomes emancipated to be that he thereby contracts a relation inconsistent with a subordinate situation in his father's family; and considering that a minor who contracts to serve a subject, thereby makes himself liable to the double control of his father and his master, the authority of the parent being paramount to that of the master, I think that the pauper, in this case, when he agreed to serve the owner or captain of a ship, did not contract any relation inconsistent with a subordinate situation in his father's family; but that until he attained twenty-one, he continued part of his father's family, and subject to his paramount authority. Consequently, the sessions were wrong in holding that the pauper was emancipated, and his settlement shifted with that of his father." Order of sessions quashed.

4. Of Settlement by Marriage.

The effect of marriage upon settlements.

Residence with a husband in the place where he is settled, is not necessary to give the wife his settlement. (a)

A wife cannot gain a separate and distinct settlement during coverture.

Nor complete the imperfect settlement of the husband.

Though the marriage be fraudulently obtained, the wife will take the husband's settlement. (b)

So also where a widow was married in her maiden name, but without fraud.

IV. Of Settlements by Marriage.

If a woman marry a man who hath a known settlement she acquires the husband's settlement; and she takes every subsequent settlement which he may obtain until his death; but if the husband has no settlement, then the prior settlement of the wife continues.

St. Giles v. Eversley, 2 Sess. Ca. 116; 2 Bott, 103. The objection to the removal of the wife and children to the husband's settlement was, that she could not take the benefit of her husband's right of settlement after his death, as she had not taken any advantage of it in his life-time, but had waived it, and fixed in another place; but Eyre and Fortescue, Js., held that the wife and children must be sent to the last legal settlement of the husband and father; and they confirmed the order.

In Rex v. Aythorp Rooding, 2 Bott, 104, the wife, after the husband had deserted her, went with her children from White Rooding, and lived upon a copyhold tenement of her husband's forty days without him, in Aythorp Rooding. Before the forty days expired the parish officers gave her notice to remove out of the parish; and as she refused to depart, the justices removed her from thence to White Rooding as a person likely to become chargeable. The court were unanimously of opinion, that although the wife could not gain a settlement by thus residing forty days upon her husband's estate, yet at the same time that she was irremovable from the property of her husband upon being only likely to become chargeable. And even if she go and reside upon an estate devised to her after her husband has deserted her, she cannot thereby gain a settlement for herself. Lord Hardwicke, C. J., said, "There never was an instance where the wife was held to acquire a settlement during the life of her husband. A feme covert cannot, by residence, gain a settlement for her husband." (Berkhampstead v. St. Mary, Northchurch, 2 Bott, 32; 1 Nol. P. L. 291.)

If the husband is in the progress of acquiring a settlement, by renting a tenement for a year, and he dies a few days before it is completed, the widow cannot, by continuing to reside and paying the year's rent, perfect the settlement for herself and children, as she was not the person who hired the tenement. (Rex v. Crayford, 6 B. & C. 68; 9 D. & R. 80.)

In Rex v. Birmingham, 8 B. & C. 29; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 408. The pauper, L. S., was married to E. S. when he was a minor, by licence, and without the consent of his father. The appellants offered to prove that the marriage of the pauper was effected by a fraudulent contrivance and conspiracy of the overseers of Little Packington, for the purpose of changing the settlement of the pauper from Little Packington to Birmingham, where the husband was settled; but the sessions refused to receive this evidence, and confirmed the order. Lord Tenterden, C. J., "It is difficult to say, that if the marriage is valid in other respects it could be invalidated by the fraud of other parties, and thus cause a separation of the husband from the wife." Contra, it was urged, that Mr. Nolan cites Dalton to show that no settlement brought about by fraud should be considered valid. Lord Tenterden, C. J., "Does the rule go further than this, that the court will prevent a fraud from having its effect when that can be done without violating some higher and more important rule?" Bayley, J., "Mr. Nolan treats the case of marriage as an exception from the general rule."

A woman, on the death of her husband, resumed her maiden name, and after several years was again married by banns in that name, describing herself as a widow; it was held, that in the absence of fraud such marriage was

(a) A contrary doctrine had been held in Upottery v. Dunkwell, S. & R. 89; 2 Bott, 102.

(b) An information will be granted against the overseers for procuring the marriage of an idiot woman, or of a woman pregnant with a bastard, with a view to change her settlement. (Rex v. Watson, 1 Wils. 41; Rex v. Tanant, 4 Burr. 2106; Rex v. Edwards, 8 Mod. 321.)

legal, and that her settlement followed that of her second husband. (Rex v. St. Faith's, Newton, 3 D. & R. 348.)

St. Giles's v. St. Margaret's, 1 Sess. Ca. 97; 2 Bott, 107. A woman marries an Irishman, and her husband dies. The court: "She must be sent to the place of her settlement before marriage."

Rex v. Chiddingstone, 1 Stra. 683. A single woman was married to a man who was since dead, but his settlement did not appear. The court: "Her settlement before marriage stands." S. P. Uphottery v. Dunkswell, 2 Bott, 108; 1 Sess. Cas. 80; Sett. & Rem. 89.

St. John's, Wapping, and St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, Burr. S. C. 367; 2 Bott, 109. E. Kinley married T. Kinley, an Irishman, who had no settlement in England. About two years ago, the husband entered on board a man of war bound for the West Indies, but E. about two months ago heard he was living: and the question was, whether her settlement which she had before marriage ceased, or was in suspense, during the coverture. Cur. ad. vult. Ryder, C. J. "1. It is certain St. Botolph's was once her settlement. 2. That settlement continues till she gains a new one. 3. That she has never yet gained a new one." To the second point he said, "a settlement is a permanent thing; it lasts during life, or till a new one is acquired; and there is no case where a settlement ceases by any other method; a man cannot give away, or release, or suspend his settlement, for the public is concerned as well as himself. The question is not, whether she gained any new settlement by marriage, but whether her old settlement were discontinued by her marriage with a person who had none? It is absurd to say she shall lose her own without getting another. The objection that the husband and wife would be separated is of no weight here, for they are separated already; for he has left her: I must own the case of Stretford v. Norton (a) is not to be distinguished from the present, and is against our present opinion: to be sure we must have great regard to former resolutions in this court, but we must judge upon the case before us. How that case came to be determined so I do not know; but there are at least four authorities the other way (which perhaps might not then be cited), and we think the reason is with the old cases. The husband may come to her in one parish as well as the other, for he will be a vagrant in both, and liable to be treated as such. The wife's settlement remains, having never been determined, but only, as it

4. Of Settlement by Marriage.

Husband dead and his place of settlement not known, the wife's maiden settlement remains.

If a woman who has a settlement marries a man who has none, and is deserted by him, she may be removed to her maiden settlement.

(a) In Stretford v. Norton, Andr. 307; 19 Vin. Abr. 376; Burr. S. C. 122. An Englishwoman married an Irishman who had no settlement in England. He ran away; his wife was removed to her maiden settlement. Lee, C. J. "It is now a settled point, that by the marriage the woman's settlement is suspended, whether the husband have or have not a settlement; for otherwise the justices might separate husband and wife; and therefore, to make the order good, it should have appeared that the man was dead." In Hanway v. Marston, T. 1 Geo. I. the Ch. J. said, "that the settlement of a woman who marries a vagrant is suspended during the coverture; and that as the husband cannot be sent to the place of the wife's settlement, so neither can the wife herself, because a husband and wife being as it were but one person cannot be parted." (Shadwell v. St. John's, Wapping, T. 9 Geo. I.) One Ridley, a vagrant, having no settlement, married a woman who had a settlement in St. John's, Wapping, and had four children by her, born in Stepney. And it was held, that the children were not settled in the place where they were born, but where the wife had a settlement; but that this was suspended during the coverture, and it revived again upon the death of the husband.

This last case is that which is said by Sir James Burrow (Burr. S. C. 124), to have been turned into a catch, in which form alone he had been able to meet with it. The metrical report is as follows:

A woman having a settlement
Married a man with none:
The question was, He being dead,
If that she had was gone?
Quoth *Sir John Pratt—Her settlement
Suspended did remain,
Living the husband; but, him dead,
It doth revive again.

Chorus of Puisne Judges.
Living the husband; but, him dead,
It doth revive again.

* Then Lord Chief Justice.

4. Of Settlement by Marriage.

The wife may be removed to her maiden settlement, if the husband's be not known :

Husband living, but having no known settlement in England.

Wife of Irishman, &c. removable to Ireland; but if deserted, to her own settlement.

On removal of a wife, it is sufficient in the first instance to prove her maiden settlement.

were, suspended during the time that she continued under the power and protection of her husband, and was maintained and supported by him.

Rex v. Westerham, Fol. 252; 2 Bott, 108. It appeared by the testimony of E. P., that she was at the time of the order a married woman, and that her husband was born in Wiltshire, but in what place he had a settlement she did not know: but he is run away, and still living, for what she knows. By the court: "Whether the husband be living or dead signifies nothing. For unless it appear that he has a settlement, the woman must be sent to the place of her settlement before her marriage: for, supposing the husband was born upon the high seas, or in Ireland, or a foreign country, if the woman might not be sent to the place of her settlement before marriage, she might be starved."

Dunsfold v. Wilsborough Green, Fol. 249; 2 Bott, 105. A woman who was settled at Wilsborough married a Scotchman, who had no settlement in England. She was removed to the place of her settlement before marriage. It was urged that as her husband was a Scotchman, they ought to send her, as part of his family, to the bordering counties of Scotland, according to the 39 Eliz. c. 4, s. 6. The court held, though she were a married woman, yet if her husband had no settlement, she could not gain any other settlement than she had before marriage; and as for divorce it was none; for the husband might come to her as well at Wilsborough as at Dunsfold; and as to the husband, nothing in the order appears as to him, whether in England or not.

It may be expedient here to observe, that by the 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 33, the whole family of a Scotchman or an Irishman^(a) must be sent to his country, upon becoming chargeable, but the statute does not authorize the removal of the wife alone to the place of her husband's birth. The law, therefore, remains as it stood before that statute, in cases where the husband deserts his wife. In Rex v. Leeds, 4 B. & Ald. 498, the husband and wife were living together, and it was held that she must be passed with him to Scotland, and could not be removed to her maiden settlement. But if such husband dies or quits his family, and they become chargeable, the removal must be to the wife's maiden settlement. (Rex v. Cottingham, 7 B. & C. 615; 1 M. & R. 439.)

Rex v. Ryton, Cald. 39; 2 Bott, 114. S. Kidson and her child were removed from Winlayton to Ryton. The order stated that S. K., the wife of B. K., a soldier in his majesty's regiment of foot, now in America, and Hannah their daughter, have come to inhabit, &c. S.'s maiden settlement was in Ryton; and her husband was at the time of the order in America, and it was not known whether he were living or dead; his settlement was unknown. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The sessions say that the evidence laid before them proved that which would make the order of the two justices right; and I think that upon the evidence they did right." The other judges concurred. Both orders affirmed.

S. P. Rex v. Edisore, Cald. 371; Rex v. Woodford, Cald. 236; 2 Bott, 118. M. P., widow, and her four children, were removed from Woodsford to Wimbourne Minster, in Dorsetshire. Order quashed. Case:—By rule of the sessions in Dorsetshire, on appeals against orders of removal, the appellants begin, and show some settlement of the pauper out of the parish appealing: for this purpose the appellants produced a copy of the register of the birth of the pauper. It was objected that this was not sufficient, but that the settlement of the husband ought to have been shown, and that to identify the pauper it was necessary to prove her marriage. The sessions adjudged that the proof of the birth of the pauper was sufficient, and that the onus probandi of the marriage lay upon the respondents in order to prove their case, and quashed the order. It was argued, that the pauper having been removed as a widow, it imported that it was a removal to her late husband's settlement, and that her maiden settlement was nothing to the purpose.

(a) See the cases collected, p. 96 to 100. Removal of paupers to Ireland, Scotland, &c.

But the court said: "It may be the husband had no settlement; and if he had, till discovered, her own would in the mean time remain. It is enough in the first instance: the sessions have done right."

Rex v. Harberton, 13 East, 311. Elizabeth, the wife of Charles Hill, and her daughters by her said husband, were removed from Harberton to Drewsteignton. The respondents proved that in 1806 the pauper married Charles Hill, in Chagford; and from a copy of the registry of the marriage, which was produced, it appeared that he was therein described to be of the parish of Alverdiscott, and Elizabeth was therein described to be of Drewsteignton. They also examined the wife, who proved that the children mentioned in the order were born after the marriage, and also that her husband was with her in Harberton a little after Christmas last, since which time he had left her, and she had not seen him since; that he was not there when she was examined before the justices previous to, nor at the time of her removal, and that she did not know her husband's settlement. The respondents gave no evidence to account for the absence of the husband, or of any further search having been made for him, or inquiry as to his settlement. The appellants produced no witnesses, nor did they offer any evidence of the husband's settlement. The sessions quashed the order. Soon after this case had been opened at the bar, the court said that there could be no doubt but that the evidence offered by the respondents, of the wife's maiden settlement, was prima facie sufficient, and that it lay upon the appellants to rebut it, by giving evidence of the husband's settlement in a different parish: but the sessions having decided against the respondents, upon the supposition that they had not used due diligence in endeavouring to procure the attendance of the husband, or in accounting for his absence, or inquiring as to his settlement, without going further into the consideration of the case, this court sent it back to be reheard by the sessions, to give the appellants an opportunity of entering into their own case, and of giving evidence of the husband's settlement; and the description in the copy of the marriage register of the husband, that he was of the parish of Alverdiscott, was considered to be no evidence of his having a settlement there.

Rex v. St. Mary, Beverley, 1 B. & Adol. 201. Harriet, wife of W. Owen, and their children, were removed from St. Martin to St. Mary, in Beverley. Order confirmed. Case:—The maiden settlement of Harriet was in St. Mary's, and both the children were born there. No proof was offered that Owen had gained a settlement in his own right; but on the part of the respondents, Ann Rogers, the mother of Owen, proved that she was the wife of a serjeant in the 30th regiment of foot; that she never heard or knew where his place of settlement was; that about twenty-seven years since, whilst the regiment was on the march, she was suddenly taken in labour upon a baggage waggon; that her son, William Owen (the husband of Harriet Owen), was born in the stable of an inn at Ipswich; that she never was in Ipswich before, nor had she ever been there since; that there were several parishes in Ipswich, but that she did not know in which parish the stable was situate, or to what it belonged; and that, even if she was now in Ipswich, she could not point out the stable or inn where she was confined. No proof was given of any other endeavour having been made on the part of the respondents to ascertain the parish in which William Owen was born. At the time of making the order of removal, William Owen was living with his wife and family in the parish of St. Martin, in Beverley. The husband, William Owen, gave his consent to the removal of his wife and family to the parish of St. Mary, in Beverley, but no proof was given of any consent on the part of Harriet Owen to her removal. The question for the opinion of the court was whether, under the circumstances, Harriet Owen and her children could be legally removed to the place of her maiden settlement.

Bayley, J. now delivered the judgment of the court. "We are of opinion that both the orders in this case ought to be quashed. To justify the confirmation of an order of removal, it ought to appear upon the evidence adduced by the respondents that the party removed is settled in the parish to which the removal is made; if that do not appear, and à fortiori if the contrary appear, the removal cannot be supported. Now the evidence in this case does not prove that the person removed is settled in the parish of St. Mary, to which she is removed, but in one of the parishes in Ipswich. It is argued, however, that as the respondents' witness did not know in which of the parishes in Ipswich the settlement was, and had proved a maiden settlement in the appellant parish, in the wife who was removed, the onus of proving in which of the parishes in Ipswich the husband was born was upon the appellant parish; and that in the absence of such proof, a removal to the wife's maiden settlement was warrantable. We do not concur in this reasoning. Where the respondents' evidence makes out a maiden settlement, and contains nothing to show that any subsequent settlement which would supersede the maiden settlement has been gained, that constitutes a prima facie case, and the onus of proof that the pauper was not settled there lies upon the appellants, but not that of proving the precise place where the pauper was settled. It is enough to disprove by clear evidence the obligation of the appellant parish to maintain the pauper; and the question may be considered for this purpose, as being in substance the same as if there were an issue to be tried between the two parishes whether the pauper was settled in the parish of St. Mary or not. None of the cases cited in argument go any thing like the length for which the respondents must contend. In Rex v. Woodford there was no proof of any settlement but the maiden settlement of the wife. The same was the case in Rex v. Harberton. In Rex v. Hensingham there was indeed proof that the husband had told his wife that he was born in Yorkshire, but what a man says as to the place of his birth is not receivable in evidence to prove it; and a similar observation applies to the case of Rex v. Westerham, of which there is a note in Burn's Justice, tit. Poor, ante, 316. The only remaining case cited by the respondents was that of Rex v. Eltham, where the husband was a Scotchman, and had no settlement of his own. I am not aware of any other case in favour of the respondents. Now what do these cases prove? They prove at the utmost, that where there is no sufficient evidence of any settlement in the husband, and where the only settlement as to which there is any is the wife's maiden settlement, the wife may be removed to that settlement; but they do not bear upon the point where it appears upon the evidence that there is a settlement in the husband. Upon the ground, therefore, that in this it appears upon the respondents' evidence that the husband has a settlement in a parish at Ipswich, we are of opinion that a removal to the wife's maiden settlement cannot be supported, and that the order of sessions ought to be quashed." Order of sessions quashed.

EVIDENCE OF SETTLEMENT BY MARRIAGE.

The most usual evidence of the marriage is, by a person who was present, (and either husband or wife is a competent witness for this purpose,) and the production of the parish register, with proof of the identity of the parties.

A marriage may be proved by reputation, as that the parties cohabited together, and were received by relations and friends as man and wife.

Morris v. Miller, 4 Burr. 2057. In all cases but of prosecution for bigamy and actions of crim. con. reputation is good proof of marriage.

A marriage is presumed to have been celebrated with the formalities necessary to its validity till the contrary be shown; and it is not necessary to prove that the minister was in orders, or to prove any of the proceedings preliminary to the actual solemnization of the marriage. (St. Devereux v. Much Dewchurch, 1 Bla. R. 367. See Stark. Ev. 932.)

The 3 Geo. IV. c. 75, s. 19, enacts, "That after the solemnization of any marriage under a publication of banns, it shall not be necessary in support of such marriage to give any proof of any such affidavit, nor shall any evidence be received to prove that such affidavit was not made and delivered as required by this act, in any suit touching the validity of such marriage; nor shall such marriage be avoided for want of or by reason of any defect in any such affidavit, or on account of the true name or names of either party not being used in the publication of such banns, or for such name or names not having been affixed as aforesaid; but it shall be lawful in support of such marriage to give evidence that the persons who are actually married by the names specified in such publication of banns were so married, and such marriage shall be deemed good and valid to all intents and purposes, notwithstanding false names or a false name, assumed by both or either of the said parties in the publication of such banns, or at the time of the solemnization of such marriage."

But after proof of an actual marriage, it may be shown that the solemnities required by statute, and without which the marriage would be void, have not been observed. (Standen v. Standen, Peake's Rep. 32.)

The first statute requiring the observance of particular forms, was the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, the 11th section of which was repealed by 3 Geo. IV. c. 75. That section enacted, that marriages by banns, without consent of parents, should be void. The 3 Geo. IV. c. 76, contained a retrospective clause legalizing marriages in such cases. As to the then state of the law, Lord Tenterden has observed, "The 4 Geo. IV. c. 17, repeals the 3 Geo. IV. c. 75, except as to things done under its provisions, and except so far as it repealed any former act, or any clause, matter, or thing therein contained. The retrospective clause in 3 Geo. IV. c. 75, did operate, with respect to the particular marriages to which it applied, as a repeal of the clauses in 26 Geo. II. c. 33, which rendered them invalid; it therefore was not repealed by the subsequent statutes, and the marriage of an illegitimate minor is perfectly good, even if by license; if by banns it was so before 3 Geo. IV. c. 75." (Rose v. Blakemore, E., 7 Geo. IV. Ryan & Moody, 382.) The 4 Geo. IV. c. 17, and 26 Geo. II., were altogether repealed by the following statute.

By stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, s. 8, "No minister, &c. solemnizing marriage between persons, both or one of whom shall be under the age of twenty-one years, after banns published, shall be punished by ecclesiastical censures for so doing, without consent of parents or guardians required by law, unless such minister, &c., shall have notice of their dissent: and if such parents or guardians shall publicly declare, or cause to be declared, in the church or chapel where and at the time the banns are so published their dissent to such marriage, such publication of banns shall be absolutely void."

Sect. 21, "If any person shall solemnize matrimony in any other place than a church or such public chapel wherein banns may be lawfully published, unless by special license, or shall solemnize matrimony without due publication of banns, or at any other time than between eight and twelve in the forenoon, unless license be first obtained from some person having authority to grant the same, or if any person falsely pretending to be in holy orders shall solemnize matrimony according to the rites of the church of England; every such offender shall, on conviction, be guilty of felony, and transported for fourteen years; provided, that all prosecutions for such felony shall be commenced within three years after offence committed."

Sect. 22 provided, "That if any person shall knowingly and wilfully intermarry in any other place than a church, or such public chapel wherein banns shall be lawfully published, unless by special license as aforesaid, or shall knowingly and wilfully intermarry without due publication of banns or license from a person or persons having authority to grant the same first had and obtained: or shall knowingly and wilfully consent to, or acquiesce in, the solemnization of such marriage by any person not being in holy orders, the marriages of such persons shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

Rex v. Birmingham, 8 B. & C. 29; 2 M. & R. 230; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 408. Luke Smith and Elizabeth his wife were removed from St. Michael and the Holy Trinity, in Coventry, to Birmingham. Order confirmed, subject as respects Elizabeth to a case: Luke was married to Elizabeth in 1826, by license, he then being a minor and his father living, who did not consent to his marriage. It was objected that his marriage was void under the 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, for want of the father's consent. Lord Tenterden, C. J.

The marriage of a minor by license, without the consent required by 4 Geo. IV. c. 75, s. 16, is valid.

Evidence of
by Marriage.

"We are all of opinion that the marriage in question is valid. A marriage under such circumstances would, by the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, s. 11, have been void, but the 3 Geo. IV. c. 75, s. 1, recites that section, and that it had been productive of great evils and injustice, and then proceeds to enact, 'That so much of the said statute as is hereinbefore recited, as far as the same relates to any marriage to be hereafter solemnized, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.' The second section enacted, 'that marriages theretofore solemnized by license, without such consent as required by the former act, should be valid,' with certain limitations imposed by the third and fourth following sections. Then the eighth and subsequent sections contained the new provisions as to granting licenses in future. These were repealed by the 4 Geo. IV. c. 17, which restored certain parts of the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, and some question might be raised as to whether that part of the 3 Geo. IV. c. 76, remained in force, which repealed the 11th section of the 26 Geo. II. But that question is now rendered immaterial by the 4 Geo. IV. c. 75, which repealed the 4 Geo. IV. c. 17, and so much of the 26 Geo. II. c. 33, as was then in force. The only statute therefore now to be considered, is the 4 Geo. IV. c. 75, the fourteenth section of which points out the mode in which licenses are to be obtained, and the matters to be sworn to by the parties, or one of them; and one of those matters, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of twenty-one years, is, that the consent of the person or persons whose consent to such marriage is required under the provisions of this act, has been obtained thereto. Then the sixteenth section specifies the persons who shall have power to consent, and proceeds, 'and such consent is hereby required for the marriage of such party so under age, unless there shall be no person authorized to give such consent.' The language of this section is merely to require consent; it does not proceed to make the marriage void, if solemnized without consent. Then the twenty-second section declares that certain marriages shall be null and void, and a marriage by license without consent is not specified. Thus far, therefore, the question depends upon the direction in the sixteenth section; and if there were any doubt upon the construction of that section, it would be removed by the twenty-third, which enacts, that 'If any valid marriage, solemnized by license, shall be procured by a party to such marriage to be solemnized between persons, one or both of whom shall be under age, by means of falsely swearing to any matter to which such party is required personally to depose,' not that the marriage shall be void, but that all the property accruing from the marriage shall be forfeited, and shall be secured for the benefit of the innocent party, or the issue of the marriage. This is a penalty for disobeying the direction of the legislature given in the sixteenth section, and is calculated to prevent fraudulent and clandestine marriages, by depriving the guilty party of the pecuniary benefit, which is most commonly the inducement moving to the fraud. For these reasons it appears to us that the marriage in this case is valid, and the order of sessions right."

Afterwards Rebecca was brought to bed in Chilham of the child removed by the order. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. The marriage is void and null to all intents and purposes, even though the parties should afterwards agree to it, wherever the fact appears directly contrary to the statute." And by the whole court: "Let the orders be quashed as to Rebecca and the child."

Before the repeal of 26 Geo. II. c. 33, it was held in Rex v. Hodnet (1 T. R. 96), that a marriage of illegitimate minors, without consent, was void under sect. 11. (a) In Horner v. Liddiard (1 Hagg. Rep. 337, 360), Lord Stowell held the same point, and that the necessary consent could be only given by a guardian appointed by Chancery; and in Priestly v. Hughes (11 East, 1), it was decided that the consent of the natural mother to a marriage by license was not sufficient.

"It is part of the law of England, that the law of the country where a marriage is solemnized shall be adopted." Holroyd, J. (Doe in d. Birt-whistle v. Vardill, 5 B. & C. 438; 8 D. & R. 189; Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. C. R. 54; Ruding v. Smith, id. 371.) (a)

"By the ancient general law of Europe, a contract per verba de presenti, or a promise per verba de futuro cum copulâ, constitutes a valid marriage. The intervention of a priest was first required by the council of Trent." Lord Stowell in Dalrymple v. Dalrymple. This general rule prevails in Scotland, but there the intervention of a priest is unnecessary.

It is an undoubted proposition, that a marriage celebrated in Scotland is such a marriage as would entitle the woman to a dower in England. (Ilderton v. Ilderton, 2 Hen. Bla. 145.)

Marriages by Romish priests, whose orders are acknowledged by the church of England, have been deemed to have the effect of legal marriages in some instances, (at least before the 26 Geo. II. per Lord Ellenborough, 10 East, 288.)

Rex v. Brampton, 10 East, 282. Whilst the British army was at St. Domingo, the pauper and a man belonging to that army went to a chapel, in order to be married; and there a service was read in the French language by a person dressed like a priest, and interpreted into the English language by a person who officiated as clerk. The pauper did not understand French, but by the interpreter she understood it was the marriage service of the established church of England read in French. She did not know that the person officiating was a priest. She received a certificate of marriage, which she lost. There was no chaplain with the British forces at that time in St. Domingo. No evidence was given of the laws or usage of the island respecting the marriage ritual there. She and the man lived together as man and wife till his death, and she was removed to his settlement. Order quashed. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "First, considering it as a marriage celebrated in a place where the law of England prevailed; for I may suppose, in the

(a) In that case Lord Stowell observes, that "it is not e converso established that marriages of British subjects, not good according to the law of the place where celebrated, are universally and under all possible circumstances, to be regarded as invalid in England: the safest course is to be married according to the law of the country, but if this cannot be done, on account of legal or religious difficulties, the law of this country does not say that its subjects shall not marry abroad. And where no difficulties of that insuperable magnitude exist, yet if a contrary practice has been sanctioned by long acquiescence and acceptance of the one country, the courts of this country, I presume, would not incline to shake their validity, upon these large and general theories, encountered as they are, by numerous exceptions, and the practice of nations." And by 4 Geo. IV. c. 91, after reciting "that it is expedient to relieve the minds of all his Majesty's subjects from any doubt concerning the validity of marriages solemnized by a minister of the church of England, in the chapel or house of any British ambassador or minister residing within the country, to the court of which he is accredited, or in the chapel belonging to any British factory abroad, or in the house of any British subject residing at such factory, as well as from any possibility of doubt, concerning the validity of marriages solemnized within the British lines, by any chaplain or officer, officiating under the orders of the commanding officer of a British army serving abroad," it is declared and enacted, "That all such marriages as aforesaid shall be deemed and held to be as valid in law as if the same had been solemnized within his Majesty's dominions, with a due observance of all form required by law."

absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the law of England, ecclesiastical and civil, was recognised by subjects of England in a place occupied by the King's troops, who would impliedly carry that law with them; then, Was it a good marriage before the marriage act? Certainly, before that act, a contract of marriage per verba de presenti would have bound the parties; this was such a marriage, and performed by one who publicly assumed the office of a priest, and appeared habited as such; of what persuasion does not appear: but even if it were performed by a Roman Catholic priest, the case would be the same; for such a person would be recognised by our church as a priest capable of officiating as such, upon his mere renunciation of the errors of the church of Rome. But Rex v. Fielding shows that a marriage by a Roman Catholic priest (before the marriage act) was effectual for that purpose, which was considered as a contract per verba de presenti. In this case the ceremony was performed in a public chapel, instead of in private lodgings, as in Fielding's case. Considering, therefore, the case to be that the king's forces carried with them the law of England to St. Domingo, by which they and other subjects who accompanied them (in the absence of proof that any other law was in force there) may be considered as continuing to be governed, this would be a good marriage by that law. But supposing this law of England not to have been carried to St. Domingo by the king's forces, nor obligatory upon them in this particular, let us consider whether the facts stated would not be evidence of a good marriage, according to the law of that country, whatever it might be. And, indeed, after the ceremony of marriage, as it was understood and intended by the parties at the time to be, performed openly in a chapel, by a person appearing there as a priest authorized to perform the ceremony of marriage, and this followed by a cohabitation between the two parties for eleven years afterwards, every presumption is to be raised in favour of its validity. I should have considered myself as safe, in resting my opinion in favour of this marriage upon the law of England, independent of the provisions of the marriage act: but without the aid of that, I think every presumption must be made in favour of its validity, according to the law of the country where it was so celebrated: having been performed there in a proper place, and by a person officiating as one competent to perform that function." The other judges agreed.

Rex v. Twynning, 2 B. & Ald. 386. Mary Burns, the wife of Francis Burns, an Irishman, then absent, was removed from Manchester to Twynning. Order confirmed. Case:—About seven years ago the pauper married R. Winter, with whom she lived a few months, when he enlisted as a soldier, went abroad on foreign service, and has never been heard of since. In a little more than twelve months after her departure, the pauper being settled in Twynning, married Francis Burns, with whom she has ever since cohabited; the children mentioned in the order were born during such cohabitation, and are the children of Francis Burns; but were not born in Twynning. Bayley, J., "Are we to presume that Winter was alive at the time of the second marriage, and the woman guilty of bigamy? If the pauper had been indicted for bigamy, it would clearly not be sufficient. In that case, Winter must have been proved to have been alive at the time of the second marriage. It is contended that his death ought to have been proved; but the answer is, that the presumption of law is, that he was not alive, when the consequence of his being so is, that another person has committed a criminal act. I think, therefore, that the sessions decided right in holding the second marriage to have been valid, unless proof had been given that the first husband was alive at the time."

East Haddon, was quashed. Case:—The respondents proved that Henry Smith, being settled in East Haddon, married the pauper on the 11th of April, 1831, and afterwards deserted her. The appellants then proved that, on the 4th of October, 1821, Henry Smith had married one Elizabeth Meadows; and in order to show that she was alive at the time when he married, the pauper called the father of Elizabeth, who proved that his daughter and Henry Smith continued to live together till 1825, when he left her, and she went into Northampton hospital, that he had since received several letters from her, dated from Van Dieman's Land; and he produced a letter, dated Hobart Town, 17th of March, 1831, which he proved to be in her hand writing. The sessions received the letter in evidence, and quashed the order. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the sessions were justified in presuming that Elizabeth, the first wife of Henry Smith, was alive at the time of his marriage with the pauper. If so, the order of sessions to be confirmed, otherwise to be quashed. Lord Denman, C. J., "The question is, whether the sessions were justified in coming to the conclusion, that a party who was proved to have been alive on the 17th of March, was alive on the 11th of April. If that conclusion was right, the marriage was invalid. It appears to me that the evidence was properly admitted, and that the sessions have come to a correct conclusion. There was strong evidence to show that the party was alive; and there were no circumstances from which a contrary inference of fact could be drawn. The only matter that raised any doubt in my mind was the doctrine laid down by Bayley, J., in Rex v. Twynning. In that case, however, the sessions came to a different conclusion; they did not choose to presume that the first husband was alive at the time of the second marriage of the wife; and the court said, that there was no legal presumption to countervail that finding of fact; but it was totally unnecessary to enter into the question of conflicting presumptions." Lord Tenterden, C. J., and Holroyd, J., did not happen to be present. Bayley, J., seems to have taken up the matter on a principal which certainly was not necessary for the decision of the case. "Here the sessions have said, 'The circumstances are of such a nature, that we will not presume that the wife was not alive.' It appears to me, that nothing could be more absurd, than that there should be a presumption of life or death without reference to the age, circumstances, situation of life, and common habits of the party. Can there be the same presumption as to a party who is 100 and one who is 35? As to a party who was in good health when last heard of, and one who was proved to have then a disorder upon him, which was likely speedily to terminate in his death? It cannot be. It is altogether a question of fact. The only question that can be is, whether the sessions or a jury have competent evidence before them. In Doe v. Nepean the question arose much in the same manner. In that case the question was, whether there had been an adverse possession for twenty years, and this depended upon the question, whether a party who went abroad, and was never again heard of, must necessarily be taken to be alive up to the end of seven years after his departure. The learned judge said that the law was so; and he did not leave it to the jury to say whether the party was alive up to that time. When, however, the case came before the court, they held that there was no legal presumption of the continuance of life until the last period. That is perfectly consistent with our decision in the present case. In Rex v. Twynning the point arose exactly in the same manner as in this case. The sessions having found one way, the question was, whether there was any legal presumption against that finding. In every case the only question that can arise is, whether the evidence was in its nature admissible; for otherwise, supposing even that it had been proved that the party was alive on the 10th, and that the marriage had taken place on the 11th, you could not presume that the party was alive at the time of the marriage. The sessions were justified in forming their own opinions upon the facts laid before them; and they have given an opinion from which no persons can dissent."

Case:—The pauper, in 1775, married J. Jones, at Buerlyhill chapel, in Kingswinford, which was erected in 1765, and then duly consecrated, and in which divine service had been regularly celebrated ever since; and wherein banns of matrimony had been often published, and marriages celebrated previous to the marriage in question. The chapel was erected since the marriage act, and not erected on the foundation of one that was ancient. No act of parliament was obtained for erecting it, or for celebrating marriages there. The question was, “Whether the marriage was void by the provisions of the said act?” It was contended, that the words usually published, in the act, ought to be considered to mean, usually at the time when the marriage in question took place. If so, there was enough stated in the case for the court to consider this as a chapel, in which banns had been usually published. Lord Mansfield, C. J., was for some time averse to determine a question of such serious consequence in a collateral way on a settlement case. “But, upon more consideration,” he said, “I think we ought now to decide it. If there has been an abuse, we ought to stop it as early as possible. A delay might lead to a supposition that we doubt, when in truth we do not. The act clearly meant chapels existing at the time. I am of opinion that this marriage was void by the provisions of the statute. [Soon after this determination was known, the 21 Geo. III. c. 53, was passed, for making all marriages which had been solemnized in any parish church, or public chapel, erected since the 26 Geo. II. and consecrated, valid in law, and to exempt the clergyman who had solemnized such marriages from the penalties of that statute.]

By 44 Geo. III. c. 77, it is enacted, that all marriages solemnized, or to be solemnized before 25th March, 1805, in churches, or chapels, erected since the making of 26 Geo. II. c. 33, and consecrated, shall be good and valid in law. And the ministers solemnizing them indemnified from the penalties of the former statute.

By 48 Geo. III. c. 127, the like provisions are enacted with respect to all marriages so solemnized, or to be solemnized, before the 23d of August, 1808. The registers are to be preserved, and to be evidence, as in 26 Geo. II. c. 33.

By 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 6, marriages may be solemnized in the chapels of consolidated chapelries, (viz. parts of contiguous parishes and places united into separate districts for ecclesiastical purposes,) which were built by order of the Commissioners for Building New Churches; and by s. 16, the same commissioners may direct whether marriages shall be had, or not, in chapels erected by them in parishes divided into ecclesiastical districts, or district parishes.

By 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, s. 3, “the bishop of the diocese, with the consent of the patron and the incumbent of the church of the parish in which any public chapel, having a chapelry thereunto annexed, may be situated, or of any chapel situated in an extra-parochial place, signified to him under their hands and seals respectively, may authorize, by writing, under his hand and seal, the publication of banns and the solemnization of marriages in such chapel, for persons residing within such chapelry, or extra-parochial place respectively, and such consent, together with such written authority, shall be registered in the registry of the diocese.”

Sect. 5. Provided, “that in every chapel, in respect of which such authority shall be given as aforesaid, there shall be placed, in some conspicuous part of the interior of such chapel, a notice in the words following: ‘Banns may be published and marriages solemnized in this chapel.’”

The Banns must be published in the true Names of the Parties.

Rex v. Billingshurst, 3 M. & Sel. 250. Removal from Salehurst to Billingshurst. Case:—The pauper, whose name is Abraham Langley, was married to his present wife in Lamberhurst, by banns, about four years ago, by the name of George Smith. Previously to his marriage he had resided about three years at Lamberhurst, and from his first coming, and during all the having been known in the parish where he resided, and was married by that name only, from his first coming into the parish till his marriage, which was about three years: Held, that the marriage was valid.

time he remained there, he was known by the name of George Smith only. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "All that the law requires on this subject is, that marriages shall be solemnized either by licence, or publication of banns, otherwise the 26 Geo. II. c. 36, s. 8, declares that they shall be void. The statute does not specify what shall be necessary to be observed in the publication of banns; or that the banns shall be published in the true names; but certainly it must be understood as the clear intention of the legislature, that the banns shall be published in the true names, because it requires that notice in writing shall be delivered to the minister of the true Christian and surnames of the parties, seven days before the publication: and unless such notice be given, he is not obliged to publish the banns. The question then is, has there been, in this case, that which is required, a due notification by the minister, on a Sunday, in time of divine service, of one of the persons intending to contract marriage? Now it appears that such notification has been made by the name of George Smith, by which name alone the party was known in the place where he resided, and which he had borne for three years prior to the celebration of the marriage, in that place, and that he was not known there by any other name. It would lead to perilous consequences, if, in every case, an inquiry were to be instituted, at the hazard of endangering the marriage of a woman, who had every reason to think she was acquiring a legitimate husband, whether the name by which the husband was notified in the banns were strictly his baptismal name, or whether at the period of his baptism he may not have received some other name. What the consequences might be of encouraging such inquiries, as to the avoiding of marriages, and bastardizing the issue of them, it is not very difficult to imagine. The object of the statute, in the publication of banns, was to secure notoriety, to apprise all persons of the intention of the parties to contract marriage; and how can that object be better attained, than by a publication in the name by which the party is known? If the publication here had been in the name of Abraham Langley, it would not of itself have drawn any attention to the party, because he was unknown by that name, and its being coupled with the name of the woman who probably was known, would perhaps have led those who knew her, and knew that she was about to be married to a person of another name, to suppose, either that these were not the same parties, or that there was some mistake. Therefore, the publication in the real name, instead of being notice to all persons, would have operated as a deception; and it is strictly correct to say, that the original name, in this case, would not have been the true name within the meaning of the statute. On these grounds I think that the act only meant to require that the parties should be published by their known and acknowledged names, and to hold a different construction would make a marriage by banns a snare, and in many instances a ruin upon innocent parties. The court, therefore, cannot lend itself to a construction which would be pregnant with such consequences." Le Blanc, J. "The object of the marriage act was to insure notoriety to the transaction, and, I think, the court recollecting that, cannot say that a marriage by banns, published in the names by which alone the party was known, is a marriage without publication of banns. The argument is, that a marriage by publication of banns means, by publication of banns in the real names of the parties only; but the statute has said no such thing. If the banns be published in the names of the party by which alone he is known, and there is no fraud, whether that be the true Christian or surname of the party or not, I think the marriage is good within the meaning of the statute. Therefore, I am of opinion, that upon the present occasion everything was done that was sufficient to give that notification of the marriage which it was the object of the marriage act to insure." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Burton-upon-Trent, 3 M. & Sel. 537. Removal from Grooby to Burton-upon-Trent. Case:—The pauper's father, whose real name was Joseph Price, was married at Leicester, by license, by the name of Joseph Grew, having changed his name to Grew because he had deserted from the army, and he was known by that name only at Leicester, where he lodged at the time of his marriage, and where he had resided sixteen weeks. never passed by any name but Price in his father's family, and in the place where they resided. His wife did not know his real name till a fortnight after the marriage, when he told it her. The pauper was the issue of this marriage, and was born at Burton-upon-Trent, and after his birth his parents were married by the true name. The sessions considered the first marriage as invalid, and therefore that the pauper was not entitled to his father's settlement. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If this name had been assumed for the purpose of fraud, in order to enable the party to contract marriage, and to conceal himself from the party to whom he was about to be married, that would have been a fraud on the marriage act, and the rights of marriage, and the court would not have given effect to any such corrupt purpose. But where a name has been previously assumed, so as to have become the name which the party has acquired by reputation, that is, within the meaning of the marriage act, the party's true name. The same law has been recognized in the case of negotiable instruments, where, if a party sign an instrument in a name assumed by him for other purposes a considerable time before, such signature will not amount to a forgery; but otherwise, if he assume a name by which he had never been known before, for the purpose of the fraud. Now, here the party assumed the name for the purpose of concealment, and not of fraud upon the marriage, and he was known by that name alone for sixteen weeks in the place where he was married. It seems to me, therefore, that he had acquired the name, and that to have had a license in any other name would have been a fraud on the marriage act." Le Blanc, J. "The name was assumed by the father for the purpose of concealing himself as a deserter from his Majesty's service, and not with a view to impose upon the woman whom he married." Bayley, J. "The sessions may always draw the line, whether the name was assumed for a fraudulent purpose, as it regards the marriage, or not." Order quashed. (See 2 East's P. C. 967, 968.)

Rex v. St. Faith's, Newton, 3 D. & R. 348; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 34. Order of removal of Ann Lovick from Norwich to St. Faith's, Newton, confirmed. Case:—The pauper, whose maiden name was Ann Lovick, was married on the 14th of September, 1812, to James Browne, a man of colour, whose settlement is unknown, and who was then a private in the 69th regiment. About half-a-year afterwards, Browne went to Ipswich, and the pauper, at his request, followed him thither, and remained with him there a few weeks, when she returned to Norwich, and never saw or heard anything of her husband afterwards, except that a report reached her of his death by drowning, but it is not otherwise known when he died, or whether he is dead. On the 31st of March, 1822, and after the pauper had received such information of the death of Browne, she was married, by banns, to William Rigg, widower, by the name and description of Ann Lovick, widow. Both at Ipswich, and after her return to Norwich, the pauper went by the name of Ann Lovick only, till her marriage with Rigg. Bayley, J. "The object of the statute was to make it notorious to the world who were the parties that were about to enter into the married state, and, therefore, wherever the name is fraudulently assumed or concealed, that object is defeated, and the marriage is void. But when the party has assumed a new name, not for any fraudulent purpose, but fairly and openly, and has, for a considerable period, used and been known by that name, then, it has been in several cases decided, a marriage under that name is valid. The name, in this case, does not appear to have been assumed for the purposes of the marriage, or for any improper purpose; and, under the circumstances of this case, at least as much notoriety was given of the person of the pauper by the name of Lovick, as could have been given by that of Browne. The former was her maiden name, she had gone by it for many years, and was, therefore, more likely to be recognized by that name than by the other. The mere fact that some one individual may be deceived is not sufficient to annul the marriage; the name must be assumed fraudulently. That has long been the rule of construction upon this subject, and that rule is acted upon in the cases that have been cited. I am, therefore, of opinion that this is a valid marriage, and that a different decision would be very likely to produce much mischief; for where a party has several names, one of them may be easily omitted by accident or mistake, and it would be a most grievous thing if every marriage solemnized under such circumstances were to be deemed illegal."

Rex v. Tibshelf, 1 B. & Adol. 190. The pauper and her husband were married, in 1817, by banns, by the names of Joseph Betts and Mary White. The husband had been baptized as the son of John and Mary Betts. Mary Betts was the daughter of Samuel Wilson, and her husband having absconded shortly after their marriage, her son, the pauper's husband, was brought up by his maternal grandfather, and was always called by the name of Wilson, was bound apprentice by that name, with the consent of his grandfather, and was never called or known by the name of Betts, or by any other name than Wilson, either before or after his marriage with the pauper. The pauper, Mary, was the legitimate daughter of Job and Martha Hodgkinson, and was never called or known by any name, except Hodgkinson, till after her marriage; but in the register of her baptism she is described as "Mary, the daughter of Samuel White and his wife" Her mother was the daughter of Samuel and Dorothy White, and her father and mother resided with them at the time of her birth, and her mother's brother stated that he believed the entry in the register to have been a mistake of the clergyman who baptized her; and that he was the person who discovered the mistake in the register previous to the pauper's marriage, it having been supposed that her baptism was omitted to be registered. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The question whether this removal is right or not depends upon the validity of the marriage between Joseph Betts and the said Mary. If the marriage was invalid, the order of sessions was wrong, and we are of opinion it was invalid. This marriage was in 1817, and at that time the only act by which marriages were regulated, was the 26 Geo. II. c. 39, which was finally repealed, except as to all acts, matters, and things done under its provisions, by 4 Geo. IV. c. 76. Neither that act, nor the repealed act 3 Geo. IV. c. 75, contains any clause rendering former marriages by improper banns valid; and if s. 19 of the latter act could have been construed as having that effect, it could not have any operation after the repeal of that act. The act 26 Geo. II. provides, by s. 8, that all marriages that shall be solemnized without publication of banns, or license, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever. In the directions in that statute for the publication of banns, nothing is said as to the names of the parties, but s. 2 excuses the minister from publishing them, unless the parties deliver in, in writing, their true Christian and surnames. And in a series of decisions upon this statute, both in the Ecclesiastical Courts and the Court of King's Bench, it has been held that the clear intention of the legislature was that the banns are to be published in the true names of the parties, otherwise it is no publication at all. By these decisions these rules are fully established: first, that if there be a total variation of a name or names, that is, if the banns are published in a name or names totally different from those which the parties, or one of them, ever used, or by which they were ever known, the marriage in pursuance of that publication is invalid; and it is immaterial in such cases, whether the misdescription has arisen from accident or design, or whether such design be fraudulent or not. But, secondly, if there be a partial variation of name only, as the alteration of a letter or letters, or the addition or suppression of one Christian name, or the names have been such as the parties have used and been known by at one time and not at another, in such cases the publication may or may not be void; the supposed misdescription may be explained, and it becomes a most important part of the inquiry, whether it was consistent with honesty of purpose, or arose from a fraudulent intention. It is in this class of cases only that it is material to inquire into the motives of the parties. The substance of these rules will be found in the judgments of Lord Stowell, in the cases of Sullivan v. Sullivan (2 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 254), Frankland v. Nicholson (3 M. & Sel. 261, 1 Phill. Rep. 147), Pougett v. Tomkins (3 M. & Sel. 263), and Mather v. Ney (3 M. & Sel. 265), and in the judgments in Rex v. Billingshurst (3 M. & Sel. 256), in this court. The present case falls distinctly within the first rule. Whether the alleged husband was sufficiently

The Banns must be in the true names.

In the publication of banns, in 1817, a woman, named Mary Hodgkinson, was called White, a surname entered by mistake in the register of her baptism, but which she had never gone by or been entitled to. The false name was given to the officiating clergyman without any intention to mislead, nor did any individual, having an interest in the marriage, appear to have been deceived: Held, that the marriage was void.

The Banns must be in the true names.

designated by the name of Betts we need not inquire, as we are clearly of opinion that the woman was never known by and never used the surname of 'White,' so as to make that, in any latitude of construction, 'a true name' within the meaning of the statute. Her family name, and that by which she was always known, was Hodgkinson. The only occasion upon which the name of White was applied to her was in the register of her baptism; she was not baptized by that name, for the surname is never used in the baptismal ceremony; but the name was entered in the register necessarily without her privity, and it seems without that of her parents, and probably by a mere error of the officiating minister, who appears to have mistaken her parentage, and considered her as the child of her maternal grandfather and grandmother. It is impossible, whatever may be the disposition to favour parties who have meant to act correctly, and from the best motives, to say that a surname so entered can be the true name of the party to whom it is applied. It is, doubtless, a great hardship upon these innocent persons to pronounce that this marriage is void, but it would be a much greater inconvenience to the public to alter the settled rules upon this subject, for the sake of preventing a particular mischief." Order of sessions quashed.

5. of Settlement by Hiring and Service.

V. Of Settlement by Hiring and Service.

This branch of the law of settlement has been prospectively materially altered by 4 and 5 Will. IV. c. 76, (passed 14th August, 1834), sect. 64 enacting, "that from and after the passing of this act, no settlement shall be acquired by hiring and service, or by residence under the same, or by serving an office;" and sect. 65 enacts, "that no person under any contract of hiring and service not completed at the time of the passing of this act, shall acquire, or be deemed or adjudged to have acquired, any settlement by reason of such hiring and service, or of any residence under the same." But, as for many years to come, questions will no doubt continually arise relative to settlements acquired by hiring and service, antecedent to this act, viz. 14th August, 1834, it is necessary in this edition to examine this branch of settlement.

The statutes relating to settlements.

Before this recent statute, 4 and 5 Will. IV. c. 76, the 13 and 14 Car. II. c. 12, s. 1, after reciting the evils resulting from the vagrancy of the poor, it was thereby enacted, "that it should and might be lawful, upon complaint made by the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of any parish to any justice of the peace, within forty days after any such person or persons coming to settle as aforesaid, in any tenement under the yearly value of ten pounds, for any two justices of the peace, whereof one to be of the quorum, of the division where any person or persons, that are likely to be chargeable to the parish, shall come to inhabit, by their warrant to remove and convey such person or persons to such parish, where he or they were last legally settled, either as a native, householder, sojourner, apprentice, or servant for the space of forty days at the least, unless he or they give sufficient security for the discharge of the said parish to be allowed by the said justices."

Persons removable, unless security given for the discharge of the parish.

Certificates to prevent removal in certain cases.

Sect. 3. Provided also, "that (this act notwithstanding) it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons to go into any county, parish, or place, to work in time of harvest, or at any time to work at any other work, so that he or they carry with him or them a certificate from the minister of the parish and one of the churchwardens and one of the overseers for the poor for the said year, that he or they have a dwelling-house or place in which he or they inhabit, and hath left wife and children, or some of them there (or otherwise as the condition of the persons shall require), and is declared an inhabitant or inhabitants there: and in such case, if the person or persons shall not return to the place aforesaid, when his or their work is finished, or shall fall sick or impotent whilst he or they are in the said work, it shall not be accounted a settlement in the cases abovesaid, but that it shall and may be lawful for two justices of the peace to convey the said person or persons to the place of his or their habitation as aforesaid, under the pains and penalties in this act prescribed: and if such person or persons shall refuse to go, or shall not remain in such parish where they ought to be settled as aforesaid, but shall return of his own accord to the parish from whence he was removed, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace of the city, county, or town corporate where the said offence shall be committed, to send such person or persons offending to the house of correction, there to be punished as a vagabond, or to a public workhouse in this present act hereafter mentioned, there to be employed in work or labour; and if the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish to which he or they shall be removed, refuse to receive such person or persons, and to provide work for them, as other inhabitants of the parish, any justice of peace of that division may and shall thereupon bind any such officer or officers in whom there shall be default, to the assizes or sessions, there to be indicted for his or their contempt in that behalf."

By 1 Jac. II. c. 17, s. 3, it is enacted, "that the forty days' continuance of such person in a parish, intended by the said act to make a settlement, shall be accounted from the time of his or her delivery of notice in writing, (which they are hereby required to do,) of the house of his or her abode, and the number of his or her family, if he or she have any, to one of the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the said parish, to which they shall so remove."

The 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, enacts, "that the forty days' continuance of such person in a parish or town, intended by the said acts to make a settlement, shall be accounted from the publication of a notice in writing, which he or she shall deliver, of the house of his or her abode, and the number of his or her family, if he or she have any, to the churchwarden or overseer of the poor, which said notice in writing the said churchwarden or overseer of the poor is or are hereby required to read, or cause to be read publicly, immediately after divine service in the church or chapel of the said parish or town, on the next Lord's day when there shall be divine service in the same; and the said churchwarden or overseer of the poor is or are hereby required to register, or cause to be registered, the said notice in writing in the book kept for the poor's accounts."

But the 35 Geo. III. c. 101, s. 3, enacts, "that no person coming into any parish, township, or place, shall, from and after the passing of this act, be enabled to gain any settlement therein by delivery and publication of any notice in writing."

By 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 4, "No soldier, seaman, shipwright, or other artificer or workman employed in their Majesties' service, shall have any settlement in any parish, port town, or other town, by delivery and publication of a notice in writing as aforesaid, unless the same be after the dismissal of such person out of their Majesties' service."

Sect. 7 enacts, "that if any unmarried person, not having child or children, shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall be adjudged and deemed a good settlement therein, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is herein before required."

The 8 and 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 4. "And whereas some doubts have arisen touching the settlement of unmarried persons, not having child or children, lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, be it therefore enacted and declared by the authority aforesaid, that no such person so hired as aforesaid shall be adjudged or deemed to have a good settlement in any such parish or township, unless such person shall continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year." (See the principle of that enactment, Rex v. St. Giles's Reading, Cald. 54, and post.)

And the 12 Anne, c. 18, s. 2, reciting the provision in the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, as to poor persons residing in other than their own parishes under certificates, and that many persons bringing such certificates frequently take apprentices and hire and keep servants, who thereby attain settlements and become a great burthen to such certificated parishes: enacts that, "If any person whatsoever, who, upon or after the 24th of June, 1713, shall be an apprentice, bound by indenture to, or shall, upon or after the said 24th of Provisions to prevent settlements being gained under particular circumstances.

June, 1713, be a hired servant to or with any person whatsoever, who did come into or shall reside in any parish, township, or place, in that part of Great Britain called England, by means or license of such certificate, and not afterwards having gained a legal settlement in such parish, township, or place, such apprentice, by virtue of such apprenticeship, indenture, or binding, and such servant by being hired by or serving as a servant as aforesaid to such person, shall not gain or be adjudged to have any settlement in such parish, township, or place, by reason of such apprenticeship or binding, or by reason of such hiring or serving therein; but every such apprentice and servant shall have his and their settlements in such parish, township or place, as if he or they had not been bound apprentice or apprentices, or had not been an hired servant or servants to such person as aforesaid; any act or acts of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding."

By 33 Geo. III. c. 54, s. 24, "No person who shall be an apprentice, bound by indenture to, or shall be a hired servant to or with any person who did come into or shall reside in any parish, township or place, under the authority of this act, and not afterwards having gained a legal settlement in such parish, township, or place, shall gain or be adjudged to have any settlement in such parish, township, or place, by reason of such apprenticeship or binding, or by reason of such hiring or serving therein; but all such apprentices and servants shall have their settlements in such parish, township, or place, as if they had not been bound, or had not been hired to such person as aforesaid; any act or acts of parliament to the contrary notwithstanding." But the recent act relating to friendly societies does not contain the like provision. See Vol. II. title, "Friendly Societies."

By 52 Geo. III. c. 72, s. 8, it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this act, no person or persons shall by residence in any house, lodge, or other building, erected or to be erected within the said forest, (of Alice Holt, in the county of Southampton,) or by hiring and service either for the preservation of the said woods or plantations, or the game in the said forest, gain thereby any settlement in the parish of Binsted, in the said county, in which the said forest is situate."

By general turnpike act, 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, s. 51, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 31, "no apprentice or servant of a collector or renter of tolls, or weighing machine, or residing in toll-house, shall thereby gain a settlement;" and see Chitty's Col. Stat. Vol. I. 492, note (m); and see 4 and 5 Will. IV. c. 76, s. 64, 1 Adol. & El. 244.

There are also other statutory provisions precluding persons, coming into parishes under particular circumstances, from acquiring settlements in those parishes, whilst they continue within the operation of those provisions, as will be seen hereafter.

The requisites of this description of settlement may be stated as follows:

Requisites in general of a valid hiring to give a settlement.

1st. With respect to the hiring.—That the master or mistress, and servant whether male or female, must be capable of entering into such a contract with each other; and all persons, (except husband and wife), however nearly related to each other, may make such a contract, even though one or both parties be under age.

2nd. The parties must not merely be competent to make a binding contract as between themselves, but they must be in that unfettered condition which the poor laws require in order to create a right of settlement by such contract duly performed. For instance, the master must not be a certificate man, nor must the servant be already under a subsisting contract as an apprentice, or soldier, or married, or a widower with children, &c.

3rd. The contract must be for a year prospectively from its date; but it is not essential that it should be actually so expressed, for if it can be collected from the other terms of the contract, as the wages, notice to leave, &c., that the parties intended that the hiring should be for a year, that will suffice.

4th. The master must have the control over the servant's whole time and services:—for if it is stipulated by the contract that the servant shall have the right to certain days or even hours to himself, independently of his master, although he in fact employ those hours in his master's service, being paid for them, the contract will not confer a settlement.

5th. With respect to the service.—This likewise must be for a year; though intervals of absence by the master's authority will not prejudice: for the master may dispense with a portion of the service.

6th. It is not necessary that the whole year's service should be under the yearly hiring, though it must be in the same service; for if a person serve a few months without any yearly hiring, and then without quitting or suspending the service, contract to serve the same master for a year, and continue to serve under this contract a length of time sufficient, (even though it be forty days only), when added to the time served before the hiring for a year, to make a whole year's service, the settlement will be complete.

7th. It is not essential that the service should be under the same master; for if the same service is continued under the lessee, assignee, executor, &c. of the master with whom the contract was made, and the service in part performed, it will be sufficient for the purposes of the settlement.

8th. It is not necessary that any part of the service should be in the parish or place where the contract of hiring is made; or that the whole year's service should be in one and the same parish or place; or that it should be in the parish or place where the master resides: for wherever the servant resides the last forty days for the purposes of the service, there he will acquire his settlement.

9th. The forty days' residence for the purposes of the service, are not required to be consecutive; though they must be within the compass of a year. Thus if a servant, during a hiring and service for a year, serve in several parishes, his settlement will be in that parish in which he has last served, if in the whole he has resided and served there forty days.

Such are the rules of law by which settlements by hiring and service were governed. The sessions are to decide whether there was a contract of hiring, or only of apprenticeship, and not merely to find or state facts. (Rex v. Great Wishford, 5 Nev. & Man. 540.)

The 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7, enacts "that if any unmarried person not having child or children shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall," &c., see ante, 329. Therefore the servant must be unmarried, without children, and sui juris.

The master may be a relation: he must not be a certificate man.

A widower may gain this settlement.

"Any Unmarried Person."] Anthony v. Cardigan, 2 Bott, 257. A widower is within the meaning of the act, and may gain a settlement by hiring and service.

If a married man agree to a hiring subject to approbation, and his wife die before the agreement is complete, and then the hiring be completed, it is sufficient.

Rex v. Banknewton, 2 Burr. S. C. 259, the pauper, a married man, agreed on the 16th of February, with the son of H. W., to serve H. W. for a year from the 24th of that month, at five guineas wages, provided H. W. should approve the terms. On the 18th the pauper's wife died, and on the 24th he went into the service of H. W., who on that day agreed to the terms made by his son. By the Court: "It is clear that the hiring was on the 24th, for the father might have dissented from the conditional agreement made by the son on the 16th; a settlement was therefore gained by the hiring and service."

If the man be single when the contract is made, marrying between the hiring and entering upon the service will not defeat the settlement in the absence of fraud.

In Rex v. Allendale, 3 T. R. 382, the pauper being unmarried, was hired for a year to serve T. B. at Allendale, as a hind. It is the custom of the country to hire married men as hinds, because their wives are bound to perform certain services for the master in time of harvest; and when the wife of a hind dies, he must hire a female servant to perform such services. It was in the contemplation of both the master and servant, and perfectly understood by them at the time of hiring, that the pauper would marry before he entered upon his service. After such hiring, and before the commencement of his service, he married, and entered upon his service a married man, and served out the whole year a married man. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The principle on which this question must be decided has been long since settled. In Farrington v. Witty, and Rex v. Banknewton, the Court seemed to think that the time to be attended to was the time when the contract was made, which has ever since been considered as the rule; he was unmarried when he entered into his contract; and whether he married the day before the service commenced or afterwards it makes no difference." Buller, J., said, "that neither the custom of the country, nor the agreement between the parties, went to compel this pauper to marry before he entered upon this service; he was at liberty to do so or not, as he pleased. The custom of the country only amounts to this, that part of the service is to be performed by a female; it is therefore indifferent to the master whether the servant be married or not, because if he be single he must hire some female to perform those services. As to the case of a contract at an unreasonable distance of time before the service is to commence, that would be strong evidence of fraud. So if the pauper had been under an agreement to marry, and his master had told him that he should not marry for a month to evade the statute, that also might be considered fraudulent."

Same point. Rex v. Stannington, 3 T. R. 385.

A marriage during the service does not defeat the settlement.

Farrington v. Witty, 2 Salk. 527. A servant came into a parish and hired for a year, served half a year, and then married; it was determined that the marriage did not defeat the settlement, for it did not hinder the service, and that the contract was not dissolved by the marriage. So also Rex v. Clent, 2 Bott, 417; Rex v. Sutton, 2 Bott, 418; Rex v. Hanbury, 2 Burr, S. C. 322; Rex v. St. Giles's, Reading, Cald. 54, post; Rex v. Harberton, ante, 317; Rex v. Sandford, 1 T. R. 281, post; Rex v. Hardingham, post.

A child emancipated is not within the meaning of the statute.

"Not having child or children," 3 W. III. c. 11, s. 7.] In Anthony v. Cardigan, (supra), the pauper had a daughter who was married and lived settled elsewhere; and it was decided that he was a single person within the meaning of the act, though not expressly within the letter of it. The meaning of the statute is, that he might not bring any consequential damage to the parish; which he could not possibly do here. Same point in Rex v. Cowhoneyborne, 10 East, 88. See the case, ante, 306.

Rex v. New Forest, 5 T. R. 478. On Martinmas-day, 1777, E. Coates hired himself and served a year in the township of New Forest; on 22d December, 1777, he married. The pauper, son of E. C., on the same Martinmas-day, (being under sixteen, and without having gained a settlement) hired himself for a year to R. N., of Ellerton, and served the year. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The construction which the court has put upon the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7, is, that though the person so hired have children, yet if they have gained settlements for themselves, distinct from the father's, the statute will not prevent his acquiring a settlement by serving a year under that hiring. But here the son was not separated from the father when the latter was hired; he had gained no settlement for himself; he had entered into a contract, 'which might or might not have been completed,' but which, when completed, would give him a settlement; but at the time when the father entered into the relation of a servant at New Forest, the son formed a part of his family. (See this case, ante, 312.)

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

But a child whose emancipation is incomplete, is within the act.

The Servant must be sui juris.

Rex v. Dawlish, 1 B. & Ald. 281. A hiring during a subsisting apprenticeship is insufficient. See case post. See Rex v. Bow, 4 M. & Sel. 383, post.

Rex v. Norton, 9 East, 206. Case:—The pauper was duly enlisted as a private in his Majesty's marine forces, from which he deserted, and then hired himself for a year, and served a year under the hiring. Afterwards he was taken up for desertion, tried, and convicted. It was urged that the pauper was as much sui juris as the militia-man. Lord Ellenborough, "That was the case of a lawful contract with a just exception. The public had a claim upon the militia-man's service for a certain time, and subject to that claim he might lawfully contract to serve his master. If this case had been res integra there might have been great doubt whether the word 'lawfully,' were not to be narrowed to a contract and the terms of it lawful; and if lawful in its form, whether the party serving under it could be disabled from gaining a settlement by reason of his having before contracted an engagement with another person, inconsistent with it. But a variety of cases have decided the question in the case of an apprentice: and this not on the ground of its being an excepted case, or as standing upon any occult efficacy in the indenture; but upon the broad principle that one, who has contracted a relation which disables him from serving any other without the consent of his first master, is not sui juris, and cannot lawfully bind himself to serve such master, so as to gain a settlement under such contract. In reason and principle it can make no difference whether he be originally bound by a contract of apprenticeship, or by any other contract equally obligatory on him, which disables him from binding himself to serve a second master. The objection is, that he cannot give the master a control over his service for the whole period which the master stipulates for, and has a right to require by the contract. The king's officers might at any time have reclaimed him and taken him out of the service in which he was engaged: he cannot, therefore, be said to have been lawfully hired into it. A soldier is at least as much bound to the service of the king, as an apprentice is to that of his master; and nothing is to be inferred from the measured language of the court in the case of an apprentice, in not laying down the principle broader than the matter in judgment required. Nothing was said intimating an opinion that the rule was confined to the case of an apprentice, and therefore we must look to the reason and principle of those decisions when we are called upon to apply the rule to similar cases. The other judges agreed that the principle was, that if the party cannot make such a contract for his service, of which the master may avail himself for the whole year, no settlement can be gained.

A deserter can gain no settlement by hiring and service.

with the permission of his officer, entered into a contract of hiring and service, conditionally for a year, if so long allowed to be absent, and served the year: Held not to gain a settlement, as not being sui juris.

the pauper's maiden settlement. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper is the wife of Hans Peters, a Swede. Some years ago he entered as a soldier into the sixtieth regiment of foot, and in 1806 was invalided, and sent to the depôt at Lymington. It was suggested to government by the commanding officer there, that it would be an economical plan to give the invalids leave of absence, upon their agreeing to relinquish their pay during such absence. The suggestion was approved, and ordered to be carried into execution. In 1808, H. P. hired himself as a monthly servant to Mrs. B., and afterwards, on the 20th of July in that year, hired himself to Mrs. B. for a year, and served such year in Lymington. Previous to this second hiring, Mrs. B. applied to the commanding officer at the depôt, to know if P. might hire himself for that period, and was told that he might. During his service with Mrs. B. he received no pay, nor was he called upon to, nor did he, perform any military duty: but he used to go to the depôt from time to time to get his furlough renewed, which took him half an hour. The commanding officer could send for him at any time, if the exigences of the state required it. Furloughs were granted to him every half-year. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "To confer a right to a settlement by hiring and service for a year, as there are no words in the statute which qualify the general sense of the word hiring, I must take it to mean an absolute, unqualified, indefeasible hiring, that is, a hiring by which the party who hires himself has the power of communicating to the master an absolute right to his service for the whole time. In order, therefore, to do this, the party must be sui juris, and have the faculty of disposing of his own service. I think this case falls strictly within the analogy of the case of the apprentice, who, in respect of his obligation to serve one master, is disabled from entering into a contract to serve another. However, the cases of the militia-men have been pressed upon our attention. I would wish to speak of those cases, as of the decisions of persons who have gone before us so highly venerable, with all the respect that is due to them, and I would therefore avoid trenching upon them as little as possible. But when I find them speaking of leaning in favour of settlements, and when I recollect that a pauper must be provided for somewhere, either as a settled inhabitant or as casual poor, and when I find too that one of those decisions goes the length of holding that eleven months may mean a year, I really am unable, with all the respect I bear to those persons who decided them, to go along with them so far. Perhaps, therefore, it may be the best thing to say of the militia-men's cases, that they are to be considered as exceptions. Here it appears that there has been a hiring for a year, but not a lawful hiring in the sense of an effectual hiring. An effectual hiring is, where the servant is enabled to give the master a quid pro quo. Had this person the power of so doing? He had not. There was a halt, and a pause to be made four times during the year, until he should renew his furlough. If the question were raised upon special verdict, whether this was an effectual hiring, understanding by that that the party must have a capacity of conferring what he stipulates for, could it be argued upon a statement of these circumstances, that the pauper's husband really passed to the master an interest in the whole of his service? His service in reality belonged to the crown, and he could only contract for so much of it as was remitted out of the right of the crown. It appears to me, therefore, that here has been no lawful hiring for a year, inasmuch as the servant had not the faculty of communicating the service he contracted for. It is said, here was no fraud, and that is true; but there is the vice of the argument, for this is not a question between the master who hires and the man who is hired, but whether a condition, which the legislature has imposed on this branch of settlements, has been complied with. The question is, whether this be such a hiring as the legislature intended. It seems to me that it is not, and that the reasoning in the case of the apprentice applies with full force to the present case." Le Blanc, J., (a) among other things, said, "If the pauper was a soldier, and subject to a control or command inconsistent with his entering into any other absolute engagement to serve another master, his leave of absence must have been renewed, and if not renewed, he would be obliged to return to his duty under the penalty of being treated as a deserter. This is not like a conditional contract, for here, at no time, could the party make a valid contract for a year." Bayley, J., "thought that this hiring was sufficient to confer a settlement at Lymington. Suppose a master going abroad to say to his servant 'I may be absent six months, or even six years, remember in any bargain you make, keep yourself at liberty to come to me on my return.' Supposing that servant to hire himself to another master for a year, provided his former master should not return, this would be a valid contract. It seems to me that here the party was sui juris to enter into the contract; that this was a contract which was only defeasible, and would confer a right of action to the master, if the servant absented himself on any other grounds except that of his being called upon by the act of government. For these reasons, and as I do not find any thing in the statute but the word lawful, to limit the nature of the hiring, and inasmuch as there has been a defeasible hiring for a year, which has not been defeated, and the party who was hired committed no fraud, but communicated the circumstances to the person who hired him, it strikes me, that this was a sufficient hiring to confer a settlement." (Dampier, J., was absent.) Order confirmed.

(a) These learned judges gave very elaborate judgments.

Rex v. Holsworthy, 6 B. & C. 283; 9 D. & R. 322, S. C. Order of removal of F. H. Trim, &c. from Thornbury to Holsworthy, confirmed. Case:—In May, 1819, the pauper was enrolled as a substitute in the S. D. militia, as a private, to serve for five years. In June, 1822, whilst he was still a member of the corps, being at Plymouth, he was sworn in a recruit of the 5th regiment. When the serjeant paid him the enlistment money, the pauper told him he was in the militia, and the serjeant bid him say nothing about it. He did not, and was afterwards convicted and imprisoned for it. In 1823, he hired himself, and served for a year in Holsworthy. Bayley, J. "I think this case does not admit of any doubt. It is not necessary to say whether a militia-man may or may not gain a settlement by serving under a yearly hiring for a whole year, if at the time of making the contract he communicates to the party with whom he is contracting that he is in the militia, and therefore liable to be called out during the year. If the master chooses to engage the servant, subject to the risk of his being called out to perform the duties of a militia-man during the year, I do not see that there is any thing illegal in such a bargain. It may be considered a conditional hiring during the year, and if the militia are not called out, a settlement may perhaps be gained by serving under it. But what is the contract of hiring in this case? The contract is one by which the master stipulates to have, and the pauper stipulates to give his services for one whole year; there is no qualification or condition whatever in the contract, and if there were any it ought to have been stated, and cannot be inferred. I do not presume fraud, for the non-communication of the fact of the pauper's being in the militia may have arisen from his considering it wholly immaterial, from omission, or from any other circumstances. Without, therefore, breaking in upon any case in which it has been decided that a militia-man, who, in his contract of hiring, stipulates for the time that he may be called upon to perform his duty in the militia, may gain a settlement by serving for a whole year under such a hiring, I think that the pauper, not having communicated to the party whom he contracted to serve for a whole year that he was in the militia, cannot be said to have 'lawfully hired himself,' and therefore he gained no settlement in Holsworthy." Holroyd, J. "It is not to be presumed that, at the time of the hiring, the pauper communicated to his master that he was in the militia; and there is nothing in this case to show that a communication was made. The case seems to fall within the principle laid down by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Norton. It is said that this case differs from that, because the militia, not having been called out during the year, there was a year's service under a conditional hiring; but the objection is, that the pauper was not capable of making a contract, so as to give the master a control over his services during the whole year. Now no communication having been made to the master that the pauper was in the militia, I am of opinion that this is an absolute, and not a conditional hiring. It is quite clear that the pauper was not capable of making an unconditional contract to serve for a year." Littledale, J. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Taunton St. James, 4 M. & R. 695; 9 B. & C. 831, S. C. Order of removal from Taunton St. James, to Milverton, quashed. Case:—The pauper, at Lady-day, 1811, hired himself as a servant in husbandry for a year to Mr. Handford, of Milverton; after serving him for three months, having, at the Christmas preceding, volunteered into the local militia of Somerset, he went out into actual service for three weeks, and then returned to Handford's service, remained till Lady-day, 1812, and received his wages, deducting for the three weeks of his absence. The pauper did not tell Handford, when he first bargained with him, that he was in the militia, but told him a week or two afterwards, and Handford said it did not signify, for the pauper could, at the end of the year, deduct for the time he was absent. Bayley, J. "This case depends on the construction of the 15th section of 48 Geo. III. c. 111. The 3 Will. III. c. 11, requires that in order to gain a settlement by hiring and service, the party shall be lawfully hired for a year. It has been established by several decisions, that a party, at the time of hiring, must be sui juris, so as to be competent to give that species of service which he contracts to give. Upon this principle, it has been held that neither a deserter from the king's service, nor an invalid soldier, having leave of absence, nor a militia-man, can lawfully hire themselves for a year, so as to gain a settlement. In Rex v. Holsworthy it was held that if a person who had been enrolled as a substitute in the militia, and hired himself for a year, did not, at the time of hiring, inform his master that he was a militia-man, no settlement was gained. Now that decision applies to the present case, unless it be distinguishable by reason of 48 Geo. III. c. 111, s. 15. That provides 'that no ballot, enrolment, and service under that act shall extend to make void or in any manner to affect any indenture of apprenticeship, or contract of service between any master or servant, notwithstanding any covenant or agreement in any such indenture or contract; and no service under that act of any apprentice or servant shall be deemed or construed, or taken to be an absence from service, or breach of any covenant or agreement as to any service, or absence from service, in any indenture of apprenticeship, or contract of service.' These words will undoubtedly apply to all contracts of service existing at the time of the ballot or enrolment, as well as to those made afterwards. The question is, whether they include all contracts whatever, or those only which were in existence at the time of the ballot or enrolment. Now, in order to ascertain the sense in which they are used in this act, we may fairly look to other acts relating to the same subject-matter; and if we find the words used in a restrained sense in those acts, we ought to construe them in the same sense in this, for it is a fair rule of construction that the same words in a statute in pari materia respecting the same subject, should receive that same meaning. No such words are to be found in 42 Geo. III. c. 90, but they are to be found in 52 Geo. III. c. 68, s. 63. If, as used in that statute, they apply to contracts existing at the time of the ballot or enrolment, that is a legislative exposition of them, and they ought to receive the same construction in the 48 Geo. III. c. 111, s. 15. Now the words in 52 Geo. III. manifestly apply to contracts existing at the time of ballot or enrolment, and not to contracts subsequently made. The 60th section enacts 'that the enrolment of servants shall not vacate or rescind contracts between master and servant, unless the local militia shall be called out, or unless the person enrolled shall leave the militia for the purpose of being trained.' That section applies to contracts existing at the time of the enrolment, for such contracts could only be vacated or rescinded by the enrolment. Section 63 is a transcript of sect. 15 of 48 Geo. III. c. 111. It begins, 'Provided always,' and then proceeds in the same words. Now a proviso is something engrafted on a preceding enactment, and the proviso in the 63d sect. manifestly applies to the enactment in the 60th sect., that enrolments shall not rescind contracts made between masters and servants: the words of the proviso apply to the same species of contract. Then that being the fair meaning of the words used in 52 Geo. III. c. 68, they ought to receive the same construction in 48 Geo. III. c. 111, and giving them that construction, there is nothing in that statute enabling such person to make an absolute contract for a year, so as to gain a settlement. The clause ends with a proviso as to service: that may make the service good, but my opinion is not founded on the description of service, but upon the want of capacity to contract. I think that the pauper was under a disability at the time of hiring, to contract to perform the service which he undertook to perform, and therefore that no settlement was gained in Milverton." Littledale, J. "It is a general principle of law, that if a man enters into a contract, he ought either to be in a situation to perform it, or to inform the person with whom he contracts of his disability. This is a duty founded on moral principle, and is due from one member of society to another. If the words of an act are capable of two meanings, and one construction will have the effect of enforcing this moral obligation, and the other will not, that construction should be adopted which will have the effect of enforcing it. Now it is contended that the words of the 48 Geo. III. c. 111, s. 15, 'no ballot, enrolment, and service under this act shall extend to make void, or in any manner to affect any indenture of apprenticeship, or contract of service between any master and servant,' extend not only to contracts existing at the time of their enrolment, but to contracts subsequently made. I think the words 'made void' ex vi termini apply to contracts in esse. But supposing that to be doubtful, then calling in aid the principle that a man is bound to disclose any thing which may disable him from performing his contract, I will, in order to give effect to that principle, give the words a limited construction, and hold that they extend only to contracts existing at the time of the ballot or enrolment. Putting that construction on the words, a party, in order to gain a settlement by a contract of hiring made after ballot or enrolment, must disclose his disability to the person with whom he contracts. This would be the construction I should have put upon the words, if the 48 Geo. III. c. 111, had stood by itself. But the local militia act, 52 Geo. III. c. 38, s. 63, contains an enactment in the same words; and by sect. 60 these words are confined to contracts existing at the time of enrolment or ballot. We violate no rule of construction, by giving to the same words in two acts, relating to the same subject, the same meaning. I think, therefore, if there be any ambiguity in the 48 Geo. III., it is removed by the legislative exposition put upon the words in 52 Geo. III.; and, therefore, there was no lawful hiring for a year." Parke, J. "The question is, whether at Lady-day, 1811, there was a lawful hiring for a year; assuming that the subsequent conversation between the master and servant amounted to a second hiring, it was not for a year. To constitute a lawful hiring, the party must have a power to contract to serve for the period during which he agrees to serve. Rex v. Holsworthy shows that if a party is under a disability, he may, by disclosing it, make a conditional contract. But if he does not disclose it, it is an absolute contract; into which he is not capable of entering, and therefore not a lawful hiring. Here there was no disclosure. Then the only question is, is there any enactment in the 48 Geo. III. c. 111, giving a local militia man a power to make an absolute contract of hiring? It cannot be intended that the legislature meant to give such a power, for they might thereby enable a party by law to commit a fraud; the master would contract on the supposition that the party with whom he contracts had power to bind himself for a year, the latter knowing all the time that he had not. But, on the other hand, it might properly be provided that a contract made bona fide while the party was a free man, capable of contracting, should not be avoided by reason of his subsequently becoming a militia man. The statute does not in terms enact that an enrolled person shall be sui juris. The 15th sect. applies to contracts actually entered into at the time of the ballot or enrolment. No such power, therefore, is given by express words or by necessary implication. Coupling the 15th with the 24th sect. it appears to me doubtful whether a volunteer and a balloted man are placed in the same situation. But assuming that they are, all the legislature says, is, that if a master contracts with a free man, the master must take his chance in case of a ballot, and shall not contract against the chance of a ballot, for such contract is made void. But there is no provision that a man shall have the same capacity to contract, as if he was not a local militia man. No power is, therefore, given to enter into an absolute contract to hire for a year. Here the pauper entered into an absolute contract, which he had no power to do. There was no lawful hiring for a year, and no settlement was gained." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Emley Castle, 3 B. & Adol. 826. G. Hall, &c. was removed from Kemerton to Emley Castle. Order confirmed. Case:—G. Hall, the pauper, hired himself on the 10th October, 1811, to T. Bluck, of Emley Castle, until Old Michaelmas-day in the following year, at 14*l.* 14*s.* wages. Having been called upon to serve in the Warwickshire local militia in the course of the preceding year, he informed Bluck of that fact at the time of hiring, and at the same time told him that he expected to be called out to serve again in the May following; and it formed part of the agreement between them, that the pauper should allow his master to deduct out of his wages 1*s.* a day for as many days as he should be absent on service with the militia. The pauper entered into the master's service, and resided and served the whole year in the appellant parish, except fourteen days, during which he was absent on service with the militia. At the end of the year he received his wages, with the exception of 14*s.*, which Mr. Bluck deducted for the fourteen days' absence. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I think the pauper clearly gained a settlement in the parish of Elmley Castle; and my opinion is founded on the terms of contract of hiring and the 65th section of the 52 Geo. III. c. 38." His lordship then referred to the terms of the case, and added, "There is nothing of absolute exception in the terms of the contract. The exception or condition, if any such there was, arose from the operation of law on the individual. He was a militia man, and as such was bound by law to serve, if called upon so to do. Then the 48 Geo. III. c. 111, s. 15, and the 52 Geo. III. c. 38, s. 65, enact 'that no ballot, enrolment, and service under this act shall extend to make void or in any manner to affect any indenture of apprenticeship or contract of service between any master or servant, notwithstanding any covenant or agreement in any such indenture or contract; and no service under this act of any apprentice or servant shall be deemed an absence from service or a breach of any covenant or agreement as to any service or absence from service in any indenture of apprenticeship or contract of service.' The service of the pauper therefore in the militia is not in point of law an absence from his service with his master. It is true that in this case the parties by their contract have provided that while the pauper was serving in the militia, though in point of law he must be considered as serving his master, he was not to receive any wages. But that makes no difference; the general words of the act are sufficient to enable us to say that under such a contract as the present, and notice having been given at the time of hiring that the servant was liable to be called on to serve, he was in point of law serving his master while he was in the militia, so as to acquire a settlement by hiring and a service for a year." Littledale, J. "This case comes very near those of Rex v. Westerleigh (a) and Rex v. Winchcombe, (b) but whether those decisions were right or not, the effect of the clauses in the militia act is to place this party in the same situation as if he had served the master during the time he was in the militia." Parke, J. "This case is undoubtedly very like Rex v. Westerleigh and Rex v. Winchcombe. In Rex v. Taunton St. James (c) the objection was that the pauper was not, when he hired himself, capable of making an absolute contract to serve for a year, and therefore having made such contract without reference to his liability as a militia man, he was not lawfully hired for a year, and gained no settlement. But here the pauper did communicate the fact of his being a militia man to the master. There is nothing in that case to show that under such circumstances a service in the militia may not be considered as service to the master." Taunton, J. "I am of the same opinion, and I think the sessions would have done better not to have sent up this case. Rex v. Westerleigh and Rex v. Winchcombe were decided by judges who were eminent sessions lawyers; and I think the principles upon which those decisions took place are correctly stated by Mr. Nolan in his Treatise on the Poor Laws. Rex v. Holsworthy (a) was decided on the ground that the pauper did not at the time of hiring inform his master that he was a militia man. Here the pauper did so. There was a good hiring for a year. The statute enacts that no service in the militia shall be deemed to be an absence from service with the master; but independently of that statute, my opinion, founded on the decisions of Rex v. Westerleigh and Rex v. Winchcombe would have been the same." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Mary, Colchester, 3 N. & M. 113; 5 B. & Adol. 1023. Thomas Lester was removed from Stratford St. Mary to St. Mary-at-the-Walls, Colchester. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's father had gained a settlement in the parish of St. Mary-at-the Walls. In the year 1811 the pauper was a private in the 1st regiment of Essex local militia, commanded by Colonel Strutt. On the 24th of April, 1811, the regiment was assembled for training at Colchester, and continued there in training till the 15th of May following, up to which day the pauper was a drummer upon the permanent staff of the regiment. On the 16th of the same month, the pauper, then being off the permanent staff, Colonel Strutt, who knew that the pauper was in the local militia, hired him for a year at the wages of 10*l.* The pauper served the colonel under that hiring. He resided in St. George, Hanover Square, in London, until the 4th of May, 1812, upon which day the regiment was again assembled for training at Colchester. Colonel Strutt went there to take the command, and the pauper accompanied him, and was reported as belonging to the regiment. Each officer being by the rules of the service allowed a soldier from the ranks as a personal servant, the pauper was chosen by the colonel to be his servant. The regiment continued to do duty at Colchester till the 19th of May in that year, during which time the pauper was under military control, but he was only paraded once, and served the colonel during the whole period as an indoor servant. The pauper received pay from the crown whilst the regiment was assembled; he also received his wages from his master for the same period. Upon the 16th of May, 1812, the colonel paid the pauper his wages of 10*l.*, and upon that day hired him for a year from that time, at the wages of 14*l.* the year. Under this second contract the pauper continued in the service of Colonel Strutt till November, 1812, when he was discharged, having remained from the 16th to the 19th of May, 1812, at Colchester, under military control, serving the colonel as before mentioned. Denman, C. J. "In Rex v. Elmley Castle, Rex v. Taunton St. James was clearly before the court; it was cited by the counsel, and referred to by one of the judges. Those cases were decided within the space of three years of each other, and my brother Littledale concurred in both judgments. The ground of distinction taken in Rex v. Elmley Castle is very satisfactory. This case falls within it, and the pauper therefore gained a settlement by his service with Colonel Strutt. The order of sessions must be quashed." Littledale, Taunton, and Patteson, Justices, concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Same point.

Rex v. Witnesham, 4 Nev. & Man. 447; 1 Harr. & Woll. 43. An order for the removal of Robert Copping, &c. from Swilland to Witnesham was confirmed. Case:—A few days after Michaelmas, 1807, the pauper let himself to Mr. Keen, a farmer of Clopton, for a year, to commence at the Michaelmas day following. The pauper went into the service accordingly, and stayed his time. He slept all the time at Clopton, and received his wages. A year and a half before the pauper entered into the service of Mr. Keen, he had been inrolled as a member of the Helmingham corps of volunteers, which corps was duly constituted according to the acts relating to corps of yeomanry and volunteers in Great Britain. During all that time, and throughout his year's service, the pauper duly attended muster, and was duly returned by the commanding officer as an effective member of the corps. He did not communicate the fact of his being a member of the corps to Mr. Keen until he had entered his service, nor did he ever give fourteen days' notice of an intention to quit the corps. He did not take the oath of allegiance according to 44 Geo. III. c. 54, s. 20. The sessions thought that he was not sui juris at the time of hiring, although he had not taken the oath of allegiance. Cur. adv. vult. Lord Denman, C. J. "The question in this case is whether a person who was at the time a member of a volunteer corps, could gain a settlement by hiring and service. We have been referred to the volunteer act (44 Geo. 3, c. 54), to the act for the defence of the realm (43 Geo. III. c. 96), and to the militia acts of 42 Geo. III. c. 90, 55 Geo. III. c. 65, and 55 Geo. III. c. 168. It seems to us that the volunteer act puts a volunteer upon the same footing as a militia man, and that by becoming a volunteer, the pauper in this case had put it out of his power to contract to serve his master during the whole year. This case therefore comes within the authority of the militia man's case, in which it was held that no settlement was gained." [Sir John Campbell, amicus curiæ. "Lord Erskine wrote a celebrated book upon the subject, in which he came to the same conclusion."] Lord Denman, C. J. "We are glad to hear our opinion confirmed by that of so learned a person. We thought it strange that the question should never before have been considered." Order of sessions confirmed.

Age of the servant or master.

The contract of an infant made for his own benefit is not void, but voidable only, and therefore an infant may enter into a contract of hiring and service, with the permission of his parent, and thereby gain a settlement. (Rex v. Chillesford, infra.)

If a boy be bound apprentice to a person under age, the binding is sufficient for the purposes of a settlement, as the indenture is not in such case void, but voidable only. (Rex v. St. Petrox, Dartmouth, 4 T. R. 196.) By the same rule therefore it may be considered that a contract of hiring and service with a master who is a minor, is a valid contract, and if duly performed, will entitle the servant to a settlement.

Master must not be a certificate man.

The master must not be resident under a certificate, unless he has a lease of a tenement of the annual value of 10*l.* (Rex v. Nacton, 3 B. & Ad. 543, post.) A parish certificate extends to a wife married after it is granted, and no apprentice to such wife, after the husband's death, can gain a settlement in the certificated parish (Rex v. Hampton, 5 T. R. 266), the principle of which decision is equally applicable to cases of hiring and service.

An infant, whether emancipated or not, may hire himself to his father.

Where the master is also parent of the servant.

Rex v. Chertsey, 2 T. R. 37. The pauper, at the conclusion of a service by which she gained a settlement in Chertsey, went to her father's (a day labourer), who in consequence of his wife's death had previously applied to her to come and live with him, to do the offices of a servant for a year in the parish of Thorpe, for which she was to have her board and lodging, and such profits as she could make by keeping fowls, and what she could earn by her own labour; and if that did not produce as much as she got in her former place, her father was to make up the difference. She lived with him more than a year in pursuance of this agreement, and made more than her former wages by her extra labour and profits, and at the end of the year her father gave her ten shillings as an additional recompence for having gone out reaping with him in the harvest month. The court held this a good hiring and service, and that a settlement was gained in the parish of Thorpe. (S. C. post.)

Missenden v. Chesham, 2 Bott, 173; Fol. 142. The pauper had gained a settlement in Chesham, and afterwards came to live with her father in Missenden, who promised to give her 10*s.* a year, and also what she might be able to gain by her extra service and labour. She served under these circumstances for more than a year. The court held that a settlement was gained.

An unemancipated son may acquire a settle-

Rex v. Chillesford, 4 B. & C. 94; 6 D. & R. 161; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 155. The pauper's father let himself as a shepherd to Mr. Taylor, of Blythburgh. The father hired every year one or two pages, over whom Taylor had no control, and about nine years ago, when one of the pages was to leave, the father, about a week before old Midsummer, agreed with his son, the pauper, at that time nineteen years of age, and unemancipated, to serve him for a year, from old Michaelmas to old Michaelmas, in Jarvis's place, at the same wages, 8*l.* a year, which time the pauper served, sleeping in his father's house.

Rex v. Winslow, 4 B. & C. 94; 6 D. & R. 168; 3 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 163. Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Lane, was removed from Winslow to Beaulieu. Order quashed. Case:—T. Lane, the husband of the pauper, when about fourteen years old, being then unemancipated, was hired by his father, who was a sawyer, residing at Beaulieu, but not having a settlement there, to assist him in his work as a sawyer. A contract was, in point of fact, made between them, whereby the son agreed to serve the father for a year at the wages of 2*l.* 10*s.*, his board and lodging being also provided by the father. He served this year with his father in Beaulieu, and received his wages, and, at the expiration of this contract, served his father for two successive years, under new contracts, at increased wages. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that in each of these cases the pauper gained a settlement by hiring and service. It is conceded that, if the pauper had been previously emancipated, he might have gained a settlement by hiring and service for a year with his own father afterwards. But emancipation does not confer any capacity to contract, and the objection here is, that the son has not any capacity to contract with his father. It must be admitted that he might have contracted with a stranger without, or, at all events, with his father's permission, to serve as a yearly servant. The contract of an infant, if it is made for his benefit, is not, according to the general principles of law, absolutely void. It may be voidable at the election of the infant himself, but of no other person. In this respect, this case is very distinguishable from a contract of hiring and service by a person who was a soldier at the time of hiring. There the consent of the officer was completely nugatory, because the officer could not consent to the contract. The soldier was not then sui juris, but was under the dominion of the crown, and the crown had a right to avoid the contract at any time; and, therefore, in that case the court very properly held that the contract was not valid in law. But in this case, the contract is not void, but voidable only. If, therefore, an infant may, with the permission of his father, enter into a contract with a stranger, why may he not do so with his own father? I know of no such incapacity, if the son is capable of serving as a servant, and his father thinks his services worth remuneration. There being nothing, therefore, which declares such a contract with the father to be void, can we say that there is any thing which shall prevent the son from gaining a settlement by such a hiring and service? It is said that, if a settlement can be so gained, it may enable a father to confer a settlement on his son in a parish in which the son could not gain a derivative settlement from his father. But this is not the only case in which a person may derive a settlement from another who has himself no settlement in the parish. Then it is put strongly, and with so much force, as to induce me to pause in the conclusion to which my mind was originally prepared to come, that if we decide this to be a settlement, it may lead to much confusion, and to the raising of many questions of a similar nature for the determination of the quarter sessions. I cannot say that such may not be the case; but, however, when such questions shall be raised, it will be the duty of the quarter sessions to look narrowly into the facts of the case, and see whether there really was any contract of hiring and service. One mode of ascertaining that will be, to inquire whether the father had any occupation for a hired servant, and whether he had any thing for him to do in that capacity; and if the father had no employment for a hired servant, the sessions may reasonably conclude that there was no contract for hiring and service. In the first of the cases at bar, it appears that the son came into the place which had been filled by another person, who had been hired at yearly wages. That is abundant evidence that the father had really occa-

ment by a bonâ fide contract of hiring and service for a year with his father, in a parish where the latter has no settlement, notwithstanding the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 1.

Mode of ascertaining the existence of such a contract.

sion for a servant of that description. In the other case the father was a sawyer, and he had almost always occasion for two persons to assist him in his business. Indeed the nature of the trade itself, which requires the concurrence of two persons at least, to carry it on with skill, shows that the father had occasion for a servant, and it is stated as a fact, that for several successive years the pauper had served him at increased wages. For these reasons it appears to me that a settlement was gained by the paupers in both cases." Bayley, J. "It appears to me that an unemancipated son is competent to enter into a contract of this description with the father, and that all the legal consequences resulting from such a contract follow from the existence of that contract. It is clear that an infant may bind himself to a stranger. It may be in general supposed that such a contract is entered into with the consent and concurrence of the father, but there may be instances in which the father is not in any respect consenting, and even where a son, against the father's consent, enters into such an engagement, yet still he will gain a settlement, and he may insist upon having his wages paid him, and he may be liable to all the statuteable stipulations and regulations respecting the relation of master and servant. If then an infant may bind himself to a third person by a contract of hiring and service, the question is, whether the relation of parent and child destroys the capacity to contract. It is clear that it does not do so in the case of emancipated natural or step-children (Rex v. St. Peter's, Dorset, Burr. S. C. 513); and yet if a step-child is capable of contracting with his step-father, the same mischiefs result as if his own father consented. The same observation applies to emancipated children. If the father has no occasion for a servant, and the employment of the son in that capacity is merely a pretence, the sessions will decide accordingly; but if there is a bonâ fide contract, why may not that contract produce a new relationship and create new rights and obligations between the parties? I see no reason why the father and the son should not be at liberty to enter into a contract of that description. It gives to the father a new right of control, and the child a right to wages which is beneficial to him." Littledale, J. "My brother Holroyd, who has left the court, desires me to say that he concurs in the opinion delivered by my Lord Chief Justice. By law a parent has a right to exact service from his son or daughter, and this is the foundation of the action for seduction, and no proof of actual service is necessary. If then there be a species of service due from the child to the parent, why may not the obligation to serve be made stronger, by allowing the parent to hire the child for a certain time at stipulated wages? It is admitted that an emancipated child may hire himself to his father; but it is said this may not be done where the child is unemancipated, because the child being already under the control of the parent, and owing him service by the law of nature, he cannot enter into such a contract. But there seems to me to be no reason why a child may not contract with his parent for the performance of other services than those which are due in consequence of the relation of parent and child. Such a contract is highly beneficial to the child, because it superadds the salutary restraint of the master to that of parent, and renders him amenable to the statute of regulations applicable to master and servant. If then, in point of law, such a contract be valid and binding, there seems to be no reason why a settlement should not be gained by a service under it. Some inconveniences may arise from the decision in this case, but that is no reason why a contrary decision should be pronounced, so as to deprive these paupers of a settlement, where there is nothing either at the common law or by the statute of William, which makes such a contract void.

It is not necessary that the master should have a settlement.

Master's residence not material.

Where the father had no settlement the sessions conceived that he could confer none on his daughter by hiring and service. But the whole court agreed that a settlement may be gained by serving a man who has no settlement himself, because the servant does not derive the settlement from the master but from the service. (Missenden v. Chesham, 2 Bott, 173.)

Rex v. Eldersley, 2 Bott, 274. A. hired himself to be a warrener in the parish of Eldersley, in a warren there, to joint occupiers of it, who lived in two parishes distant from the parish of Eldersley. He dieted and lodged for eight weeks with one of the occupiers, and for the rest and last part of the time on the warren. Per Curiam, "His settlement is in Eldersley."

In Rex v. Sandhurst (7 B. & C. 557; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 65), it was urged that the hiring having been by an officer of a public establishment which was exempted from poor rates, and that as the pauper was to serve the officers of the establishment and the young gentlemen there, and was not hired by or to serve a private individual, this distinguished it from the common hiring; but Bayley, J. in giving the judgment, said, "It has been urged that the party is to be considered as holding an office and not as a servant. But a man who does all the menial offices of a servant and is at the command of the persons in the establishment is a servant, and not an officer. We think the legislature did not mean to make any distinction between one description of hiring and another by a particular description of persons."

The turnkey of a gaol is not a servant so as to gain a settlement. (Rex v. Sparsholt, 6 Nev. & M. 8.)

Rex v. Houghton-le-Spring, 2 B. & Ald. 375. William Cowell being a single man at the time, duly executed, together with sixty-one other persons, a deed, which purported to be an indenture, whereby it was witnessed, that they whose names or marks were thereunder written and seals affixed, in consideration of a shilling a piece then received, and of certain wages to be paid to them, had hired and bound themselves to T. Croudace and S. Watkin, and their heirs, to be their servants, &c., from 18th October, 1805, to 18th October, 1806. This deed was executed by W. Cowell, but was not signed by either of the masters, or any one on their behalf. Cowell duly served under the deed. Bayley, J. "The only question is, whether the execution of the indenture by the servant only is sufficient to constitute a valid contract of hiring. Now in order to do that, there must be an obligation both on the part of the servant and of the master: here it is admitted, that the execution by the servant bound him to serve for a year; and the objection is, that the master was not equally bound to keep him. But if the master, knowing the terms by which the servant is bound, accept the service, then I apprehend that the agreement must be considered binding on him, although he has not executed the deed. For it is laid down in Co. Litt. (230 b. note (1)), that a party who takes the benefit of a deed is bound by it, although he has not executed it. But the sessions have not found the fact that the master had this knowledge; and although it is probable that they would have found it, still, having stopped the case in limine, it must now go back to have the case determined. Their proper course would have been to have received the deed in evidence, and then to have permitted the party to have proved such facts, from which the knowledge of its contents by the master, and his acceptance of the service on those terms, might be inferred." Holroyd, J. concurred. (Rex v. Arnesby, 3 Bar. & Ald. 584, post.)

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

The hiring may be by a public body, and by persons not rated to the poor.

If the contract be by deed, it is not absolutely necessary that it should be executed by the master as well as the servant.

The Hiring must be the Contract of the Pauper Himself.

Rex v. Rickinghall Inferior, 7 East, 373. The pauper was a Greenwich pensioner, and came disabled to Redgrave. The parish officers, in 1801, agreed with R. Crowe, of Rickinghall Inferior, that the pauper should live with him, and do whatever he should set him about, and that they should pay 2s. 6d. a-week with the pauper. At Easter, 1802, the parish refused to continue the allowance, and thereupon Crowe sent the pauper to Redgrave, whence he returned to Crowe; and, without any express agreement, continued to live in the same manner as before until October, 1804. The court (Lord Ellenborough, C. J., absent,) were clearly of opinion that no settlement was gained. The relation of master and servant never existed between the pauper and Crowe; and the parish officers had no authority to hire out the pauper to the other; and after the allowance was withdrawn Crowe permitted the pauper to live with him out of charity, without any contract as between master and servant.

A pauper, hired out by parish officers, cannot by such hiring gain a settlement.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Compulsory hiring, and service under it, gains no settlement.

Rex v. Stowmarket, 9 East, 211. The pauper, of the age of fourteen, was in the house of industry of Stowmarket, the guardians whereof were empowered by their incorporating act to apprentice poor children for seven years. It did not appear that they had ever exercised this power, the practice being to send the children to their respective parishes; the pauper was sent to Mr. Reynolds, of Stowmarket, to whom he had been allotted by the officers of that parish: this person told the pauper he had procured him a service with one Fox, of Coddendam. The pauper did not object, conceiving he had no discretion on the subject, and he went to F., who received him, and told him he would give him clothes, and that he was to stay with him a year. The pauper did stay the year, receiving clothes, maintenance, and a little pocket-money. (a) Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "All the parties seem to have acted under the idea that the boy was a parish slave, who might be handed over from one to another, and disposed of as they pleased. But there was no agreement by him to the services: he submitted to them because he thought himself obliged to do whatever they bid him. If we were to hold this sufficient to give a settlement we should establish a new head of settlement by allotment. The law gave the directors a power to apprentice out children, and instead of executing that power in a proper manner, they assume to themselves a power to hand these children over to the officers of the respective parishes, who again hand them over to others; and so they are shifted from one to another. And now, because the boy has done the work they made him to do, and eat the meat and worn the clothing which were provided for him, it is argued that he has adopted so many contracts of hiring to which he was no party, which were made without any consideration of his will or consent. But the adoption of a contract must be the act of a free agent; and at what period of time is he found to have consented or contracted at all? On the contrary, it is stated by Reynolds that he had procured a service for him with Fox; the pauper made no objection, conceiving that he had no discretion on the subject. Again, it is stated that the pauper made no agreement with any one respecting wages, or the nature or duration of his service: nor was he consulted on the subject by either of the persons to whom he had been allotted; but considered himself obliged to accept those services, as being under the control of others. Then can a person who is considered as a slave, and conceives himself to be such, be considered as having adopted the acts of his master? It is against common sense so to construe his involuntary acquiescence. In those cases where the pauper's misapprehension of the contract has been held not to vary the legal effect, the pauper meant to exercise a contracting power, though he mistook the legal effect of it."

A poor boy hired himself; the overseers of his parish afterwards assist him with clothes: Held, that he acted suo jure, and gained a settlement.

Rex v. Dunton, 15 East, 352. The pauper, previously to Mich. 1809, went to one Eastwood, in East Horndon, and worked for him for some time for 6d. a-day, and was afterwards taken into Eastwood's house, where he lived two years in his employment. On leaving Eastwood's service (by which no settlement was gained, as the pauper was sent into it by the overseer of Dunton without any act of his own), and in his way to Dunton, he was met by a labourer, who said to him, "Do you want a service? you would suit Smith:" Smith being in the field at the time, the pauper applied to him, when Smith said to him, "Are you willing to go with me, and bind hay or thatch, or do whatever else you are bidden?" The pauper said he was willing, and Smith took him home to his house in Ingrave. This happened a little before Mich. 1809, and the pauper was then about sixteen years of age: nothing was said about wages, nor was any other agreement made between them. A day or two afterwards Smith said, "I see you are in a bad state about clothes: if you cannot get clothes I cannot keep you." The pauper replied, "Mr. Maunder, the overseer of Dunton, will find me in clothes." On the next day the pauper and Smith went to Maunder, when Maunder undertook to provide clothes, and asked Smith, "What he would give him a-week?" Smith engaged to pay one shilling a-week to Maunder for the parish on account of clothes found. The overseer then gave an order for the clothes that the pauper wanted; Maunder, in the presence of Smith, asked the pauper if he went willingly into Smith's service; the pauper replied that he did. Smith, during the service, occasionally gave the pauper small sums. About four months after the pauper had been in the service of Smith, the latter, unaccompanied by the pauper, and without his knowledge, went to the overseer, and told him that he could not keep the pauper any longer, if he was to pay the one shilling a-week. The overseer released Smith from the payment, and the pauper stayed the year out in Smith's service. At Michaelmas, 1810, Smith said to Maunder that he would have the pauper no longer without fresh clothes, to which Maunder said that he must wait till the town meeting, which would take place in a fortnight. The overseer then asked the pauper if he was willing to live with Smith another year: he said that he was willing, as he used him very well. The overseer asked Smith to make him some allowance, Smith promised to give him a pair of shoes, and do the best he could for him. The pauper served the second year with Smith, who gave him a pair of shoes, and laid out 1*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* in the purchase of clothes for him. (a) Grose, J., "The question is, whether the contract was made by the master with the boy, or with the overseer? Now, the boy offered and declared himself willing to serve the master, and the master agreed to take the boy before any intervention of the parish officer: and though facts are afterwards stated, to show that reference was made to the officer, yet that was only to enable the boy to make the contract, by getting clothes from the overseer, without which the master refused to keep him." Le Blanc, J., "Here there was an original agreement for hiring and service between the boy and his master before the overseer knew any thing of the matter: how then can it be said to be a contract made between the master and the overseer for the letting out of the boy, without the real assent of the latter? The law, indeed, says that an overseer cannot contract with another for the services of a pauper without his consent; but there is no law which says that an overseer may not furnish a pauper with clothes, to enable him to make a contract of hiring with another." Bayley, J., "The boy acted throughout suo jure: he chose his own master, and fixed his own terms, and therefore I see no objection to his gaining a settlement under the contract of hiring made by him."

(a) He was allotted a second time, and served in the same way.

2. What amounts to a Contract of Hiring and Service. (b)

"Shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year."] The King v. Sparsholt, 6 Nev. & Man. 8. There must have been the relation of master and servant; therefore a turnkey of a public gaol, appointed according to public regulations, and at an annual salary, is not a servant either to the justices or the keeper, so as to be able to acquire a settlement by hiring and service.

It is sufficient if the contract of hiring be made in an extra-parochial place. The words parish and township are only put for example. (Rex v. St. Peters in Oxford, Fol. 193; 2 Bott, 268.)

Hiring may be in an extra parochial place.

The contract must be lawful, and obligatory on the master to employ, and on the servant to serve; if either is not bound the contract is imperfect.

Rex v. Whitnash, 7 B. & C. 596; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 177. The pauper was offered by his father to C., a farmer, on a Sunday, as waggoner's boy, and was hired on that day for a year, and served him for a year. Bayley, J., having observed on the policy of 29 Car. II. c. 7, s. 1, said, "This act does not prohibit business of every description, and I am of opinion that the hiring of a servant by a farmer on a Sunday is not work or business within the statute. I also think that it is not 'labour, business, or work of the ordinary calling' of the farmer. He, like every other person who requires servants, must hire them. The true construction of the words 'ordinary calling' seems to me to be, not that without which the trade or business cannot be carried on, but that which the ordinary duties of the calling bring into continued action. Those things which are repeated daily or weekly in the course of trade are parts of the ordinary calling of a man exercising such trade or business; but the hiring of a servant once in a year does not come within the meaning of those words." Holroyd, J., said, "If a farmer sowed his corn, or the servant ploughed his land on the Sunday, these would be parts of their ordinary calling. But I think the making of a contract with a person who is to assist another in his ordinary calling, does not come within the statute, so as to subject the parties to a penalty, or to avoid the contract." Littledale, J., gave judgment to the same effect.

There must be a contract.

Gregory Stoke v. Pitminster, 2 Bott, 269. The pauper, who was a young girl, was sent to by a relation, who told her that if she would live with her she should have her meat, drink, washing, and lodging. The pauper accepted the terms, and lived with her four years as a servant. It was insisted that this amounted to a general retainer (within the statute of labours, 24 Ed. 3, c. 1,) for a year, and that the actual entry into the service, after being sent to, and terms offered, was such an assent as amounted to a contract. But the court held that there must be an actual contract where the servant is under no obligation to stay, and the contract must be mutual to bind the parties, and that this was no agreement, but an encouragement to the pauper that if she would live with the relation she would maintain her. See in Rex v. Lyth Lord Kenyon's remarks on this case.

Rex v. Thames Ditton, 4 Doug. 300; 2 Bott, 272. The pauper was bought as a negro slave in America, and brought to England, and lived in Thames Ditton with her master till he died, and after that with his widow and executrix. Lord Mansfield, "The poor law is a system of many acts of parliament. It began in the time of Queen Elizabeth; perhaps before villenage was out of use. Villenage in gross may not now be abolished; but none of those statutes apply to villenage. The legislature never thought of it. To give this pauper a settlement, she must come within the description of a positive law. Her being a black or a slave is no objection; but the statute requires a hiring. There is none here; and therefore the case is not within the statute."

It must be a contract for service, a contract for service (a) and cohabitation is insufficient.

Rex v. Northwingfield, 1 B. & Adol. 912. The pauper was bonâ fide hired as a housekeeper by H. H., in Northwingfield, in October, 1810, by an agreement in writing, for a year, at 40*l.* per annum wages. She entered into the service in pursuance of her agreement, and stayed in the same (in the appellant's parish) until February following, when Mrs. H. returned home, and she then left. Some time after she had been in Mr. H.'s service she began to sleep with him. No agreement was made on this subject before she came into the service. She performed all the duties of a housekeeper, and lived with the other servants, and sometimes paid for articles wanted in the house, and was repaid by Mr. H. Upon leaving Mr. H.'s she went to London; and shortly afterwards Mr. and Mrs. H. came to London, and he hired her a second time, by a written agreement, for a year, as a servant, at the same wages as under the first agreement. According to this contract, she entered again into Mr. H.'s service in the appellant parish, and served him there for many years, and until he died; living in and managing his house, and superintending his servants precisely as under the first hiring. She received her wages, but at times, from necessity, expended a part of them in paying the expenses of Mr. H.'s house, and she provided herself with clothes. The former cohabitation between her and her master was continued. The second written agreement having been lost, and the loss of it proved, the pauper gave parol evidence of the terms of it to the effect before stated. The appellants then proceeded to cross examine her, for the purpose of proving that the contract of hiring was founded in part upon the pauper's agreement to cohabit with her master, in which case the hiring would be turpis contractus, and could not confer a settlement. The respondents objected that no evidence ought to be received of a consideration that did not appear upon the written agreement; and the court concurred in the objection, and refused to receive the evidence. The question reserved was, whether the evidence ought to have been admitted or not. Lord Tenterden, C. J., "This contract may have been either a contract for service, or for cohabitation, or for both. In the first case a settlement would clearly be gained by a service under it, in the second it would be clearly void, and no settlement could be gained. If it were for both, then it is said that the contract is divisible, and good for so much as is legal; but void for the residue. As to that, it is unnecessary to say any thing at present. The evidence should have been received, to ascertain the nature of the contract; and the case must therefore be sent back to the sessions for that purpose." Case sent back to the sessions.

(a) See Rex v. Sparsholt, 6 Nev. & Man. 8, ante, 345.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Rex v. St. Mary Guildford, 2 Bott, 273; and Rex v. Wrifield, Cald. 521. T. Full, at the age of eleven or twelve, went to live with his uncle, who was a tailor, in South Mims, and worked for him, and learned his business. At the expiration of two years his uncle proposed that he should become his apprentice, but they had some difference about it, and the pauper refused to be bound. However, he continued to live with him, working in and learning his business, till about the age of seventeen, and was provided with board, lodging, and necessaries. This case came on immediately after Rex v. Thames Ditton, (2 Bott, 272, ante, 346); and the counsel said, as the court had declared in that case that a hiring was necessary, it was impossible for him to support this settlement. The court said a hiring was certainly necessary, and that this was clearly no settlement.

A boy living several years with his uncle, and working at his trade for his board, clothes, &c., but without any contract, does not thereby gain a settlement.

Rex v. Weyhill, Burr. S. C. 491; 2 Bott, 271. R. Pyke, Esq., took the pauper (being then about eight years of age) into his family from charity, and gave him meat, drink, lodging, and clothes while he continued with him, which was about six years, of which the last four years were in Weyhill. Neither at nor before the time of Pyke's taking the pauper into his family, nor at any time after, was there any contract between the parties, in relation to the pauper's service of Pyke, or his continuance with him, or to any wages or other gratuity to be paid to him; during his continuance with P. he was employed in running of errands, and doing whatsoever P., or his servants, thought fit to bid him: no wages were ever paid or given to him: in the pauper's apprehension he was, during all the time, at liberty to quit P., or P. to turn him off, as either party should think fit. The court said, it is clear here was no hiring at all; no contract; but he was taken, out of charity, a child eight years of age, to run on errands, and do whatever he was bid, and left Mr. Pyke when he came of fourteen years of age, and was capable of doing more service. And it is expressly stated that there was no contract. Indeed where there is a hiring stated, the court will presume it to have been a regular one, unless the contrary appears; and that was the case of Rex v. Wincaunton, Burr. S. C. (post, 299); a general hiring was there stated; but here was no hiring at all.

If it appear that there was no contract, no hiring can be presumed; but where a contract appears, it will be presumed to have been regular, till the contrary is proved.

Rex v. Rickinghall Inferior, 7 East, 373. See this case, ante, 343, on another point. The facts as to the contract appeared to be that the pauper, after the parish officers of Redgrave had refused to continue the allowance, promised by them to the person with whom he was placed, was by that person sent home to Redgrave. He then returned, and lived with the same person without any new agreement; he frequently absented himself, sometimes with, sometimes without leave; he sometimes received 6d. for jobs done on Sundays, but on applying for relief to Redgrave they gave it to him. And the court said here was no settlement gained; for after the parish withdrew their allowance the pauper was permitted to live at Rickinghall out of charity, without any contract as between master and servant.

removed from St. Nicholas to St. Matthew. Order confirmed. Case:—About five years ago, the waiter belonging to S. Ribbands, who kept an inn in St. Matthew's, being ill, sent for the pauper to assist him at the inn, where he staid as helper to the waiter about six months, and then went away. The waiter being again taken ill, sent to the pauper to help him, which he did; and he continued in the inn as boot-catcher for nineteen months, during which time he lodged and boarded there, and was to be satisfied by the gentlemen who came to the house. Ribbands knew of his being there the night after he came; but nothing passed between him and the pauper at the time. The waiter who sent for the pauper continued in the service of Ribbands till about July in the next year, when he went away, and the pauper continued there till Christmas following, when Ribbands and the pauper having some dispute, Ribbands told him to go away, upon which he asked for something for the time he had been there: Ribbands replied, he should not give him any thing, as he had made no agreement with him; but on being pressed again, Ribbands gave him two guineas, and the pauper left the house. The pauper considered himself not as a servant to Ribbands, but as assistant to the waiter, and thought himself at liberty to go away when he pleased; he saw Ribbands sometimes, who, if a guest wanted his boots, told the pauper to get them, and at other times sent him on errands. Lord Kenyon, C. J., "There never was a case like the present, in which a hiring was presumed by retrospect. To some of the positions which have been laid down at the bar I perfectly accede; as that there is no necessity for an hiring by the master himself; that if there be an hiring, it shall be presumed an hiring for a year, unless something appear to show that the contrary was intended; and that wages are not necessary to confer a settlement on the servant. But the foundation of the argument here is, that the pauper was the servant of Ribbands: now that is expressly negatived by the facts of the case. And here the question arises, upon the determination of which this case must turn—in what situation the pauper was at that time? The case states, that he came there as helper to the waiter; and there is nothing in the case from whence we can infer that he was the servant of Ribbands. Therefore, down to the time when the waiter went away, it is impossible to say that there was any agreement between Ribbands and the pauper. It is true that we cannot refer the last six months of the pauper's service to any thing but a contract with Ribbands; but that is not sufficient to give a settlement. If, indeed, the pauper had been before in Ribband's service, and had then lived under a yearly hiring, making in the whole a year's service, that would have gained him a settlement. But here was no contract with Ribbands, either express or implied, until the last six months. Rex v. Weyhill (ante, p. 347) is not unlike this: there, indeed, the pauper was taken out of charity; but in that, as in the present case, the pauper was taken in such a situation as excludes an hiring by the master. In cases where the nature of the service implies an hiring, the court will raise such implication; but the nature of the service here implies the reverse." Orders quashed.

Rex v. Stokesley, 6 T. R. 757. J. Pickering was removed from Ovingham to Stokesley. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was born in Corbridge, a bastard, and was taken by his mother to Stamfordham, and was kept by her there till she died, at which time he was about six years old; he then went to live with her brother, a small farmer, at Sedgfield, as a relation, and not under any hiring, being then about seven years of age, who set him to drive his plough soon after he went, and he continued working at the farm about eight years, but received no wages or other reward except meat and clothes, and he and his uncle wrought all the work of the farm during the last three or four years of that period; the pauper having some difference with his uncle a little before May-day, went to Darlington hiring, and there hired himself to Mr. Lax, to be a servant in husbandry for one year, and served the same; shortly before the end of this service, he received a letter from his uncle, requesting his return to him, and saying that if he would come and live with him as before, he could surely make it as good or better for him than a common service. During the year he was with Mr. Lax, his uncle had no regular hired servant, but employed a day-labourer to do such work for him as he did not like to do himself, and which the pauper used regularly, year after year, as he grew in strength, to do for him. Agreeable to his uncle's request, he returned, and lived with him about three years, and then went with his uncle to Stokesley, and lived with him there about four years and a half, during all which time he performed the greatest part of the work of the farm, as his uncle at that time kept no other servant, and was an elderly infirm man. When the pauper returned to his uncle he made no agreement with him, either for what time or for what consideration he should serve him, but his uncle often promised him, if he would stay with him for his life, he would leave him his stock, crop, and farm, as his own; his uncle's son having got a good place, and being well provided for; his uncle of course found him meat and clothes, and used to give him a few shillings when he went from home, but nothing more. He left his uncle about Martinmas, and believed himself at liberty to leave him at any time: when they parted they had no reckoning, and did not part friends. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The argument addressed to us, viz. that, as in Rex v. Lyth (infra), if there be a service in fact, of such a nature as that usually performed by hired servants, it is presumptive evidence whereon to found a constructive hiring; that this was such a service; that the pauper was solicited to go; that he was independent when he went the second time; might have had a good effect if addressed to the quarter sessions, but it cannot have any weight here, because the facts stated in the special case negative any hiring: indeed that argument applies as well to the first as to the second service, and the justices have expressly said that there was no hiring during the first service: they also state that before the pauper returned to his uncle, the latter proposed to him to come and live with him as before, that is, in the same relation. This excludes the idea of any hiring for a year. I do not wish to break in upon those cases where it has been determined that a general hiring is a hiring for a year, or that a hiring under certain circumstances may be presumed; and if the justices in this case had found that there was a yearly hiring, it would have concluded the case; but here they have expressly found that the first service was not under any hiring, and that the second was as before, and we cannot contradict these facts, and introduce our own conjectures on the subject, in opposition to this finding." Order of sessions quashed.

3. Where a Contract may be implied. (a)

Rex v. Holy Trinity, in Wareham, Cald. 141; 2 Bott, 481. Order of removal from Poole to Wareham confirmed. Case:—The pauper's husband was abroad, and had been beyond sea for two years past, if alive. To her knowledge he lived in the capacity of an ostler with Mrs. Lee, in W., some years since deceased, for about two years, where she had seen him brew: but whether there was any agreement relating to such service was not proved, but she had heard her husband (b) say he was settled at Wareham. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "The sessions have drawn their conclusion that he was hired; and I think they have done right." Buller, J. "Though the evidence is slight, there is nothing to contradict it." Willes and Ashhurst, Js. concurred.

The ostler's case.
Where a person had lived with another as ostler for two years, and had been seen in menial service there, a yearly hiring was presumed.

Rex v. Lyth, 5 T. R. 327. T. Carling was removed from Whitby to Lyth. Order confirmed. Case:—The respondents proved that the pauper was the legitimate son of W. and M. Carling, and born in Lyth. The appellants, in order to show a derivative settlement in the pauper from his father in a third parish, proved that W. Carling, before his marriage, was, a few days after Martinmas, 1731, seen and known to be in the service of one Campion, in Barnby, as a servant in husbandry; and was from time to time seen and known to act in that capacity with Campion for some time, upwards of a year. The appellants offered to prove that Campion, who was then long since dead, had declared in his lifetime that W. Carling had been hired with him for a year: but the sessions were of opinion that such evidence was not admissible. Evidence of declarations to the same effect by W. Carling, who is also dead, touching such hiring, was also refused. Whereupon the sessions, being of opinion that there was no evidence of a hiring, confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the court upon the propriety of rejecting the evidence offered of the declarations of Campion and W. Carling; and also whether, after rejecting such declarations, they had done right in refusing to infer the hiring from the fact of service proved. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "The case was drawn up in too loose a manner for the court to give any solemn judgment upon it: for in some parts of it evidence was stated instead of facts; and the court were left to draw inferences which the magistrates below ought to have done. But that if the sessions wished to know whether, from the evidence stated relative to the hiring of W. Carling, they were at liberty to draw the conclusion of his having been hired for a year; in fact, the court had no hesitation in thinking that they might legally draw such an inference. He, therefore, thought this advice of the court might be given to the magistrates without the necessity of entering any regular judgment upon this case as it now stood, or putting the parties to the expense of stating the case again." The Rex v. Pitminster was cited: but Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "That it appeared that the pauper was taken out of charity; and, therefore, the presumption of a hiring was taken away. But this is the case of a servant in husbandry, whose service for a year affords very strong presumptive evidence of an hiring for a year. But, however strong that presumption be, as only the evidence of hiring is stated, and not the fact itself, we cannot decide upon the case: though the sessions must be directed to draw from this evidence the conclusion that W. Carling was hired for a year." Case sent back.

If a person go into a service upon liking, and at the end of the year is paid by the year, and continues in the service afterwards, a yearly hiring may be presumed.

Rex v. Hales, 5 T. R. 168. Martha Mitchell was removed from Hales to Wrentham. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper, a fortnight after old Michaelmas, 1792, heard from Miss Garnham that her father, a farmer, wanted a servant; and the pauper agreed with her to go to him a month upon liking; she went accordingly; and in the spring following Miss Garnham told the pauper that if she behaved well, and did her work properly, she should have 4*l.* for a year. The pauper continued in his service without any other agreement until the Christmas following, when she went away; but a fortnight after Michaelmas, 1793, she received 4*l.* for a year's wages then due; and for the remainder of the service from that time she received 1*s.* 6*d.* a-week, being the proportion of wages then due at the rate of 4*l.* per annum. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "At present the case is so imperfectly stated, that we cannot give any judgment upon it. A retrospective hiring certainly is not sufficient to confer a settlement; but as the pauper continued in the same service after the expiration of the first year, there was abundant ground for the justices to have presumed a hiring for a year from that time. However, as the fact is not stated one way or the other, the case must be sent back, when most probably the justices, after hearing the intimation of this court, will find the fact of a hiring for a year, which will put an end to the case." Case sent back.

A hiring for a year may be presumed from a service for four years.

Rex v. Pendleton, 15 East, 449. The pauper was in 1782 engaged as a servant to Messrs. Douglas & Co., of Pendleton, by "Articles of agreement made the 24th of June, 1782, between T. and W. Douglas, of Pendleton, on the one part, and J. Jebson, cotton-worker, on the other part, and J. Longden (the pauper), of the other part, witnesseth that J. Jebson hereby covenants and agrees duly and faithfully, and J. Longden hereby agrees duly and faithfully, to serve T. and W. Douglas in the capacity of cotton-workers, during the term of three years, night or day; and T. and W. Douglas agree to pay unto J. Jebson 5*s.* 6*d.* per week for the first year, and to J. Longden 6*s.* per week for the first year, 7*s.* per week for the second year, 9*s.* per week for the third year, in consideration of his faithful services; and whatever time J. Longden or J. Jebson shall be absent from their work, it shall be propor-tionably deducted from their wages. The present agreement to remain in full force for three years. And for the performance of this agreement, J. J. and J. L. bind themselves and their executors in the penalty of 100*l.*" (The instrument was signed and sealed by the respective parties, but was not stamped.) The pauper served Messrs. D. & Co. during the time stated, and continued on in their service for four years more without any thing further being said as to wages, and without any express engagement as to the time or conditions of such service. The sessions were of opinion that a hiring might be presumed. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The fact of the service is always capable of distinct proof, for it is collateral and subsequent to the contract itself. The pauper served, that is a fact to be proved by parol evidence; he served T. and W. Douglas at Pendleton, that is also proved by the fact; he served them there during three years, which is a shorter way of expressing that which the sessions meant to find as to the time of the service, by referring to the time mentioned in the instrument; and he afterwards continued to serve them for four years longer; he served without any thing being said as to wages. The stress of the argument seems rather to show, that there were no certain wages reserved, and that there was no hiring for a year, for if there were only a general hiring, the law presumes that it is for a year, and if the rate of wages were not specified, he would be entitled to reasonable wages. Then were not the sessions warranted from the fact of a service of four years at wages, though not specified, to presume that it was under a hiring for a year? the law says, that they may make such a presumption when there is nothing to repel it, and that makes an end of the case." Le Blanc, J. "For any thing which appears to us, the sessions received the evidence of the written instrument without objection made to it at the time; for if they meant to state the question reserved by them, to be whether that evidence was properly received, they would have stated that objection was taken to it, and asked the advice of the court on its admissibility. But as far as we can see, the evidence was received without objection, and the facts stated in the instrument are joined on with the other evidence, which, without reference to the instrument, would probably have been stated more fully, and the pauper would then probably have proved that he had served, in fact, for four years after the expiration of the articles, having before served for three years under them, and received wages at the rate of so much a week during that time; and then the sessions would have sent to us to know whether they could, from that evidence, putting the written instrument quite out of the question, have presumed a hiring for a year. And how can we say that they could not so presume?" Bayley, J. "It has been argued here, that inasmuch as the pauper served for some part of the time, at least, under a written instrument unstamped, we cannot look at the instrument even to see for what time it enured, and that no parol evidence could be given of any contract with reference to the subject matter of it. But though we cannot look at the unstamped instrument for the purpose of proving by it any agreement between the parties, for such is the general import of the stamp acts, yet the court may look at it to see whether it applies to other evidence of a contract between them; as if a contract in writing be made, not stamped, for the sale and delivery of certain goods, on certain terms, the court, in an action for the non-delivery of goods upon a contract proved by parol evidence only, may look at the instrument to see whether it applies to the goods then sought to be recovered for; and if those goods were not included in the contract, parol evidence may be received of the contract sought to be recovered upon. So here, the court might look at the instrument to see the duration of the first contract under it, in order to guide them in receiving parol evidence of the subsequent services to which it did not apply." Orders confirmed.

Rex v. Long Whatton, 5 T. R. 447. The pauper (a lunatic at the time of removal) went in March to live at Diseworth with Mrs. Lowdham, to wait upon Mr. L., who was poorly. She continued there till the death of Mrs. L., which happened two or three years after. She was seen during that time constantly acting as the servant of Mrs. L. On her first going to Diseworth the pauper had told her brother-in-law that she was hired till the following Michaelmas, with liberty to part on a month's wages or a month's warning. At another time she said, on being asked, that she belonged to Diseworth, where she had been hired, and had received 2s. 6d. earnest, but never mentioned any second hiring. These declarations were objected to; but the sessions received them, and were of opinion, upon the whole evidence, as well those declarations as the rest, that she gained a settlement at D. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "Independently of the declarations of the pauper, there was sufficient evidence to warrant the justices in finding a hiring for a year in D. Though the pauper were at first hired only till the Michaelmas following, yet she continued in the same service for three years." The counsel not desiring to have the case sent back the order was confirmed.

Rex v. St. Martin's, Leicester, 8 B. & C. 674. The pauper, being then about fourteen years old, went with his father to the house of one Neale, an innkeeper, in the parish of St. Martin, and informed N. that he heard he wanted a lad. N. answered, "he had got one coming in a fortnight, but that the pauper might stay for that fortnight, till the other lad came." The pauper was to fill the situation of boots and tap-boy, and had his board and the vails. At the end of the fortnight the other boy came, but was not hired, and the pauper continued in the service (without anything following between him and N.) for three years and a quarter, when he went and engaged with another master without consulting N. and removed the following day; N. telling him "that if it was his mind to go he believed he must." The sessions found this to be an implied hiring. Bayley, J. "I think that the justices were warranted in coming to this conclusion. If N. had said no more than that the boy should have board, lodging, and the vails, the law would have implied a general hiring; but he assigns a reason why he could not engage him for more than a fortnight. At the end of that time the pauper continued in N.'s service. The question then for the justices was whether the relation of master and servant was created between them, and for what time; that depended on the understanding existing in the mind of the parties at the time. Both parties understood that the relation of master and servant was created for a fortnight in the first instance. If the justices thought that the master refused to take the pauper for a year, only because he expected another boy, they might, as that boy was not finally hired, taking into consideration the conversation between the pauper and master, and the subsequent service, presume a contract for a year; they might, most properly, have so presumed, if nothing had been said in the first instance of another boy coming in a fortnight. If the conversation, omitting all mention of another person being expected, coupled with the subsequent service, would have been sufficient to raise a presumption of yearly hiring, the justices might think that as the expected person was not hired, both parties intended the relation of master and servant to continue for that period. Rex v. Pendleton is in point." Littledale, J. said, he should have drawn a different conclusion from the facts; but he thought the decision of the justices ought not to be disturbed. Parke, J. concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

The relation of the parties may rebut the presumption of hiring.

Rex v. Sow, 1 B. & Ald. 178. Order of removal from Coundon to Sow, confirmed, &c. Case:—The pauper was hired in November, 1812, by the wife of Mr. Deeming, of Sow, for a year, at 50s. wages, and what clothes Mrs. D. pleased. Previously to this hiring, the pauper, who is a natural daughter of Mr. D., lived with her mother at Kearsley, and the hiring was for the purpose of gaining a settlement in Sow. As soon as she was hired she went into the service of Mr. D. served him for a year, and continued to live with him until the month of July, 1816, when she went away; during the whole of which time she did the household work, as she did during the first year, but no conversation took place between the parties about hiring after she was hired in November, 1812, and there was no second hiring, unless from continuance in the service of Mr. D. a hiring ought to be implied, which in the opinion of the sessions it ought not. Some months after the expiration of the first twelve months, Mr. D. gave the pauper 5l., 50s. thereof for the first year's wages, and desired her to keep the remaining 50s. and say nothing about it. The pauper never afterwards received any sum on account of wages, but received at different times clothes and pocket-money. Mr. D. at Lady-day, 1816, removed with his family to Coundon: the pauper removed with them, and continued to live with them there till the month of July. There was no fraud in this case. Lord Ellenborough, "I cannot set the sessions more right than they have set themselves. The pauper was hired for a year, and 50s. were paid her; that was paid with another sum, and there is no question that the one sum was paid as wages and the other as bounty; it is true the service continued the same, but there was not any hiring for the second or any subsequent year." (a) Bayley, J. "I think the sessions have done perfectly right; where the parties are not related, it may fairly be presumed from a continuance in the service, that the terms in which they continue are the same as during the preceding year. But where the relation of father and child subsists, the ground for that presumption fails, and here there are a variety of circumstances to show that there was not any new hiring. The parties lived during the second year upon different terms from what they lived during the first." Abbott, J. thought the sessions right, inasmuch as after the first year the pauper was living as a child with her parent, and not as a servant with her master. Order confirmed.

A child may by express consent be hired as a servant by a parent. (Rex v. Chillesford, ante, 340.)

A general hiring may be a hiring for a year, or it may be for less than a year. If there be a general known custom in a parish to hire servants for less than a year, the general hiring would be for the customary period, and not for a whole year. Bayley, J. (Rex v. Bottesford, post. See also Rex v. Tyrley, post, 357, and Rex v. Keele, post.)

Presumption may be rebutted by the custom of the country.

4. Where the Contract is indefinite.

4. Where the contract is indefinite.

Where the relation of master and servant has existed in such a manner that a hiring for a year may have been entered into between them, the law will adopt such an inference unless it can be rebutted by opposing evidence. The stipulations, therefore, as to time or wages may justify the conclusion of a yearly hiring, although they do not expressly include that period.

Rex v. Wincaunton, Burr. S. C. 299; 2 Bott, 289. The pauper, of the age of seventeen, offered to serve S. Williams, of Charleton Horethorne; who hired him to serve him in husbandry, and agreed to give him meat, drink, washing, lodging, and clothes, when wanted; but no particular time was agreed on, and the pauper apprehended his master might have been off, or he might have gone away from him, at their pleasure; nevertheless, there was no agreement for that purpose. The boy continued and served him in Charleton Horethorne two years and a half. By the court: "He gained a settlement there by this service. A general hiring is a hiring for a year. And here are no circumstances in this case to show an intention to the contrary, or to vary it from the general rule. The mere apprehension of the pauper doth not do it." (Rex v. Weyhill.)

Hiring to serve in husbandry. (b)

Rex v. Berwick St. John, Burr. S. C. 502; 2 Bott, 290. The pauper met Mr. Jones, head keeper of Rushmore Lodge, in Berwick St. John, who had then lately parted with one E. Hill, who had been for many years one of his servants, or under keepers, at the wages of 3*l.* a year, and a keeper's livery, besides meat, drink, and lodging. Jones said to the pauper, "Do you like the life of a keeper?" Which being answered in the affirmative, he said, "Then go into Ned Hill's place, and you shall want no encouragement." Accordingly he went, and continued in the service for three years, Telling a person to go into the place of one who had been a yearly servant, is ground to imply a hiring for a year.

(a) See Rex v. Crediton, 2 B. & Ad. 493, post.

(b) In Rex v. Tyrley, 4 B. & Ald. 624, where the pauper hired himself for 8*l.*, and no time specified. He entered the service the day before New Year's Day, and left it two days after Christmas Day. The session found this to be a general hiring. Abbott, C. J. said, "the court were bound by this finding, but that he should have come to a different conclusion."

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Where no mention is made of time or of wages, and the service is for a year, a hiring is presumed.

An indefinite hiring is to be considered as a hiring for a year, and the apprehension of the master and servant makes no difference.

and received three years' wages. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This man served three years, and received wages accordingly. But it is objected that he was never hired at all. It is admitted that if he were hired at all, it would by law be a hiring for a year. And upon the state of this conversation, it is a clear hiring, for Hill was a hired servant."

Rex v. Stockbridge, Burr. S. C. 759; 2 Bott, 294. The pauper asked M. Nicholas if he wanted a boot-catcher and driver? And N. said, yes. The pauper replied, he was willing to serve him; and N. bid him "go into the yard and look after the horses;" nothing else passed, and no term was mentioned. He went into the service, and continued in it for one year; and was found by his master in meat, drink, and lodging, but received no wages. He was afterwards hired to J. Watts, of Basingstoke, "to be a chaise driver," but no term was mentioned. He served him for a year there, being found by him in meat, drink, and lodging, but received no wages. He thought himself at liberty to leave either of these masters whenever he pleased. It was proved that the customary manner of engaging chaise-drivers is as the pauper stated; and that the masters and drivers think themselves at liberty to part whenever they please. The sessions thought that the pauper gained no settlement; but the judges were of opinion that this was a sufficient hiring for a year. A general indefinite hiring is a hiring for a year, unless something appears that may raise a presumption to the contrary. And nothing is here stated which limits the hiring, or shows that it was meant to be for less than a year.

Rex v. Seaton and Beer, 2 Bott, 297; Cald. 440. S. Ponsford, who kept a public house at Broadclift, agreed with the pauper that he, Ponsford, should give him, the pauper, one shilling a-week, as he had given the other man or men, and the vails of the stables. Nothing was said about time. At the end of the year his mistress said to him, "You have been here a year, I will pay you." To which the pauper answered, "It is no matter, I may stay with you another year." She said, "Very well, Sampson." He did stay another year, and then received what was due to him, being 5*l.* 4*s.*; he worked in the stables as an ostler, and neither at the time of making the first agreement, nor at the end of the first year, was any mention made, either by the mistress or the pauper, of a hiring for a year, or of the term for which he was to serve; but the pauper apprehended that his master might have parted with him at any time, on giving reasonable notice. No evidence was given of the time for which any such man or men as above referred to had been at any time hired by Ponsford. The sessions thought no settlement was gained. Willes, J. "The first agreement was general, but the pauper was to receive wages like a former servant. I think the conversation at the end of the year was an agreement to serve another year, which makes it even stronger than the case of a general hiring. Rex v. Stockbridge (supra), is decisive of the present question." Ashhurst, J. "I am not for narrowing the determinations in favour of settlements; and this does not go so far as some other cases. The general rule is, that an indefinite hiring, without any circumstances to show that a less time was meant, shall be considered as a hiring for a year. In this case, the first conversation would amount to an indefinite hiring; the second seems to show that it was in the mind of both that it should be a hiring for a year. There are cases where it has been so held against the apprehension of both." Buller, J. "It is settled in a variety of cases, that the apprehension of the pauper makes no difference. The first agreement would be sufficient; but on the second there can be no doubt."

Rex v. Bath Easton, Burr. S. C. 823; 2 Bott, 296. The pauper was hired to John Giles, in Devizes, to serve him as a journeyman barber, who was to give him meat, drink, and lodging. In lieu of wages he was to have the Christmas boxes. No time was mentioned. Upon these terms the pauper lived with Giles four years, but thought himself at liberty to leave his master when he thought proper. Afterwards, he was hired to J. Bedford, an innkeeper at Mangotsfield, "to serve him in his stable," who was to find him meat, drink, washing, and lodging, but no wages, other than what he should receive as perquisites of the stable; no time was mentioned, and he apprehended that his master might have turned him off, or he might have gone away from him, at their pleasure. (a) From the time that the pauper began to serve Bedford, to the time at which he left him, was sixteen years. During which time he left Bedford several times at his pleasure, but from the time of his first going into the service, he was with Bedford two years and upwards without leaving him at all; and at the end of the sixteen years, he was with him for three years together without interruption. And this was admitted without argument to be a settlement at Mangotsfield.

Rex v. Worfield, 5 T. R. 506. The pauper went to live with A. Smith, in Bridgenorth, and served him near a year, but was not hired to him as she knows of. While she lived with Smith, J. Jones met her, and taking her to his house, asked her if she were hired again to Smith? She answered, that she was not. Jones then asked her, "if she would come and live with him and take care of his child?" to which she consented, and soon after she went to him. A few days after she had been with Jones, he told her he would find her meat drink, and clothes, and asked if she would be satisfied with that? she told him she should. He said he would have given her money, but that it was better for her to have clothes, as she was connected with bad friends, who would take her money. She went to Jones at Christmas, and lived with him about two years and a half, leaving him in May, when her mistress told her that her child was then old enough not to require any further attendance, and dismissed her. She said in her own opinion she was at liberty to have left Jones at any time. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It has been so long settled that a general hiring is a hiring for a year, that it ought not now to be controverted. In my opinion the hiring in this case was a hiring for a year; the circumstance of the pauper's going away (b) in the middle of a year, does not show that this hiring was not of such a description; for it was competent to both parties to put an end to the contract whenever they pleased, and here they did dissolve it in the middle of the year. It is much to be wished that in cases of this kind the justices at the sessions would draw the conclusion, and state it as a fact whether or not there was a hiring for a year." Ashhurst, J. "The pauper was to be provided with clothes in lieu of wages; if the master had clothed her the day after she entered the service, could it have been the intention of the parties that she might have left the service immediately if not the next day? what other line can be drawn? This shows that both parties meant that the service should be permanent, and that the pauper could not leave the service when she pleased." The other judges concurred.

Rex v. Macclesfield, 3 T. R. 76. The pauper was hired by F. Berwick, of Macclesfield, button-maker, for eleven months, at ten guineas wages; at the end thereof, he and his master settled his wages for eleven months, and his master gave him a half-guinea over, saying, that he had been a good servant, and added, "You may as well stay on an end in your place; the place suits you, and you suit the place." The pauper's answer was, "Very well, sir, I have no objection." And he continued to follow his master's business near three years. The pauper being at Birmingham with his master's cart was taken ill, and stayed there some time, which occasioned him to lose his service. His master used to give him money occasionally during his service, but the pauper kept no account himself. A few days after his return from Birmingham his master settled with him; he did not know in what manner, but supposed the money was right, and thought his wages would come to about four shillings a-week. Rex v. Clare (post, 368), where the pauper was originally hired for a month, and continued in the same service five years, and yet gained no settlement by it, was cited against this order. By Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is clear that there must be either an express or an implied contract for a year, in order to give the servant a settlement. An hiring for eleven months will not confer a settlement, unless the sessions find that it was fraudulent, and that a year's service was intended, though eleven months only were expressed, as in Rex v. Milwich, where there was a hiring for eleven months, with an agreement to give in another month's service. Now in this case the first hiring for eleven months was not sufficient to confer a settlement; but when that time was elapsed, the master told the pauper that he might as well stay on an end; which in that part of the country means an indefinite time. The second hiring therefore must be considered as a general hiring, which the law construes to be a hiring for a year. As to this expression referring to the time for which the pauper was originally hired, it is too refined; it only referred to the nature of the service in which he was before engaged. Then if we consider the wages for which the pauper served under the second agreement, it negatives the idea that the parties contracted for another eleven months for the same definite sum which the pauper received under the first agreement; for it is stated that he received about four shillings a-week, which does not amount to the same apportionment of wages." Ashhurst and Grose, Js. concurred.

Hiring for eleven months, and then on an end, gives a settlement, as the latter is an indefinite hiring.

(a) In many of the early cases the apprehension of the master and servant as to the legal effect of the contract, is stated; but it is now settled that can make no difference. See Rex v. Seaton, ante, 354.

Where there were three successive hirings from a few days after Old Michaelmas to the following Old Michaelmas: Held, that there was not such a general hiring as conferred a settlement.

Rex v. Ardington, 3 Nev. & M. 304; 1 Ad. & El. 260. An order for removing George Barrett and family from Ardington to Albourne, Wilts, was quashed. Case:—Three or four days after Old Michaelmas day, 1823, the pauper being then about sixteen years old, and settled in Aldbourne, was hired by his father to Mr. William Brown, a farmer, in the parish of Little Hinton, Wilts, (the father being in Brown's service also), to serve as shepherd for his board and lodging in the house of Brown at Little Hinton, until the following Old Michaelmas, at 5*l.* and 6*s.* a week wages for the father. The pauper served accordingly as shepherd under that hiring, boarding and sleeping in Brown's house till Old Michaelmas day, 1824, on which day he, by his father's leave, went to Highworth fair for pleasure, and returned in the evening to his master's house. Mr. Brown settled with the pauper's father for the wages due to himself and his son up to Old Michaelmas, four or five days after Old Michaelmas, the father receiving the wages for his son. On the day the wages were paid, the master hired the pauper's father, the pauper, and his brother to serve him until the Old Michaelmas following, at 6*s.* a week for the father, and 5*l.* 10*s.* for each of the sons at Michaelmas. The pauper and his brother continued with their father to board and lodge at Little Hinton, the pauper being employed as before till Old Michaelmas day, 1825, when the pauper drove his master's sheep to Highworth fair, and returned in the evening to Little Hinton. A few day's after Old Michaelmas, 1825, the master again settled with the pauper's father for the wages agreed upon for himself and his sons at the previous hiring, and asked the father "if he and his sons chose to go on with him?" to which the father said "yes." The wages were to be the same. The pauper remained at his master's house, boarding, and lodging, and working on the farm as usual till about the 10th March, 1826, when he was sent by his master with sheep to a farm he was about to occupy at Lockhinge, in Berkshire. He remained there, receiving 5*s.* a week board wages, till Lady-day, 1826, when he returned to Brown at Little Hinton, and continued there as before till the beginning of April, when Brown quitted Little Hinton, having paid the pauper's wages, due to him at Lady-day, 1826, to his father, without deducting any thing on account of the pauper's absence at Lockhinge. The pauper then entered the service of the incoming tenant. The pauper boarded and lodged at Brown's house and was employed on his farm as shepherd continually from three or four days after Old Michaelmas, 1823, to a few days after Lady-day, 1826. No other person was ever hired or employed by Brown in place of the pauper during that time. The father received the pauper's wages from Brown, without accounting to the pauper, but found him in clothes and pocket money during his service. The pauper might have left his master's service at Old Michaelmas, 1824. He did not know what wages he was to receive. On these facts the sessions held that a yearly hiring of the pauper by Brown, in Little Hinton, must be implied, and they quashed the order of removal. The case now coming on for argument the court asked the counsel who supported the order of sessions, what ground there was for implying a yearly hiring? Per Curiam. Patten-son, J. "It would be difficult to say how the master in this case could have done better than he has to avoid a yearly hiring, and that seems to have been the intention of the parties. The words used by the master clearly do not import an indefinite hiring." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex. v. South Newton, 10 Bar. & Cres. 838. An order for removing Thomas Brown, wife, and children from Woodford to South Newton, was confirmed. Case:—The pauper in 1823, while single, was hired as shepherd by the tenantry farmers of the manor of Lower Woodford, for eleven months, at 14s. per week, and was to have a piece of land, called the Shepherd's Croft, which was to make up money as good as 16s. a week, to keep certain sheep belonging to them, called the tenantry flock. Payment of his monied wages was made quarterly by the tenantry farmers. The pauper, after serving eleven months, was hired again for one month. Before the end of the month the pauper was hired "to go on again upon the same terms." He served a year under this last hiring, and slept the last forty nights at South Newton, the appellant parish, having married in the course of that year. The tenantry farmers above-mentioned are leaseholders and copyholders of the manor of Lower Woodford. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the pauper was settled in South Newton by virtue of the hiring and service for a year. It appears that he was hired for eleven months, and afterwards for a month, and then he was hired to go on again on the same terms; that was an indefinite hiring and therefore a hiring for a year, and as he resided in South Newton the last forty days he was settled in that parish."

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

In an award for the division of common field lands, an allotment was made for the shepherd of the common sheep flock: Held, that he being hired by the year had not such interest in the land as to give him a settlement.

5. What is a Hiring for a Year. (a)

Whether there has been a hiring for a year or not is, upon most occasions, a question of fact, which the sessions are to determine; and the court of King's Bench will not interfere with their conclusion upon the subject, unless it is founded upon some mistake of the rules of evidence, or of the law applicable to the circumstances of the case. Sometimes the sessions content themselves with stating the evidence in a special case, without any express finding as to whether there was in fact a hiring for a year or not, a practice of which the court has repeatedly complained, and with reference to which the judges have frequently expressed a wish that the justices at sessions would understand that it is their duty to determine questions of fact, and not to send them to the Court of King's Bench for decision. (Rex v. Bottesford, 4 B. & C. 84; 6 D. & R. 99; post.)

Rex v. Tyrley, 4 B. & Ald. 624. Removal from Audlem to Tyrley. Order confirmed. Case:—Edward Peake, the pauper, hired himself generally at 8l. and his washing, without any time being specified; but which the sessions found to be a general hiring for a year. He entered into his service the day before New Year's Day, and quitted with the consent of his master two days after Christmas Day, the usual day that servants in that part of the country go into and leave their places. The pauper received the whole of his wages at the time of his quitting, and stated that when he left, he considered himself no longer under the control of his master. The sessions found this to be a hiring and a service for a year. Abbott, C. J. "As the sessions have expressly found the fact of a hiring and service for a year, I think we are bound by it. I cannot say that no reasonable person could come to such a conclusion upon the facts stated, although I certainly should not have come to it myself. I should have thought that in this case there was neither a dispensation with the service, nor a dissolution of the contract; but that the contract had arrived at its termination, and that before a year had expired. But still as the question was properly for the determination of the sessions, who have expressly found the fact otherwise, I think their order must be confirmed."

5. What is a Hiring for a Year.

A pauper hired himself, without specifying any time, and entered into the service the day before New Year's Day, and quitted two days after Christmas, receiving his full wages: that being the usual time that servants go into and leave their places. The sessions having expressly found this to be a hiring and service for a year, the court considered themselves bound by that finding.

(a) See division of the subject, ante, 331.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Hiring from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide gains a settlement, though there be less than 365 days in that period.

So although the service be ended before the following Whitsunday, if it has continued more than 365 days.

Hiring two days after Michaelmas till the following Michaelmas gains no settlement.

Hiring the day after Michaelmas day till the Michaelmas day following gains a settlement.

Rex v. Newstead, Burr. S. C. 669; 2 Bott, 343, vol. iii. F. Downey was hired to serve T. Hill for a year, from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide, at certain wages. She entered upon the service at Whitsuntide, 1767, and continued till Whitsuntide, 1768, when she received a year's wages. It had been usual in the country to hire servants from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide, and that a hiring and service from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide had always by the contracting parties been deemed a year's service; and agreeably thereto the master had always paid a full year's wages for such service, without diminution or addition, and without making any distinction or difference, whether the space of time between the one Whitsuntide and the other consisted of more or less than 365 days. The space of time between Whitsuntide, 1767, and Whitsuntide, 1768, was less than a year by sixteen days. The court however said: "There is no case that proves the absolute necessity that the hiring should be for exactly 365 days. It is stated to be the usual way (a) of hiring servants in that country, and such service is always deemed to be a year's service. Parish officers are to be appointed in Easter week, or within one month after Easter, (which is a moveable feast), yet they are considered as executing the office a whole year, though it may fall short of 365 days. The court were unanimous that this hiring and service were sufficient to gain a settlement."

Rex v. Ulverstone, 7 T. R. 564; 2 Bott, 243; 1 Nol. P. L. 359, 385. The pauper was hired by M. Hodgson, of Hawkshead, to serve him from Whitsuntide, 1796, to Whitsuntide, 1797. She entered into his service on Saturday, May 21, 1796, and continued to serve him in Hawkshead till the Thursday before the following Whitsunday, being June 1, 1797, when her master discharged her, she being pregnant of a bastard child, of which she was delivered on July 1 following. It was contended that, as in the above case of Rex v. Newstead, a hiring from Whitsuntide to Whitsuntide, although less than 365 days, was holden a sufficient hiring for a year; so that where it appears to have been the intent of the parties that the hiring should be according to such ecclesiastical division of the year, the parties ought to be holden to the same term of service in order to gain a settlement, although it happened in this case to be more than 365 days; but as the pauper was discharged for a legal cause before Whitsuntide happened again, she could not gain a settlement. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "The case is too plain for argument. The only question is, whether a service for more than 365 days is not a service for a year? The term ecclesiastical year is altogether new, and was never before applied to this subject." And it was held that a settlement was gained.

Coombe v. Westwoodhay, 1 Str. 147; 2 Bott, 243; 1 Nol. P. L. 357. Michaelmas day was on Thursday, and a person was hired upon the Saturday following, to serve from the said Thursday till Michaelmas: and it was held to be insufficient to gain a settlement, being not a hiring for a year. It was further observed that there must first be a hiring and then a service; and not vice versa, a service and then a hiring. (But service before may connect with service after hiring.)

Rex v. Navestock, Burr. S. C. 719; 2 Bott, 345; 13 Geo. III. The pauper, at the statute fair at Ongar, on the day next after Old Michaelmas day, the 11th of October, 1733, hired himself to S. Pasford, of Navestock, to serve till the Old Michaelmas day following. He entered upon the service, and continued in it till the Old Michaelmas day following; on which

(a) But the custom of the country cannot aid an imperfect contract. See Rex v. Lowther (post, 361), and Rex v. Hanwood (post, 362). The authority of the above case has in one instance been sustained, on the principle, that as the hiring was from one moveable feast to another moveable feast, its duration was uncertain (Rex v. Stanton Massey, post, 362; Rex v. Navestock, supra); but in the case of Rex v. Massey (post, 362), Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, that "a hiring by a schoolmaster from one Christmas breaking-up to another Christmas breaking-up, is not a hiring for a year, if less than a year is comprised in the period."

day he received his wages, and quitted the service. This hiring was according to the custom of the country. Mansfield, C. J. "There must be a hiring for a year. If the hiring be for less than a year it will not do, be the deficiency ever so little. Two days or one day short of a year, are equally an objection to its being a hiring for a whole year. Hiring from a moveable feast to a moveable feast, according to the custom of the country, has been determined to be a hiring for a year; being according to the custom of the country, although there should not be 365 days. And here they have stated the custom and usage of the country to hire servants in the manner this pauper was hired, and the custom is very material to explain it. If this should be taken not to be a hiring for a year, there has been no settlement gained in this country by a servant; for all servants in this country are hired as the present pauper was hired. Therefore it seems no stretch to consider this as a hiring from Michaelmas to Michaelmas." Aston, J. "It appears that the pauper entered on the day after Michaelmas day; 'till' is the word relied on, to prove it a hiring for less than a year. How has that word been understood? The pauper was in the service on the Michaelmas day, and took his wages; the service explains the hiring; here is in effect a hiring for a year, and a service agreeable to it." Willes, J. "The custom of the country in such a doubtful case as this must be called in aid."

Rex v. Syderstone cum Bermer, Cald. 19; 2 Bott, 346. The pauper applied on Old Michaelmas day to J. E., of Milham, to be hired by him, but they could not then agree about wages; the pauper asking eight guineas a year, and the other offering only six pounds. The next day, viz., October 11th, between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, they were together at a public house at Milham, when J. E. asked the pauper if he would take the wages offered him the day before, which he refused; but after some conversation the pauper hired himself to J. E., as a servant in husbandry, until Michaelmas following, at seven pounds wages; and entered his service on the evening of that same day, and staid till 10th October following, being Michaelmas day, 1772. On that day his master, not having finished his harvest, asked the pauper to stay and help him with his harvest; and though the pauper thought himself at liberty to go away, yet he staid with his master until the 11th October at noon, when after dinner he asked his master for his wages, who paid him seven pounds; and the pauper quitted his service, but did not ask or receive any recompence for his additional service. The court were clearly of opinion that this gained a settlement. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "To be sure there must be a hiring for a year; and this is one. Though he was hired on the afternoon of the 11th, yet we shall say that he was hired at twelve o'clock at night on the 10th; for it is settled that the law will not allow the fraction of a day. He served till the 10th; that is a year. If a man be born on the 10th, he is of age on the 9th." Aston and Willes, Js. concurred.

Rex v. Skiplam, 1 T. R. 490. The husband of the pauper, at Old Martinmas day, 1777, hired himself for a year, and served that year in Skiplam: on the next day after Old Martinmas day (viz., on the 23rd of November, 1778), he hired himself to one Barker, of Nawton, to serve him from thenceforth until Old Martinmas day following. He entered into the service of Barker a few days after such hiring, and continued to serve him until the Old Martinmas day following, on which day, about twelve o'clock at noon, he received his full wages, and left his master's house in the evening. Ashhurst, J. "It is much to be lamented that there is such confusion in settlement cases; therefore whatever the late determinations may be, they ought to be adhered to; now the last case (Rex v. Syderstone, supra) seems to correspond with this in every point: before that a distinction had been made, as where the hiring and service had been expressly found to be for a year, according to the custom of the country; but in the last case no such distinction was taken; so here there is no custom stated; and 'until' must be taken to be inclusive. Therefore there was a hiring and service for a year, for he entered into the service the first day of one year, and served till the first instant of the next." Buller, J. "The only question is, whether Martinmas day is to be taken inclusive or exclusive. The pauper's husband was hired the day after Martinmas day to serve till the Martinmas day following. From the moment of the hiring he became the servant of the master, and continued in the service till Martinmas day: then does the word 'till' include the day? The former cases have decided that it does; and if it only included a part of the day, as there is no fraction of a day, the service would be complete." Both orders quashed.

What is not a Hiring for a Year.

A pauper had been hired for three years at 20*l.* per annum as a looker. The duty of a looker is to superintend the flocks and fences of his employer. When he was hired, his master told him that he should not have full employment for him, but that he would employ him as much as he could. He was not to do any work for his master, other than that belonging to the office of looker, without extra wages. No hiring for a year.

What is not a Hiring for a Year.

Rex v. Lydd, 4 D. & R. 295; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 20; 2 B. & C. 754. Removal of G. Goldsmith, &c., from Lydd to Thurnham, quashed. Case:—In August, 1819, the pauper was hired to Mr. Fisher, in Midley, for three years, at 20*l.* per annum, as looker and to spud thistles. (The duty of a looker is to superintend the flocks and fences upon the lands of his employer, and he frequently has several masters, and works for any persons who may employ him, according as his time allows). The pauper went into the service of Fisher on the 26th of October, and was married on that day. He served Fisher for three years. He worked for no other person but Fisher for the first year and three quarters, but at the end of that time he hired himself as looker to a Mr. Russell. During his service with Fisher he did other work for him not belonging to his duty as looker, such as turning mould, lambing and shearing, for which he was always paid upon new and separate bargains on each occasion; and upon other occasions he did day work as a labourer for Fisher, for which he was also paid by the day. At the time of the pauper's contract with Fisher, nothing was said about his being at liberty to hire himself to or work for other masters during the three years, but Fisher said he did not think he should have full employment for the pauper; he would employ him as far as he could. Whilst he was working for other people, his wife hoisted a signal by putting a flag out of the window, upon which he considered himself bound to quit his work and attend to his duty as looker to Fisher, for which he was originally hired; and he invariably returned to Fisher when so summoned, and never worked on any lands from whence the flag could not be seen during the whole of the three years. He was not, however, to do any work for Fisher other than that for which he was originally hired as a looker, without receiving extra wages. His agreement with Russell was by the acre, and he bargained with him for a year at 14*l.* During the whole of the three years he lived on Fisher's land at Midley. Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that there was not in this case any contract of hiring and service for one whole year. Here the master had not the control over the servant for the entire year, but only for so much of the year as the duties of looker required his attention. At other times he was at liberty to employ himself in any manner he pleased, either in working for other persons or for his master, and when he worked for the latter he always received extra pay." Bayley, J. "In order to gain a settlement by hiring and service, there must be a contract for one whole year, and a service for the whole year. This is distinguishable from the cases cited, because here, from the very nature of the employment, it was not likely to fill up the whole time of the pauper. Scarcely ever more than a few hours each day would be required. This is very like the case of a person employed as an occasional servant for the purpose of brushing clothes. The master has no control over the servant as soon as he has performed the required service, and that takes up but a small portion of his time." Littledale, J. "Rex v. Horwick is the only case cited which bears any resemblance to or forms any authority for the present; and even that is distinguishable from it in one important particular; for there the pauper was provided with full and fair employment by one and the same master; whereas here, the work done cannot possibly be rated as the entire service of any husbandman, and the pauper actually resorts to other employers to fill up the measure of his labour, and to augment the sum of his wages. Upon the grounds already detailed by the court, I am also of opinion that the order of sessions must be quashed." Rule absolute for quashing the order of sessions.

Rex v. South Killingholme, 10 B. & C. 802. An order for removing R. Robinson and family from South Killingholme to Elsham was quashed. Case:—The pauper being unmarried and without child, in 1823 hired himself for a year for 5*l.* wages and 5*s.* earnest, to his aunt, who resided in North Killingholme and occupied six acres of land and kept two cows there; when his aunt had no work for him he was to work for any body else for his own benefit. The pauper entered the service, resided, and worked with his aunt during the whole year, except that in harvest time he worked for a fortnight with another person at 2*s.* per day, which he received for his own benefit, sleeping every night at his aunt's, and doing all the work she had for him to do every morning before he went to work, and generally in the evening when he returned, unless it was too late. He received his wages at the expiration of the year. The next year he was hired to another master at 9*l.* wages. Lord Tenterden, C. J. "The decisions certainly are not very distinguishable from each other, but I think this case comes nearer to Rex v. Edgmond, (a) Rex v. Polesworth, (b) and Rex v. Lydd (ante, 360) (c), than to the more early ones. The parties to the contract must have contemplated some portion of the year when the aunt would not have employment for the pauper; if that be so, the contract did not include the whole year, but only such part of the year as she would have work for the pauper." Bayley, J. "The fair meaning of the contract was to limit the service of the party hired to that portion of the year during which the aunt might have occasion for it." Littledale, J. concurred. Parke, J. "If the meaning of the words be taken to be that the aunt, when she did not choose to employ the pauper the whole year, might decline doing so, the contract of hiring was not for a year. And construing the words of it according to their natural import, I think that was the fair meaning, and that this was an exceptive hiring. In Rex v. Chertsey (d) the pauper was hired for a year, and was 'to have her board and lodging, and such profits as she could make by keeping fowls, and what she could earn by her own labour.' The latter words were considered by Ashhurst and Grose, Js. to give her liberty to do such work as she could consistently with the service which she was in the first instance bound to perform for her master." Order of sessions quashed.

Dunsford v. Ridgwick, 2 Salk. 535; 2 Bott, 250. A person was hired for half a year, and after that was hired again for another half year with the same master, and served a year in one continued and entire service, but by several hirings. By the court: "It ought to be one entire contract and one entire service; the one is required by the statute as well as the other. If a service under several contracts shall gain a settlement, one that serves by the month, by the week, or by the day, if he continue a year, shall gain a settlement. One may hire by the day for charity; but there is danger of being chargeable in hiring such a person by the year. For such a term as a year it is not supposed a master would hire one, unless able of body, and so a person not likely to become chargeable."

So Horsham v. Shipley, Fol. 134; 2 Bott, 340. A person was hired from May-day to Lady-day, then from Lady-day to May-day: and the court were of opinion it did not gain a settlement, for they said the hiring must be for a year.

Rex v. Lowther, Burr. S. C. 674; 2 Bott, 238. Case:—The pauper was hired to W. Thompson from Whitsuntide to Martinmas; and again was hired to him for the succeeding half year, from Martinmas to Whitsuntide; and in pursuance of those hirings she served for the complete year without leaving her service, and received two half years' wages. The usual custom of hiring servants in Cumberland is from half year to half year. And it was agreed, Hiring at a statute fair, if for less than a year, gains no settlement, though such a hiring be customary.

Rex v. Hanwood, Dougl. 439; Cald. 100. At Otley there is a custom for servants to hire by the year at two different statute days, one on the Friday before Old Martinmas, and the other on the Friday next after Old Martinmas, at which latter statute day they always hire till old Martinmas-day following, which by the custom is considered as hiring for a year. Old Martinmas-day in 1775 was on a Tuesday. On the Friday following, being the second statute day, the pauper hired till Old Martinmas day following, and served that time. Willes, J. "In Rex v. Newstead the duration was uncertain, and the hiring was supported by the custom of the country: the custom here (if it could be of any weight to control the statute) is stated to be the custom of Otley, and the contract was performed in another place." Mr. Justice Buller said "There is no case where a hiring upon the face of it appears to be for less than a year, in which the court has held that a settlement was gained; and it would be dangerous to make a new precedent of that sort."

Rex v. Standon Massey, 10 East, 576. Ongar statute fair is held on the day after Old Michaelmas, except when Old Michaelmas day falls upon a Saturday, and then on the following Monday. At Ongar fair, 1806, held on a Monday, which was two days after Old Michaelmas in that year, the pauper was hired to serve W. C. from the fair-day till the Old Michaelmas-day following, at yearly wages. Lord Ellenborough said "No settlement could be gained under such a hiring, and that it was in no manner similar to a hiring from a moveable feast in one year to the same moveable feast in another." He added, "If we allow these constructive hirings to go on, it will soon be contended that a servant acquires a settlement who is hired by a schoolmaster from the breaking up at Christmas to the breaking up at Christmas, though less than a year should in fact be comprised in the period." And he added, that "The cases had gone far enough upon this subject."

Rex v. Little Coggeshall, 6 M. & Sel. 264. The pauper at Michaelmas, 1806, went as a servant in husbandry for a month, upon liking, and if he suited his place he was to continue during the year, and have three guineas wages. When he had served the month, his master said that he suited him, and if he liked he might continue with him; but added, that he must leave his place a fortnight before the end of the year, in order that he might not be an incumbrance to the parish. The pauper made no answer. Fourteen days before the end of the year his master told him that his time was up, and as he had behaved himself well he would pay him all his wages, which he did, and then desired him to go to his father, where he might hear of another place. The pauper made no objection; took his wages, went away, and never returned. The sessions thought it a dispensation from service for the fourteen days. Lord Ellenborough. "The point on which the settlement fails is, that there was not any hiring for a year. I should be glad to know if the master could have maintained any action against the servant for not serving him the year. At the end of the month of probation, the master said he would continue him, but he must go away a fortnight before the end of the year, that he might not be an incumbrance to the parish. This therefore was a stipulation by way of condition that they should part within the year." Bayley, J. "With respect to what has been said of the original contract, I would ask whether at the end of the month the pauper had a right to insist upon his master's continuing him the year." Order quashed.

Rex v. Astley, M. 1815, 4 Burn. 279, 23d edit. Removal from Corley to Astley. Order confirmed. Case:—At Michaelmas, 1812, the pauper was hired by Mr. Lillyman, of Astley, for fifty-one weeks, at two guineas and a half wages, and went into his service and lived with him accordingly. About a fortnight before the expiration of the fifty-one weeks, the pauper was hired again by Mrs. L. for fifty-one weeks, to commence from the Michaelmas following; and on the day on which the first fifty-one weeks expired, and before the expiration of the first fifty-one weeks, she agreed with her master to serve him for the ensuing week ending at Michaelmas, for which a few day after Michaelmas she received 1s. wages. Three weeks before the end of the first fifty-one weeks it had been proposed by the mistress to the girl and her mother that the girl should stay in her service the odd week, after the end of the first fifty-one weeks, and before the commencement of the second fifty-one weeks. The girl was unwilling, and would not say whether she would or not, but the mother was willing she should stop; but a full agreement for the week was not made until it was made by the husband on the day on which the first fifty-one weeks expired. At the time the pauper agreed with her master to stay the odd week, the other servant was gone, and her mistress was ill and near her confinement. The pauper stayed in the service the odd week, and the second fifty-one weeks. It was contended that the continuance of the pauper a week in the service after the expiration of the fifty-one weeks, completed her year's service, and she thereby gained a settlement. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question is not whether one week and fifty-one weeks make a year, but whether fifty-two weeks make a year. Fifty-two weeks do not make a year, and consequently such a service does not give a settlement." Bayley, J. "There are but 364 days in fifty-two weeks, and 365 days, 6 hours, and 49 minutes in a year. Unless therefore the whole of the latter time is included in the contract, no settlement can be obtained." Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The question is purely arithmetical, and the sessions at Warwick will in future know the difference between a contract for fifty-two weeks, and a contract for a year." Order of sessions quashed.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Rex v. Ackley, 3 T. R. 250. On Saturday, 13th October, 1787, being three days after Old Michaelmas day, which was on a Wednesday, the pauper hired himself to J. Clarke, to serve him until the next Michaelmas. He accordingly went into such service, and continued therein till Saturday the 11th October, 1788, being the day after Old Michaelmas day, which was on a Friday (it being leap-year), and was paid his wages and went away. As this was a service for 365 days, the sessions thought it gained a settlement in Ackley, and confirmed the order, by which he and his wife were removed from Bicester Market End to Ackley. But the court were clearly of opinion that here was no hiring for a year; this was a hiring for two days short of a year; and though the court has been extremely indulgent with respect to services, they have been always strict with regard to hirings. Order of sessions reversed.

Hiring three days after Michaelmas till the Michaelmas following, will not gain a settlement, although there be a service for 365 days (being leap-year.)

Rex v. Worminghall, 6 M. & Sel. 350. Case:—The pauper was hired in 1807 at Thame fair, held on the Tuesday next after Old Michaelmas day, which in this year happened on the 13th October, for eight guineas, five shillings, and three pence. He served till the 11th October, 1808, on which day he received his full wages, and quitted the service. 1808 was a leap-year. Lord Ellenborough, "In those years which consist of 366 days, a hiring and service for a year must be for that same number of days." Bayley, J. "One day was wanting to complete the year: for in leap-year the statute (24 Geo. II. c. 23) enacts that the year shall consist of 366 days." Holroyd, J. "The statute (21 Hen. III.) for regulating the bissextile year, ordains that in leap-year the intercalary day with the day preceding it shall be accounted as one day."

In leap-year the hiring must be for three hundred and sixty-six days.

Rex v. Rorby. (See case, post.) The pauper served only 365 days in leap-year; and the court said he had contracted to serve a year of 366 days (it being leap-year), which he has not done.

6. Weekly or Monthly Wages and Notice.

Where the duration of the hiring is not expressed in the contract, the question whether it is a yearly hiring or not, will frequently be determined by the stipulation as to wages. Thus where the parties agree for yearly wages, the presumption of a yearly hiring arises. "If the payment of weekly wages be the only circumstances from which the duration of the contract is to be collected, it must be taken to be only a weekly hiring; but if there be any thing to show that the hiring was intended for a year, the reservation of weekly wages will not control that hiring." Per Buller, J. Rex v. Newton Toney, 3 T. R. 453, infra.

Rex v. Dedham, Burr. S. C. 653; 2 Bott, 292. The pauper was hired in April, 1767, to J. Mason, to serve him in the business of a glazier, at the wages of 6s. a week, board, lodging, and washing, summer and winter. He served for eleven months, when his master, having taken an apprentice, informed him that he must lodge out of his house; upon which the pauper demanded 6d. a week more, alleging that he would otherwise quit the service, on account of his master's having withdrawn from the original agreement. He received the additional 6d. a week till the September following, and the pauper apprehended he was bound to stay with his master a year. The sessions thought a settlement was gained. Lord Mansfield, C.J. "All the cases require a hiring for a year, and there must be a reciprocal obligation on both parties. I see nothing here to make it a hiring for a year. It was a hiring at so much per week: when the master could not lodge the servant any longer, they came to a new agreement for an additional 6d. a week. The servant alleged that he would quit the service unless the master would comply with his demand. And to prevent his doing so, the master complied, and paid him 6d. a week more." Yates, J. "There must be a hiring for a year, either in law or express words. These words do not express it. The demand made by the servant destroys the presumption, so that neither of them seems at that time to have thought the contract originally made between them was binding for a year." Aston, J. "Though a general hiring is a hiring for a year, yet there must be an obligation upon the servant for a year. But nothing here infers such an obligation. 'Six shillings a week summer and winter' only imports that the wages should continue always the same, and not be varied according to the seasons. The master's complying with the demand, shows how the contract was understood by them both."

A hiring at so much a week is not a general hiring.

Rex v. Newton Toney, 2 T. R. 453. W. Slater removed from Harbridge to Newton Toney. Case:—Slater went to one Postans, a publican, at Newton Toney, who had before employed him three times to go into Shropshire with some hounds, and on his return from his last journey he agreed to live with Postans as ostler at 4s. 6d. per week, and continued with him as ostler for one year and a half. On demanding his wages, Postans alleged that as he had received vails, 4s. 6d. a week would be too much; whereupon he agreed to accept after the rate of 10l. a year, in lieu of 4s. 6d. per week. He then left his service and lived elsewhere for five or six months, when he returned to Newton Toney, and agreed with Postans to serve him again as his ostler, as he had done before, at 4s. per week, which was about 10l. a year, and which he received when he asked for it. Under the latter agreement he lived one year and a half, but thought himself as a weekly servant, and at liberty to leave his service at any time. Ashhurst, J. "The case of Rex v. Dedham (supra) is much stronger than this. It is impossible to distinguish the two cases upon principle; here the pauper 'hired himself as an ostler at 4s. 6d. per week,' but 'that cannot be considered as a general hiring;' and if either party had chosen to dissolve the contract before the end of the year, no action could have been maintained by the other." Buller, J. "This case is not so strong as Rex v. Dedham, for there the expression summer and winter showed that the party had it in contemplation to continue a year in the service. Here the hiring is merely at so much per week; now 'if there be any thing in the contract to show that the hiring was intended to be for a year, there a reservation of weekly wages will not control that hiring; but if the payment of weekly wages be the only circumstance from which the duration of the contract is to be collected, it must be taken to be only a weekly hiring,' and this hiring is of that kind." Grose, J. "It appears that the pauper actually left his service in the middle of the year, which satisfies me that it was not intended by the parties to be a hiring for a year." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Odiham, 2 T. R. 622, was also a case of weekly wages, similar to the preceding, and was given up by the counsel as having been determined in the above case.

Rex v. Mitcham, 12 East, 351. Removal from Mitcham to Burghfield. Order quashed. Case:—J. Pendry was hired by Graves, the keeper of a toll-gate (a) in Egham, at 3s. a-week for as long time as his master and himself could agree, to assist in collecting the tolls: he served for more than a year, assisting Graves in collecting the tolls, and occasionally took care of a horse and some hounds. The hounds were kept in premises belonging to the toll-house, and Pendry during all that time resided in the toll-house. Graves did not hire him as he had before hired a brother of Pendry, with whom he expressly contracted as for a yearly servant. Graves paid Pendry as he wanted money pounds at a time. Rex v. St. Ebbs, Burr. S. C. 289, was quoted, and Lord Ellenborough said, "That was an indefinite hiring at so much a year, determinable at the end of the first quarter. This case is nothing more than a hiring at so much a-week, which, where nothing else appears to the contrary, is a weekly hiring within the rule laid down in Rex v. Newton Toney; and it cannot alter the case by adding that which must necessarily have been understood, that the hiring was to continue as long as the master and servant agreed, that is, from week to week.

It is not a general hiring when the master and servant may separate at pleasure.

Rex v. Christ's Parish, York, 3 B. & C. 459; 5 D. & R. 314; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 442. The pauper, at ten years of age, went to F. P. for meat and clothes as long as he had a mind to stop. P. then lived at Craike, was a wood-carrier, and had two farms. The pauper was to do what he could, and what he was bid. He staid rather more than two years in P.'s service in Craike, and was supplied with meat and clothes. The pauper's father did not hire his son to P. and believed the bargain was only for meat and clothes. The sessions confirmed the order. Abbott, C. J. "It must be admitted that a general hiring is a hiring for a year, unless something appears to rebut that presumption. Here no such presumption can arise, because the pauper went 'for meat and clothes, as long as he had a mind to stop,' and consequently might have quitted the service any hour he chose; this completely negatives the idea of a hiring for a year." Bayley, J. "In Rex v. Trowbridge, which was decided in 1816, the court held that a hiring 'for as long time as the pauper pleased' was a hiring at will, and rebutted the presumption of a hiring for a year."

But the reservation of a power to dismiss without notice does not prevent the hiring from being general. Rex v. Sandhurst, 7 B. & C. 557; 1 Mun. & R. 95.

Rex v. Great Boden, 7 B. & C. 249; 1 M. & R. Mag. Ca. 42. The pauper, J. Harding, came to Mr. Hamshaw, an inn-keeper, residing in Great Bowden, and asked for a place. Hamshaw had no objection, and put him on as ostler, but said that he did not mean him to have a settlement, as the parish was very particular. No earnest or wages were given, but the pauper was to have what he got as ostler. He had his lodging and his board in his master's house. The pauper could have left at any time he pleased, or the master might have turned him away at any time. The pauper lived with Hamshaw as ostler, under the above terms, about a year and a half. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that it was part of the contract between the parties in this case that each should be at liberty to terminate the connection whenever he thought proper. The sessions have stated that fact to us, and have stated it, in my opinion, not as a finding of their own merely, but as the law existing in the case, which could only arise out of the contract. I do not consider that under a general hiring the parties are at liberty to separate when they please; on the contrary, I think the one is bound to serve, and the other bound to employ, for a year; and that if that is not the understanding, the hiring is not general, but is a hiring for a less period than a year. A general hiring is, in contemplation of law, a hiring for a year; but this is not a general

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

A hiring for so much a week, as long as the master and servant could agree, is only a weekly hiring, and gives no settlement.

Where a pauper, ten years old, went to service "for meat and clothes, as long as he had a mind to stop, to do what he could, and what he was bid," and he remained two years: Held, that this was not a yearly hiring, and that a settlement was not acquired by a service under it.

A hiring, which either master or servant may determine when he pleases, is not a general hiring for a year, and confers no settlement.

(a) Since the 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, under a keeper of a weighing machine, s. 51, and 4 Geo. IV. c. 95, s. 31, cannot create a settlement, ante, 330; hiring by a toll-gate keeper, or service and see Chitty's Col. Stat. vol. i. 492.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

A servant in husbandry, hired at the weekly wages of four shillings, board, washing, and lodging, except in the harvest month, when his wages were to be increased to ten shillings and sixpence per week, does not gain a settlement, that being only a weekly hiring.

hiring. This was a hiring 'for as long as the pauper pleased,' for the sessions inform us that it was part of the contract that the pauper might leave whenever he pleased, and that the master might discharge him whenever he pleased. That being the case, there was no hiring, either expressly or by implication, for a year, but there was a hiring for a less period than a year, and service under such a hiring confers no settlement. It seems to me, therefore, clearly, that the sessions have come to a wrong conclusion." Holroyd and Littledale, Js., concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Dodderhill, 3 M. & Sel. 243. J. Hill, the pauper, hired himself as a servant in husbandry to Broad, who occupied a farm in St. Peter's, to serve him for the weekly wages of four shillings, board, washing, and lodging, except in the harvest month, when his wages were to be increased to ten shillings and sixpence per week, and then again to be reduced to four shillings. Nothing was said as to the time the pauper was to continue. He served Broad eighteen months in St. Peter's, residing there, and receiving the four shillings per week, except during the harvest month, when his wages were raised to ten shillings and sixpence, and afterwards were again reduced to four shillings. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "I take the rule of law to be, that if no particular time is expressed for the continuance of the service, or is reasonably to be implied, a hiring for a year is to be intended. But it has also been laid down, that a reservation of weekly wages imports a hiring by the week, unless the inference which arises from the reservation of weekly wages be repelled by other circumstances. Where there is a liberty to part at a month's notice, that imports that as there must be a month to determine the contract, the reservation of weekly wages is not to limit the duration of the contract, and therefore it becomes a hiring unlimited in duration, which the law terms a general hiring, or a hiring for a year. What is the case here? The hiring is at weekly wages, except in the harvest month, when the servant is to be paid according to a higher rate of weekly wages during that month; he is to be paid ten shillings and sixpence per week, the parties contemplating the possibility of the service continuing during the harvest month. If the exception had been 'for the harvest month,' instead of 'in the harvest month,' it might have afforded a more plausible argument that the contract was meant to endure at least for the period of a month; or if instead of ten shillings and sixpence a-week, it had been stipulated that the servant should receive two guineas for the month, that would have imported a consolidated month, (a) and might have repelled, on the same principle as the month's notice, the inference arising from the reservation of weekly wages; but that is not the language of this contract. All that is stated here is the payment of weekly wages, which, according to the cases, controls the duration of the contract." Le Blanc, J., concurred. Bayley, J. "There is nothing in this case to show that the master bound himself to keep the man, or the man to serve the master for a year. The parties were only providing, that in case the weekly contract should continue up to the harvest month, the weekly wages should be increased. There was no obligation either upon the master or the servant to continue it beyond the week.

Weekly wages, and two guineas for the harvest.

Rex v. Lambeth, 4 M. & Sel. 315. The pauper's husband had been hired by one W. at eight shillings per week, and two guineas for the harvest, to do any thing the gardener should set him about; and under this hiring he served four years in Chadlesworth. The sessions thought he thereby gained a settlement in Chadlesworth, and now it was contended, in support of their order, that here was an agreement for a gross sum to be paid for the harvest, and not merely, as in Rex v. Dodderhill, for an increase in the weekly wages in the harvest month. And for the harvest, imports for a consolidated period, at least as long as a month, for which period these wages are reserved, which is inconsistent with the notion of a weekly hiring; and therefore this case falls within the principle of Rex v. Hampreston, 5 T. R. 205, post, 369. But per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It does not distinctly appear whether the two guineas were to be paid de incremento, or were to cover the whole harvest. All that appears is, that the hiring being by the week, the parties contemplated that possibly it might last through the harvest." Order of sessions quashed.

(a) See, however, Rex v. Lambeth, 4 M. & Sel. 315, next case.

Rex v. Pucklechurch, 5 East, 382. The pauper hired himself for eight weeks, at 5s. per week. At Midsummer he agreed for 4s. a-week till Michaelmas: at Michaelmas he agreed to live with his master for board and lodging, and 2s. 6d. per week. No time was mentioned then. In the summer the pauper asked for more wages, and they were increased, and again reduced in winter. When the wages were increased nothing was said as to leaving the service, or dissolving the contract. The alterations of wages took place in the beginning of a week. He entered and left the service the same day of the week. He served in the whole five years and a quarter. There was no complete settlement of wages till they parted. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If nothing be said as to the term of the service, but that the servant shall have weekly pay, it must prima facie be understood that the parties intended a weekly hiring and service. But circumstances may show a different intent. Here, in the first instance, the hiring was for a specific term of eight weeks; the second hiring was also for a definite time short of a year. No time was mentioned at the third hiring, but it was a hiring at weekly wages. Then it falls within the cases of Dedham, Bradnich, and Newton Toney, where a hiring at weekly wages has been holden to be a weekly hiring, and if it wanted any additional circumstance, the conduct of the parties themselves shows that they so considered it, for the servant left his master at the end of a week in the middle of the year. (a) If an indefinite hiring be stated on a record, and nothing shown to control it, it will be deemed a hiring for a year: but that is in the absence of any circumstance from whence a different interest is to be collected. Afterwards Lord Ellenborough said, "I hope it will be understood, that where nothing is said in the contract about time, but a reservation of weekly wages, it is only a weekly hiring." Grose, J. "It appears that the wages varied at the different seasons of the year: that cannot furnish the inference of an implied hiring for a year, for then the wages must have continued as they were first settled." Le Blanc, J. "There is another circumstance confirmatory of the construction that it is a hiring for a year, for the servant in the middle of the year required an advance of wages, to which the master acceded, a circumstance scarcely probable if they had contracted for a year."

Rex v. Warminster, 6 B. & C. 77; 9 D. & R. 70; 4 D. & R. M. C. 197. The pauper, being of age, was hired to Mr. Thring, a solicitor at Warminster, as gardener. At the time of the hiring, Mr. T. asked the pauper what he should give him a-week. The pauper asked 20l. a-year wages, which Mr. T. refused to give, but said he would give 6s. a-week for the winter, and 9s. a-week for the summer, which the pauper agreed to take. He was to be in Mr. T.'s house. Under this hiring the pauper served more than a year, living in the house. He and his master then came to a fresh agreement for weekly wages, without board; and about a week afterwards Mr. T., upon detecting some irregularities among his servants, discharged the pauper without notice. During the service under the first hiring, the pauper, on one occasion, gave his master a month's notice of his intention to quit; but the notice was not acted upon. The wages were accounted for weekly; but were paid occasionally, as they were wanted, and applied for by the pauper. Rex v. Dedham, Rex v. Pucklechurch, Rex v. Dodderhill, and Rex v. Lambeth, were cited. Abbott, C. J. "The cases referred to are all directly in point; but independently of any authorities, it is perfectly clear, from the facts of this case, that the master never intended to hire the pauper for a year. He first asks the pauper what he shall give him a-week—the pauper asks 20*l.* a-year: the master refuses to give that, but offered a certain weekly sum, which the pauper accepted. That clearly negatives the supposition that a yearly hiring was intended."

Rex v. Rolvenden, 1 M. & R. 689. In June, 1820, the pauper agreed with W. Masters, an innkeeper, at Rolvenden, to serve him as an ostler. The pauper and his master bargained by the week, at 2*s.* per week in the summer, and 1*s.* 6*d.* per week in the winter. The pauper entered into the service in June. He received 2*s.* per week till the following Michaelmas: and from Michaelmas to Lady-day, 1821, 1*s.* 6*d.* per week; and from Lady-day to Michaelmas, 2*s.* per week. On the evening of the 23d of February, 1823, the pauper left his master's service, in consequence of a disagreement that took place between his master and him on the morning of that day. Bayley, J. "This case cannot be distinguished from Rex v. Warminster (ante, 367). The hiring here is for an indefinite period, at weekly wages, which is a weekly hiring. The mere arrangement that the wages shall be at one rate in the summer, and at another in the winter, does not show that the parties contemplated a service to endure through the summer and the winter, and, therefore, that they intended a hiring for a year; but shows only that they intended that if the servant, being hired at weekly wages, should remain till the summer, he should then have so much per week, and if he should remain till the winter, he should then have so much per week. The true meaning of such an arrangement is merely this: that the servant's wages, as a weekly servant, are to be regulated by the seasons. Looking at the terms of this contract altogether, they seem to me clearly to constitute only a weekly hiring, no service under which could confer a settlement." The other judges concurring, the order of sessions was quashed.

A hiring by the month, at a month's wages, or a month's warning, will not be a yearly hiring.

Rex v. Clare, Burr. S. C. 819; 2 Bott, 295. The pauper, a journeyman miller, at Michaelmas, 1768, let himself to E. S. by the month, at the wages of 8*s.* a-month, and was at liberty to depart at a month's wages, or a month's warning. At the time of hiring, it was agreed that if he continued in her service till harvest-time, he should be at liberty during the harvest month to let himself to any other person for the harvest month. He continued five years in the service of E. S., and during that time constantly let himself to some other person for the harvest, and received the common wages of 8*s.* from his mistress for the harvest month, and paid her one moiety of the wages earned at such harvest; but generally at the end of every month, and sometimes weekly, received his wages of 8*s.* a month, or in that proportion. He considered himself as a monthly servant, and at liberty to leave his mistress at the end of any month, on payment of a month's wages, or giving a month's warning. This point was given up by the counsel as indefensible: the hiring being only a hiring by the month.

A hiring to work at three shillings and sixpence per week, and condition for a week's notice, does not gain a settlement.

Rex v. Hanbury, 2 East, 423; 1 Nol. P. L. 332. The pauper agreed to work for one Saunders, as a blacksmith, at 3*s.* 6*d.* per week, with meat, drink, washing, and lodging at S.'s house: to part on a week's notice by either party. The pauper continued to serve for six years, without any alteration of terms, when S. died. The pauper received his wages every Saturday night or Sunday morning: went where he pleased on Sundays, as well as on other days; but was entitled to his board if he stayed at home. On other days, if he wanted a holiday, he asked for it and had it, his master deducting his wages. The sessions thought this a general hiring. It was argued that the mere continuance of the service for six years warranted the inference of a general hiring. Lord Ellenborough said, "Here the particular terms of the agreement are stated, and therefore we cannot presume that the pauper served under a different contract." His lordship added, "that this case was decided by those of Dedham, Bradnich, and Newton Toney. That in the first Lord Mansfield said, 'that all the cases required a hiring for a year, but that that was only at so much a week.' In the second he observed that the pauper was under no obligation to serve a year, and unless that be so, there can be no settlement gained; and that Rex v. Hampreston turned upon the circumstance of a month's notice to quit being required. But here the contract was determinable at a week's notice. Though the sessions have drawn a conclusion that this was a general hiring, yet it is clear that they meant only to state it as a conclusion of law from the antecedent facts, the propriety of which they meant to refer to us. But there is no ground for presuming a general hiring, it appearing expressly what the agreement was, in fact, which negatives a hiring for a year."

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

The following are instances in which the terms of agreement were, in most respects, like those in the former cases, but something was added by which it appears that a yearly hiring was intended.

Instances of implied yearly hiring.

Rex v. Birdbroke, 4 T. R. 245. M. Meers was removed from Stoke to Birdbroke. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was hired by J. Olley, farmer, at Stoke, at 3s. per week the year round; each was to be at liberty on a fortnight's notice, but the pauper was not to go away at seed time, hay, or harvest. He stayed in that service a year, and received his wages at different times whenever he pleased. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "No doubt can be entertained on this case. It does not even rest on a general hiring, for this was an express contract to serve the year round. But it is said that this cannot be considered to be a hiring for a year, because there was a reservation of weekly wages, and because each party was to be at liberty to put an end to the agreement on giving a fortnight's notice; but whether the wages be to be paid by the week or the year, cannot make any alteration in the duration of the service, if the contract were for a year. This, therefore, was a contract for a year, at so much a week, with liberty to quit at any time, except seed, hay, or harvest time, on giving a fortnight's notice: 'but the power of giving notice makes no difference;' for it has been held that an agreement to leave the service on giving a month's warning, did not defeat the settlement." (Rex v. New Windsor, post, 380.) Buller, J. said, "A hiring for a week, requiring a fortnight's notice, was never heard of." (See next case.)

But a hiring at three shillings a week "the year round," each to be at liberty on a fortnight's notice, gains a settlement. (a)

Rex v. Hampreston, 5 T. R. 205. Order of removal from Gillingham to Hampreston confirmed. Case:—The pauper, W. Gray, went to S. Hannam, a miller, of Gillingham, and agreed to serve him for 3s. 9d. per week; he considered himself obliged to serve his master on Sundays as well as other days, and accordingly served on Sundays. "They had a liberty of parting on a month's notice on either side." He received 1s. as earnest to bind the bargain. There was no mention of time. He continued under this contract about two years and a half, residing in Gillingham, in the house of his master. He then went to Tisbury to be inoculated, where he remained two months. Hannam then sent for him, and he was hired by him at the rate of 4s. per week. He continued to live with Hannam under the last contract for two years and a half, during which time he resided in his master's house in Gillingham. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It is admitted that since Rex v. New Windsor the circumstance of the parties having it in their power to determine the service on giving notice, will not defeat the settlement where there is a contract for a year, and a year's service under it. (b) Neither could it be disputed that a general hiring is not a hiring for a year. In the cases cited (c) there was something to show that the parties did not intend that it should be a general hiring; one was as long as the master wanted a servant, another as long as the parties liked, where, without any notice, the contract might have been immediately determined. But 'wherever the relation of master and servant is to continue for an indefinite time, and cannot be put an end to at the election of either party without notice, there the hiring must be understood to be a hiring for a year.' If this were not a general hiring, those who disputed that proposition should have pointed out for what time it was to continue; and indeed it has been contended to be for a month, or a month added to a week, but there is no foundation for either: for if that were so, the Hiring at so much per week, and liberty to part on a month's notice, is a general hiring.

(a) A hiring to work at 2s. per day, there being a custom to give a fortnight's notice, is a general hiring. Rex v. Keele, Easter T. 1832.

(b) The power to determine the contract by notice, makes it a conditional contract. See the cases under that title.

(c) Rex v. Newton Toney; Rex v. Odiham; Rex v. Dedham; Rex v. Birdbroke; ante, 364, and supra.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Weekly wages and a month's notice is a general yearly hiring.

pauper might have left the service at the end of the first month, or of the five weeks, without giving any notice at all; but there is no pretence for that; for by the terms of the contract, he was to give a month's notice before he could determine it. And this is distinguishable from Rex v. Bradninch, for there was a hiring for a stipulated time less than a year. In this case, independent of the first contract, the parties met again after an absence, and the pauper was a second time hired at 4s. per week, the pauper insisting upon an increase of wages. This also was a general hiring, which in law is a hiring for a year." Ashhurst, J. "On the second hiring an observation arises from the difference of expression, for there the pauper was hired at the rate of 4s. per week, words which clearly refer to the quantum of wages, and not to the duration of the contract." Buller, J. "What Lord Kenyon said in Rex v. Birdbroke has been misapplied. His lordship had disposed of the former part of the case, namely, that there was a hiring for a year; and then he added, the power of giving notice makes no difference." (a)

Rex v. Great Yarmouth, 5 M. & Sel. 114. Case:—The pauper let himself by the week to a journeyman baker, and was to have 5s. per week wages, food, and lodging, and either party to be at liberty to part, by giving a month's notice. The pauper stated that he let himself by the week, but nothing passed as to his being hired by the week, except that he was to have 5s. a week wages. He served three years and a quarter, and quitted upon receiving a month's notice. His wages were paid at the end of a week, fortnight, or month, as he wanted them. Lord Ellenborough, "I do not think any material argument arises from its being first found that the pauper let himself for a week, because it is explained by the statement that follows. The facts are to be taken together, without reference to the order in which they are found; and the sessions have concluded that the hiring was indefinite. The first fact is, that the pauper let himself by the week. But to discover if this was intended as the measure of time for which the service was to endure, we must look to the context and see how the contract was determinable. We find then that either party was at liberty to determine it by giving a month's notice. Can any one say that it is a weekly hiring, when the parties were not at liberty to part without a month's notice? I cannot say so. What then is the effect of a month's notice? It does not follow from thence that it was a monthly hiring, or for any definite number of days. Wherefore as there is no limited duration to be assigned for the service, the law implies that it is for a year. This mode of considering the subject is strengthened by adverting to the fact, that the pauper stated that nothing passed as to his being hired by the week, except that he was to have weekly wages. It is therefore, in common sense and intendment, a hiring of which no certain portion of time can be predicted for its duration, and is consequently a general hiring." Bayley, J. "The sessions could not mean to find that there was a distinct weekly hiring, and upon that, to submit that same question to us." Abbott, J. concurred. Holroyd, J. said, "This is

(a) The case of Rex v. Bradninch, cannot be reconciled with these cases, and must be considered as overruled. It was as follows. (Rex v. Bradninch, H. 10 G. 3, Burr. S. C. 662; 2 Bott, 293; 1 Nol. P. L. 373.) Removal from Bradninch to Shobrooke confirmed. Case:—The pauper came to S. Ruddall, in Crediton, and agreed to live with him by the week, at two shillings and sixpence per week, and to part at a fortnight's or month's notice. The pauper being asked "how long he intended to live with Ruddall," replied, "he did not know, but as long as they liked." The pauper lived with Ruddall for eight years under that agreement, the pauper and master being both at liberty to part from each other on a fortnight or month's notice. The pauper received his wages of two shillings and sixpence per week, sometimes at the end of the week, sometimes at the end of a fortnight, and sometimes longer, as he wanted money. It was argued that this could not be taken as a hiring by the week only; because they were not to part but at a fortnight's or a month's notice, which is inconsistent with the idea of hiring only by the week. But Lord Mansfield, C. J. observed, "that this pauper was under no obligation to serve for a year: whereas, in order to gain a settlement, there must be an obligation upon the pauper to serve for a year." (See Lord Kenyon's remarks on this case in Rex v. Hampreston, ante, 369.)

not a hiring for a month, for then it would be determinable only at the completion of each month's service, whereas this might have been determined at the expiration of a month's notice, without regard to whether it expired at the month's end or not." (a)

Rex v. St. Andrew, Pershore, 8 B. & C. 679. The pauper was hired as a horsekeeper, at 1*l.* a week. The terms were a month's warning or a month's wages. No further mention of time. Bayley, J. "The sessions had no premises to warrant their conclusion. The stipulation for a month's wages or month's warning rebuts the presumption of a weekly hiring. It was thence manifest that it was intended that the service should continue for a longer period than a week. It then became a hiring unlimited in duration, and the law implies that that is a hiring for a year." Order of sessions quashed.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

7. Hiring by the Job.

7. Hiring by the Job.

If a pauper is hired to do a particular job, which may occupy him a year, it is not a hiring for a year; but it may be a hiring for a year, though the wages are regulated according to the quantity of work done.

Rex v. King's Norton, 2 Stra. 1139; 2 Sess. Ca. 146; 1 Nol. P. L. 378. M. Calcut was hired for a year to spin yarn at 1*s.* 6*d.* a stone, and was to provide herself with victuals and lodging. She spun the whole year, and boarded and lodged at her master's, allowing 2*s.* a week for the same. By the court: "This case hath all the requisites of the statute, and is a good settlement. For in fact here is a hiring and a service for a year. And whether she was paid by the year, or by the quantity of her work, was immaterial." (See Rex v. Byker, post, 374, 375.)

Hiring for a year to spin yarn at so much per stone, will gain a settlement.

Rex v. Birmingham, Doug. 333; Cald. 77; 2 Bott. 217. Case:—T. Baker was hired in Birmingham by J. Jennings a wood-screw-maker for a year, "good earn, good hire," to work for him and no other master, to make screws at so much per gross: and this was all that passed. Persons are often hired at Birmingham under the terms "good earn, good hire," the meaning of which is, that their pay is to depend upon their work. Baker had no wages; he was to have what he got. His master had no business but that of a screw-maker. He was to work in his master's shop, and do no other work. He served a year under the hiring, and sometimes lodged with his master, sometimes in another house; when he lodged with his master he paid him for it. He sometimes absented himself to drink or play for a week or a fortnight, and never asked his master's leave for such absence. His master on his return was angry, and checked him, but always received him again. During such absence he never worked for his master, nor did he or could he for any other person. Baker had said to his master he could not compel him to work, and the master thought he had no right to compel him. It is generally understood at Birmingham, that persons hiring to work in shops, under the above terms, may occasionally absent themselves, but cannot work for another master. The court, after discussing all the cases, considered that this was a good hiring and service.

A hiring "for a year" to make screws at so much per gross, "good earn good hire," will gain a settlement.

Rex v. Woodhurst, H. 58 Geo. III.; 1 B. & Ald. 325. Removal from St. Ives to Woodhurst. Order confirmed. Case:—In 1809 the pauper was hired by W. Margetts of St. Ives, brickmaker, to work in St. Ives under a written agreement, which Margetts states to be lost, and to be as follows: "I G. H. have this day agreed to serve W. M. as a brickmaker, from Michaelmas to Michaelmas again. G. H. engages to make 70,000 bricks at so much for digging and turning, so much for moulding and making, and so much for running to the kiln." Nothing was said as to the time he was to begin to dig; he probably began in November, and then worked on the kilns under that contract, not having finished his 70,000 bricks till after Michaelmas following. As soon as the pauper had made the 70,000 bricks, according to his Hiring to make a limited quantity of bricks gives no settlement.

(a) Beeston v. Colyer, 4 Bing. 309; 12 Moore, 552. The plaintiff became a clerk to defendant in March, 1793. In 1811, his salary was paid quarterly,—for the last six years, up to 1826, monthly. He was dismissed in December, and the court held that this was a general hiring.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

A person's agreeing to live with his step-father, to work with him and to be paid at a certain rate for his work, is not a general hiring for a year.

contract, his master had no control over him and he might go where he pleased, even if it was a month before Michaelmas, and if he stopped and made more than 70,000 bricks he was to be paid for them, and the master could set him to no other work than brick-making. This was the custom of the kilns. After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "entertained no doubt there was not a contract which, properly speaking, had relation to time. The pauper engages to serve only until a particular job be done: if the bricks were made before the year expired, his service would terminate. So that unless he finished the last brick exactly at the year's end, which would be very improbable, he would not serve for a year. It is therefore only a contract for that individual job, and the introduction of time into the agreement is wholly irrelevant." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. St. Peter's, Dorchester, 1 Bla. Rep. 443. The pauper, from six years old, was maintained and employed by his step-father, as a button maker, without wages or contract. At the age of sixteen he went away to seek more advantageous employment, but returned soon after, and agreed with his step-father to live with him in his house, and to be paid 1s. for every gross for what he should earn at button-making, deducting 5s. a-week for his board. Under this agreement he lived with him four or five years. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. "This is the case of a workman hired to work by the piece. It is not like any of the cases where there was a hiring for a year. Indeed, hiring in general and indefinitely gives a presumption of a hiring for a year, where the nature of the service and subsequent facts concur to render it probable that it was so meant. But the nature of the present service is quite otherwise. It is very clear in this case that there was no hiring for a year express or implied."

In Rex v. Alton, Cald. 424, the pauper agreed with his uncle for a year. During the year, the pauper being idle, he agreed to work by the piece, and find himself board, &c. The court held the services would connect, (see post,) and it was also added, "that the second agreement being general, would be equivalent to a hiring for a year." Sed quære.

8. Of Retrospective Hiring.

The contract for a year must not embrace any time past.

8. Retrospective Hiring. (a)

Rex v. Ilam, Burr. S. C. 304; 2 Bott, 356. R. Port, of Ham, hearing that the pauper was a likely boy to serve him as a postillion, sent to the pauper's father to have him upon liking. After the pauper had served Port eight weeks, Port hired him for a year, to commence from the beginning of the said eight weeks. He served Port a year (including the eight weeks) and ten days, and no longer. By Lee, C. J. "This case differs from all the former cases. In Rex v. Lydney the first hiring was conditional for a quarter of a year upon liking; and if they did like each other, then to continue for a year: yet it was holden a good settlement, as they did like each other; and the year's service was performed. In Rex v. New Windsor it was uncertain till the end of the year, whether the hiring would be for a year; yet happening so in the event, it was held good. In the present case, the commencing of the hiring was eight weeks after the boy had been upon liking, with a retrospect to his first coming into the service. Now a man cannot serve from a day past." Mr. J. Foster "thought the cases of Rex v. Lydney and of Rex v. New Windsor had carried the matter as far as possible; and if they were new questions, he should doubt of those resolutions: but both those were hirings for a year, previous to the service, and the conditions were performed. He observed also that the safest way is to adhere strictly to the words of the act of parliament; for refinements upon these questions have produced infinity of questions and difficulties." And the court were of opinion that the pauper gained no settlement.

Rex v. Marton, 4 T. R. 257; 1 Nol. P. L. 361. The pauper being at the time under age, went into the service of W. Fisher, in Marton, and stayed about a fortnight or three weeks without any hiring. The pauper's father then made an agreement with Fisher for the pauper to serve him for a year, at 2s. 6d. per week. The time he had then served was to make a part of, and be reckoned in, the year. He stayed in Fisher's service upwards of fifteen months from his first coming, and he received his wages according to the above agreement. It was admitted by the counsel who was to have supported the order of sessions by which the settlement was adjudged to be in Marton, that the order could not be supported, because according to Rex v. Ilam, and Rex v. Hoddesdon, Cald. 23, a retrospective hiring was not sufficient. (See also Coombe v. Westwoodhay, ante, 358.)

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

9. Hirings made purposely to avoid a Settlement. (a)

9. Of Hirings made to avoid a Settlement.

A master may hire a servant for a less period than a year, for the express purpose of preventing the servant from gaining a settlement by such hiring and service. But this must be done bonâ fide, for if the contract was really for a year, though ostensibly or colourably for a shorter time, the settlement is not to be thus defeated. (See Rex v. Little Coggeshall, 6 Maule & Sel. 204; ante, 362.)

Congleton v. Porteson, 10 East, 130; Collison v. Lettson, 2 Marsh. Rep. 1; 6 Taunt. 224. A covenant not to hire servants, so that they shall gain a settlement, is valid; but does not run with the land, so as to bind assignee.

A covenant not to hire, so as to gain settlement, is valid.

Rex v. Mursley, 1 T. R. 694. W. Coleman, the pauper, three days after Michaelmas, 1782, was hired by J. Pollard, of Mursley, to serve him in husbandry until the Michaelmas following: he served that time, and received his wages. At the time of hiring, Pollard told him he should not belong to Mursley. The sessions stated it as their opinion that all such transactions on the part of masters are fraudulent, to prevent servants gaining settlements: and adjudged that the pauper gained a settlement. But by the court: "It is very clear that this is not a hiring for a year so as to gain a settlement." And as to the question of fraud, Buller, J., said, "That only arises where in truth there is a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, and the parties endeavour to colour it, in order to prevent the settlement: in such a case the court may say it is fraudulent; but a master may, if he please, hire a servant for less than a year, for the express purpose of preventing his gaining a settlement." Both orders quashed.

Hiring three days after Michaelmas till the Michaelmas following gains no settlement, although such contract be made with a view to prevent a settlement.

Rex v. Houghton, Fol. 137; 1 Str. 83; 10 Mod. 392. J. Evans was hired with Trubshaw, of Haughton, from Ash Wednesday to Christmas, and served him that time. Then he went away from him, and stayed with his father in Ranton about a week. Then he returned to T. and was again hired with him for eleven months, and served him for eleven months. Then he departed from T., and took his clothes with him, and was absent one week. Then he returned to T., and was hired with him for eleven months, and accordingly served him; and then left that service, and went to his father in Ranton, and stayed about one week. Then Evans served one Sutton, of Haughton, for about three weeks, then returned to Ranton, and stayed for about a week: and then returned to Sutton, and hired with him for eleven months, and served with him within a fortnight or three weeks of the last eleven months, when, by agreement with Sutton, to avoid a settlement in Haughton, he left him, took his clothes, and went into Gnosall, and there continued about a week; then returned to Sutton, and continued with him so long as to make up his service for the last eleven months; and three weeks before Christmas, Evans hired himself again to Sutton for another eleven months, and served him from that time till within three weeks of Michaelmas following, and then came away, and married. The question was, whether these several hirings were sufficient to gain a settlement in Haughton. Parker, C. J., said, "This was an apparent fraud, and different from all the other cases." Pratt, J., said, "I doubt we must take the law to be that there must be a hiring for a year, and a service for a year. Here the sessions have found specially, that there is neither hiring nor service for a year. And suppose a man that lives in a parish encumbered with poor, hires a servant for eleven months only, purposely, by way of caution, to prevent a charge upon the parish, the intent is lawful, and how can such hiring and service gain a settlement? And as to the matter of fraud, if there be any, the justices of the peace are judges of that." Eyre, J., was of the same opinion as Pratt, J., (Powis, J., being absent.) Afterwards, in Easter term, after long consideration, the opinion of all the court was that these hirings and service in Haughton were not sufficient to gain a settlement: and though such hirings as in this case do defeat settlements, yet if that be a mischief, it is to be remedied by the legislature, and not by the court, which is to judge on the law as it stands.

But a hiring for eleven months, and to give one month over, gains a settlement.

Rex v. Milwich, 2 Burr. S. C. 433; 2 Bott, 306. T. Thacker was hired at Milwich for eleven months for four pounds ten shillings, and it was agreed between him and the master that he should give in a month's service beyond the eleven months. He served the eleven months, and also the given-in month, except the last three days, and he could not say whether he served them or not; but he received the whole four pounds ten shillings wages. It was moved to quash these orders, because this was not a hiring for a year, being only for eleven months; nor a service for a year, because three days were wanting at the end of it. But the court were very clear, that this agreement was a manifest contract to serve for a year, notwithstanding the form of expression (which by the way they considered as an attempt to prevent the man's gaining a settlement, by a very paltry evasion.) The real question was no more than whether eleven and one make twelve? There are no particular technical words necessary to make a hiring for a year. The substance of this agreement is to serve twelve months for four pounds ten shillings. And what signifies the variation of expression? Every contract to serve is a contract to serve for a year, unless there be something to explain it otherwise; and certainly there is nothing here to explain it otherwise. And no action could have lain for the wages till the end of the whole twelve months. And as to the servant's going away three days before the end of the year, the state of the fact doth not support the objection. He could not say whether he did or not. But he received the whole four pounds ten shillings wages, which at least seems to imply the master's consent or permission. (See Rex v. Sulgrave, 1 T. R. post, 178.)

10. *Of Conditional Hirings.*10. Of Conditional Hirings. (a)

Although the 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 4, seems in express terms to require an absolute hiring for an entire year, viz. for one entire consecutive period of 365 days, (ante, 329), yet in the construction of it, as well as in the statute relating to a settlement by a yearly tenancy, it suffices if there be a conditional hiring for a year, determinable in a certain event by either party, accompanied with an actual service for a year. See the rule stated by Bayley, J., in Rex v. Byker, (infra, 374, 375), and Rex v. Herstmonceux, 7 Bar. & Cres. 556. But although the hiring may be conditional, it must not be exceptive. The distinction between them is clearly explained by Mr. Justice Bayley thus—"A conditional hiring is where the contract is for the entire year, but a provision is introduced that, on a given event, it shall be competent to either party to suspend or put an end to the service. If neither party avails himself of the condition, the contract becomes absolute. But in an exceptive hiring, the relation of master and servant cannot subsist through the year, unless they enter into some further arrangement. It is no objection to the contract, that there is an implied exception by the custom of the country, in a particular trade, or by the general law of the land. But any limitation as to the number of working hours is an exceptive hiring, and will not gain a settlement, Rex v. Birmingham, 9 Bar. & Cres. 925, 4 Man. & R. 691, (post, 388), but see post, 375. Rex v. Byker affords the best illustration of these rules.

A pauper was by indenture hired for a year as a driver in a colliery, at the wages of one shilling and ten-part; J. Potts did hire the several other parties thereto, and they did bind themselves, as workmen or servants, to be employed in a certain colliery for a whole year, from the 21st day of January, 1810, and to serve J. P. in the colliery for certain wages mentioned; and J. P. did covenant to pay to every driver, for every good day's work, not exceeding fourteen hours in single-shaft pits, (and 2d. per day when that time was exceeded,) 1s. 10d. And the several persons hired did covenant with J. P. diligently to perform and obey his orders as to working the colliery, and to work the colliery fairly and regularly, or in default thereof should forfeit (to be retained out of their wages) 10s. 6d. for every act of disobedience, and 2s. 6d. for lying idle upon each hewer, driver, &c.: and for every working day which any of them should absent themselves from their employment, or should neglect to fulfil the whole of an usual day's work, unless prevented by sickness or some other unavoidable cause, the defaulters should forfeit 2s. 6d. for every such default or neglect, all which forfeitures should be deducted out of the wages of each offender at the first pay-day next after the offence. There was a proviso, that the indenture should not be construed to extend to exclude any justices from any cognizance which the law of this kingdom hath given to justices over masters and servants; but that the several parties should be at full liberty, upon any breach of any of the covenants, to require the aid of any justice to compel the performance, or punish any breach of such covenants, as far as by law they could if the indenture had not been made. And it was further agreed, that if J. P. should think it necessary, about Christmas, 1822, to do any thing needful to be done in the colliery, or the working of the same, that then it should be lawful for him to stop the workings for any time not exceeding seven days, without paying any wages to those prevented from doing their daily work, except such of them as should be employed in any other work about the colliery, who should be paid reasonable wages for such work. This indenture was executed by J. Potts and by the pauper, together with other workmen. Gray was a driver. When the indenture was executed, Gray was in the service of J. Potts at the colliery, and he continued in his service as a driver for a whole year, from the 21st of January, 1810, till the 21st of January, 1811, and resided during all that year in Byker. There was no evidence, either that the pauper had or had not incurred any penalty or forfeiture during his year's service under the indenture, or that any deduction had or had not been made from his wages. Bayley, J., on a subsequent day delivered the judgment of the court. "The question in this case was, whether the hiring was conditional or exceptive. Many cases of this description are to be found in the books, between which the distinction is rather subtle, and at first sight not easily discovered. Adverting to them all, the proper distinction appears to be this; if the bargain be originally made for an entire year, and terms are introduced applicable to a continuance of the relation of master and servant during the whole year, but there is also a provision that in a given event it shall be competent to the parties to put an end to or suspend the service for a part of the year, still a settlement is gained if the service is actually performed for a whole year, and neither party avails himself of the condition. A conditional hiring is, for this purpose, the same as an absolute hiring, unless the condition is acted upon. An exceptive hiring is one by which the relation of master and servant will not subsist for the whole year, unless some further arrangement is entered into; and if by the bargain days or hours are excluded from the service, that is an exceptive hiring. It has been contended that here both days and hours are excluded; but we are of a different opinion. The pauper was hired by indenture, and it was agreed that the master should pay for every good day's work not exceeding fourteen hours, (and 2d. per day when that time was exceeded,) 1s. 10d. It was said that the pauper was entitled to absent himself at the expiration of fourteen hours, and that the master could not compel him to work any longer. We are of opinion that the time was only mentioned as the measure of the wages; that the contract does not impose any limit upon what might reasonably be required by the master; and that the relation of master and servant continued during the whole twenty-four hours. Upon the forfeitures also, we think that the pauper might not, upon payment pence for a good day's work, not exceeding fourteen hours, and twopence a day more when that time was exceeded; and he was to forfeit ten shillings and sixpence for every act of disobedience, and two shillings and sixpence per day for lying idle (to be deducted out of his wages). There was a proviso, that nothing in the indenture should be construed to oust the jurisdiction of the justices, or to prevent either master or servant from applying to them in cases of disputes; and a covenant, that in case the master about Christmas should wish to repair any engine, &c., belonging to the colliery, he might stop the workings for any period not exceeding seven days, without paying any wages to the pauper, unless employed in other work: Held, that this was a conditional, and not an exceptive contract.

A hiring for five years, to be paid 10s. a week for the first two years; 11s. for the third; 12s. for the fourth; and 13s. for the fifth: hours of working to be from six in the morning till seven in the evening; to be paid for all over-time, and a deduction to be made for all short: Held to be not an exceptive hiring, but a hiring for five years absolutely.

of them, be absent if he thought fit, but that they were inserted to enforce regular attendance; and this view of it is confirmed by the clause stipulating that nothing in the contract shall be construed to abridge the power of the magistrates. Another clause has been insisted upon for the appellants; that relating to the repair of the engine. If that was an exception, this was a contract for a year, minus seven days. But we think it a contract for a year, with power to the master to stop the work if he thought fit. Had he done so, the question would have been different; but that is not found. This, therefore, was a bargain for a year, with liberty to suspend the service, which constitutes a conditional and not an exceptive hiring. This distinction between conditions and exceptions is consistent with all the decisions. In the cases where a servant having liberty to be absent has been held not entitled to a settlement, it will be found, either that the servant availed himself of the liberty, or that the time was necessarily excepted out of the original contract. This being a conditional hiring and the condition not having been acted upon, the pauper gained a settlement in Byker. And the order of sessions was therefore right. Order confirmed. (a)

Rex v. Ossett cum Gawthorpe, 4 Bar. & Ad. 216; 1 N. & M. 21. George Clarke and family were removed from Leeds to Ossett cum Gawthorpe. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was born in Ossett cum Gawthorpe, and a hiring under the following agreement and service for the time therein mentioned in the respondent township were admitted. “Memorandum of an agreement made and concluded this 25th day of the fourth month, 1826, between J. and T. Walker, of Leeds, cloth merchants, on the one part, and G. Clarke, with the consent of his father, on the other part; the said G. Clarke doth agree to become the hired servant of J. and T. Walker, for the term of five years, to do such work as belongeth to the finishing of cloth, and to take any part of work the said J. and T. Walker shall think proper, and do the same to the best of his knowledge justly and faithfully; this being done, the said J. and T. Walker promise to pay unto G. Clarke 10s. per week for the first two years, and 11s. for the third, and 12s. for the fourth year, and 13s. for the fifth and last year; the hours of working to be from six o'clock in the morning until seven o'clock in the evening, and to be paid for

(a) The following correct summary is from a note by the learned reporters of the above case of Rex v. Byker. In Rex v. Bishops Hatfield, 2 Bott, 211, the pauper was hired for a year, with liberty to let himself for the harvest month to any other person. In Rex v. Empingham, 2 Bott, 217, the hiring was for a year, with liberty to be absent eleven days during the sheep-shearing season. In Rex v. Arlington, 1 M. & S. 622, the hiring was for a year, with liberty to be absent during the sheep-shearing season. In Rex v. Turvey, 2 B. & A. 520, the hiring was for a year from Michaelmas, to go away a month at harvest, and make up the time after Michaelmas. In each of these cases the pauper did absent himself according to the liberty reserved in the original contract; and it was held that no settlement was gained by such hiring and service. There are two cases, Rex v. Westerleigh, Burr. S. C. 753, and Rex v. Winchcomb, 1 Doug. 391, which appear to be at variance with those decisions. In each of these two cases the pauper was hired for a year, with liberty to be absent on duty as a militia man for a month, and he accordingly was absent; yet it was held that the hiring and service conferred a settlement. In Rex v. Over, 1 East, 599, Lord Kenyon says, that the ground of those decisions was, that the leave of absence stipulated for, was no other than what the law would have compelled without stipulation. In several other cases, it has been held that implied exceptions will not prevent the gaining of a settlement, but that if they are expressed in the contract they will have that effect. Rex v. Macclesfield, Burr. S. C. 458. Rex v. All Saints, Worcester, 1 B. & A. 322. And there appears to be this distinction between them, that notwithstanding the implied exceptions, the relation of master and servant continues during the whole year; whereas that relation has been considered at an end during the excepted periods stipulated for in the contract. Rex v. Wrington, Burr. S. C. 280. But in the cases of the militia men, it seems that the relation of master and servant must at all events have been suspended for the time during which they were out on duty. It seems difficult, therefore, to understand on what principle those cases are sustainable; and see the observations made by the court, in Rex v. Beaulieu, 3 M. & S. 229.

all over-time, and a deduction to be made for all short either in sickness or in health." The question for the opinion of this court was whether G. Clarke gained a settlement in Leeds by such hiring and service. Denman, C. J. "It is impossible to decide this case without interfering with some former decisions; but upon the whole I think that this was not an exceptive hiring. The pauper agreed to become the hired servant of J. and T. Walker for five years, to do such work as belonged to the finishing of cloth. If the agreement had stopped here, there would clearly have been a contract to serve for five years, and the masters would have the right to command all the services of the pauper during that period. The question is, if there be any clause in the subsequent part of the agreement which clearly takes away that right. The masters promise to pay the pauper weekly wages, varying in amount yearly during the whole five years. Then comes a clause in these words, 'the hours of working to be from six o'clock in the morning until seven o'clock in the evening, and to be paid for all over-time, and a deduction to be made for all short, either in sickness or in health.' There is nothing here to show that it was in the option of the pauper to work or not for the master in over-hours, and if not, then the right given to the master in the early part of the agreement to all the services of the pauper is not taken away. I think this was a complete bargain for all his time, and that there was not any part of that time during which the pauper could lawfully refuse to work for his master." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. I think there was no period of the day when the master could not lawfully command the services of the pauper. The true way to ascertain whether this be an exceptive contract, or not, is to consider what would have been the situation of the parties if there had been an extraordinary demand for work, and the master had called on the pauper to work during over-hours. Could he have refused? The words of the contract are, 'that G. Clarke agrees to be a hired servant for the term of five years to do work,' &c. That is the stipulation as to working, or to the service to be performed. Then the contract goes on to fix the weekly wages to be paid from year to year by the masters. Then come the words on which the difficulty arises: 'the hours of working to be from six o'clock in the morning until seven o'clock in the evening, and to be paid for all over-time.' Those words seem to me to be a qualification of the sentence which immediately precedes them, and which fixes the amount of weekly wages, if that be so, then the case is like Rex v. Byker, (ante, 374). It is distinguishable from Rex v. Birmingham, because there the pauper might at his election have worked or not for his master at over-hours. In Rex v. Frome Selwood the limitation as to the working hours immediately followed the stipulation for service. Here, between that clause and the one specifying the number of hours the pauper was to work, the clause intervenes fixing the amount of weekly wages. It appears to me that the pauper could not lawfully refuse to work for his master during the over-hours (if required so to do); but that the latter was entitled to the whole services of the pauper during the five years, and consequently this was not an exceptive contract." Taunton, J. "The cases undoubtedly run very near to each other. Certainty in sessions law is very important, and I am sorry, therefore, I cannot come to the same conclusion as my lord chief justice and my brother Parke. This case appears to me not distinguishable from Rex v. Birmingham and Rex v. Frome Selwood, and they being the latest cases on this subject ought to govern this. It is said that in Rex v. Birmingham the pauper was to do over-work only if he chose. Looking at the terms of the present contract, I think it was optional in the pauper here also to work over-hours or not. The hours of working are defined to be from six o'clock in the morning till seven in the evening. I cannot see why this limitation of the hours of working was introduced, unless it were as an exception in the contract. It is said that it refers only to the amount of wages, I think it refers to the time of working as well, and that the pauper might have refused to extend his time of service beyond those hours, and then it is not distinguishable from Rex v. Birmingham; nor can I distinguish it from Rex v. Frome Selwood. It does not signify much in what part of an instrument a particular stipulation occurs, unless it be so placed as necessarily to qualify only the words immediately preceding. Now I cannot consider this clause a mere regulation of wages, but I think it also limits the time of work. Without wishing to multiply distinctions in a branch of the law in which they are already too abundant, I must add, that the present is the case of a servant hired to perform manufacturing work, and it is well known that exceptive contracts are extremely frequent on such occasions. This may in some degree furnish a key to the meaning of the parties, and assist in explaining their intention, and in affirming the order of sessions I think we should not only fall in with the last two cases, but also with the general current of authorities." Patteson, J. "I am of opinion that a settlement was gained. Rex v. Byker and Rex v. Frome Selwood turn on very nice distinctions. The question in this case is, whether the pauper was bound to serve more than the number of hours mentioned in the agreement. I thought for a considerable time that the case fell within Rex v. Frome Selwood, but looking at the terms of the contract, and the place in which the stipulation as to the number of hours occurs, I think that it was introduced merely to regulate the wages, and that the pauper could not refuse to work for his master beyond those hours. I feel great difficulty in distinguishing one case from the other, but upon the whole it seems to me that the present falls within Rex v. Byker." Order of sessions quashed.

A pauper agreed with the owners of a colliery to work constantly in the said colliery from 4th February, 1815, to 4th February, 1816, or to forfeit and pay to his master 1s. for each and every day he should absent himself from his work or not work a reasonable day's work to the satisfaction of his master: Held not an exceptive hiring.

Rex v. St. Helen's, Auckland, 4 B. & Ad. 718; 1 N. & M. 462. An order for removing George Riley from Coundon to St. Helen's, Auckland, was confirmed. Case:—The pauper was bound as a pitman to Dixon and Co. the owners of the Eden Main Colliery, situate in West Auckland, by bond or memorandum of the 4th of February, 1815, between G. D., J. D., and E. D., as copartners in the said colliery, of the one part, and the several pitmen whose names were thereunder written, on the other part; whereby it was witnessed that the pitmen, in consideration of the wages to be paid as after mentioned, did thereby severally agree with the said copartners or masters to hew, pit, and work coals within the said colliery, from the day of the date thereof for and unto the 4th day of February, 1816, in the manner and at the prices following; that is to say, to hew coals at 2s. 6d. a score, of twenty-five corves to each score; the said pitmen also agreed to give to the said masters the usual fire coal corf for each day they were at work, over and above the said number of twenty-five corves to each score; and further, to drive their boards of such a breadth, and to prop and maintain their own work, and to work in a workmanlike manner, properly, fairly, and orderly, as directed by their said masters, or their agent for the time being, and to drive headways at 8d. a yard, and headways walls at 6d. a yard, when, where, and in such a manner as directed by the said masters or their said agent; and further, the pitmen agreed to send as many setters to bank as the seam would admit and afford, and also to put coals in their course at the prices then given, and to have the liberty to hew half-a-score of coals in the putting morning, which were to come to bank the same day. "And the said pitmen do hereby further severally undertake, promise, and agree to work constantly at the said colliery until the said 4th day of February, 1816, or to forfeit and pay each man to the said masters, or their said agent, one shilling for each and every day that he shall absent himself from the said work, or not work a reasonable day's work, to the satisfaction of the said masters, or their said agent. And, on the other hand, the said masters for themselves agree to pay to each said pitman one shilling a day for each and every day they shall wilfully or without just cause lay any of them off work." The pauper served under this bond for a whole year, and received his wages, and during that period there was no forfeit incurred either by him or his employers by reason of any interruption of the work in the colliery or otherwise. He remained in the service of the same employers as a pitman for eleven months after the expiration of the bond, and from the date of the bond to the time of his finally quitting the colliery, a period of nearly two years, he slept in the appellant parish. The question for the opinion of this court was whether this was a service under such a yearly hiring as would confer a settlement. Denman, C. J. "The decisions in Rex v. Byker (3 D. & R. 330; 2 B. & C. 114, ante, 374), and

Rex v. Gateshead (3 D. & R. 333, 2 B. & C. 117, post, 384), run very near each other; but there is a distinction between them, and I think the former case an authority in favour of a settlement here. It is said, that in this contract there is an exception, because an option is given to the pauper either to work or to forfeit and pay 1s. upon each day that he absents himself, or does not work a reasonable day's work to the satisfaction of the master. In Rex v. Byker the pauper by indenture was hired for a year as a driver in a colliery, and the master covenanted to pay wages at the rate of 1s. 10d. for a good day's work, not exceeding fourteen hours, and 2d. a day more when that time was exceeded; and the pauper was to forfeit 2s. 6d. per day for lying idle, to be deducted out of his wages. It was contended that that was an exceptive contract, because the master could not compel the pauper to work more than fourteen hours a day, and also because the pauper on the payment of 2s. 6d. per day was at liberty to absent himself. But the court held that the fourteen hours was only mentioned in the master's covenant to regulate the amount of the wages, and that the relation of master and servant continued during the whole twenty-four hours of every day, and consequently during the whole year, and that the clause as to forfeitures was intended not to give the servants a liberty to absent themselves, but merely to enforce regular attendance. The same observation applies to the clause of forfeiture in this case. In Rex v. Gateshead it was stipulated that each man should on each working day do such a quantity of work as should be equal to a full day's work, and should not leave the pit until that quantity was completed, or in default thereof should forfeit 2s. 6d. There, as soon as each man completed his full day's work, he was at liberty to quit, and was no longer under the control of his master. According to the report of that case in 3 Dowland and Ryland, it was part of the contract of hiring that the labourers were to work for the whole year, except ten days during the Christmas holidays, when they were not to work, nor to be liable to any penalties for not working. If that were a correct statement of the contract, there would be a clear exception of ten days. It appears, however, from the reasoning of the judges there given, that the hiring was held to be exceptive, not because the pauper was not bound to work for his master during the ten days, but because he was not bound to work during the whole of every day, but during such part of the day only as might be required to complete a full day's work. The contract, as stated in 2 B. & C. 117, and 3 D. & R. 333, was that the master should find work for the men during the whole year, and forfeit 2s. 6d. for every day that he should oblige them to be idle, except at the Christmas holidays, which were not to exceed ten days. According to that statement the stipulation as to ten days would appear not to be an exception in the contract of hiring intended to give a privilege to the servant, but to be a provision introduced for the benefit of the master, and considering the reasons on which the judgment of the court was founded, that must be taken as the correct report of the case. I think, therefore, this case falls within Rex v. Byker, and that a settlement was gained in the parish of St. Helen's, Auckland. The order of sessions must be confirmed." Littledale, J. "If the cases referred to had never been decided, I should not have had the slightest doubt on this case. By the agreement of the 4th of February, 1815, the pauper agreed to hew, pit, and work coal till the 4th of February, 1816, and to work constantly at the colliery, or to forfeit 1s. for each and every day he should absent himself or not work a reasonable day's work. Now the latter stipulation bound the pauper to pay 1s. per day if he did not perform his part of the contract. There was a contract to work for a whole year, and every day in the year, and the master had a right to call on the pitmen so to work. The mere agreement to pay 1s. per day as a forfeiture does not make the contract exceptive, because neither party can be supposed to have contemplated at the time when the contract was entered into that there should be an absence or neglect to work." Parke, J. "I felt some little difficulty at first in distinguishing this case from Rex v. Gateshead (2 B. & C. 117, 3 D. & R. 333, post, 384); but I think it falls within Rex v. Byker (2 B. & C. 114, 3 D. & R. 330). In the first of those cases there was a stipulation that each man

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

A hiring at wages, payable quarterly, with liberty to part on a month's notice at the end of any quarter, is a yearly hiring.

A hiring at five pounds per year wages, with liberty to part at a month's wages or warning, is a yearly hiring.

Hiring conditional as to liking, a good hiring for a year, where the service continues so long.

The pauper having served one year, the master expressed his fear that the pauper would not be strong enough for the work in a town to which they were going, should on each working day do a full day's work, and that he should not leave the pit until that quantity of work was completed; and that on default thereof he should forfeit 2s. 6d. It was therefore stipulated by implication that the men were not to be under the control of the master on days which were not working days, nor on any day as soon as a full day's work was completed." Order of sessions confirmed. (a)

Rex v. Atherton, Burr. S. C. 203; Bott, 360. R. Harrison was hired for a year by T. Barlow of Barton, at 4*l.* wages, payable quarterly. And it was agreed that either should be at liberty to determine the contract at the end of any quarter, on a month's notice. No notice was ever given, and the servant continued in the service the whole year. The servant declared at the time of the hiring that the reason of the hiring being made determinable at the end of every quarter upon notice, was, that he would not be hired so as to lose his former settlement. But by the court unanimously and clearly: "This is a good settlement."

Rex v. New Windsor, Burr. S. C. 19; 2 Bott, 248. D. Brookes was hired to Colonel Merrick at Thorpe, and was to go into her service a month upon liking, and was to have 5*l.* a-year wages; but was to go away from her service on a month's wages or a month's warning on either side. She continued near two years in this service without any other hiring, and received her wages quarterly. This, by the unanimous opinion of the court, is a hiring for a year. (b)

Wandsworth v. Putney, 2 Bott, 288. The master told a boy coming into his service, that if he stayed a year and behaved well, he would give him a livery and wages the next year; this was held to be a clear yearly hiring.

Rex v. Lidney, Burr. S. C. 1; 2 Bott, 358. M. Brewer was hired to W. Wake for a quarter of a year; and if her master and she liked one another, she was to continue for a year, and to have 3*l.* for her year's wages. She entered into the service, and continued one whole year, and received the 3*l.* It was argued, that as it was in the election of either party, during the first quarter, whether she should continue or not, she could not be originally hired for a year. But the court held this conditional hiring to be a good hiring for a year, since the master and she did like one another, and a year's service was actually performed under it.

Rex v. St. Ebbs, Burr. S. C. 289; 2 Bott, 361. C. Guy was removed from Holywell to St. Ebbs. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was hired to T. White of Holywell, to come for a quarter of a year, and to have after the rate of 20s. a-year; and if he and his master liked each other, he was to continue. He did continue a year and a half above the said quarter, without any other hiring, and received his wages as he had occasion for them. It was moved to quash these orders, for that the settlement was in Holywell by this hiring and service; for a conditional hiring is a hiring for a year, provided the condition be performed. And a rule was made to show cause, but no cause was shown. And the rule was made absolute. See supra the cases where the pauper might quit, or be turned away at pleasure.

Rex v. Sandhurst, 1 Man. & R. 95, 7 B. & C. 557. A hiring for a year, by an officer of a military college, reserving the right of dismissing the pauper without notice, is a good hiring for a year. (See this case, post.)

Rex v. Northwold, 2 D. & R. 790; 1 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 413. The pauper was hired and served for a year with his master at Northwold. The other facts are stated in the judgment of Abbott, C. J. "I am of opinion that there was a second hiring for a year to serve in Brandon, and therefore the orders must be quashed. Just before the end of the first year, the master says to the pauper, 'Will you go with me into Brandon?' The pauper says he has no objection. If nothing more passed, it is clear that that would be a hiring for another year. The master then says, 'I am afraid you will not be strong enough for the work there, but try.' The meaning of that is, 'We shall contract for a year, but if upon a little trial I find you are not strong enough, then our contract is at an end.' That is a conditional hiring. The pauper tries, is found strong enough, and resides for forty days. This is a settlement." Bayley, J. "It is a defeasible contract for a year, and a settlement is gained." Holroyd, J. "This is a conditional hiring for a year, the condition being the pauper having strength enough to do the work. The contract is not in express terms for a year, but still that does not prevent a conditional hiring for a year operating." Order of sessions quashed.

but the pauper was to try: he tried and was strong enough. He gained a settlement.

11. What are Exceptive Hirings. (a)

11. Exceptive Hirings.

The difference between conditional and exceptive hirings has been explained. See ante, 374 to 381, and 1 Bar. & Adol. 336.

Rex v. Empingham, Burr. S. C. 791; 2 Bott, 313. J. Langton, before Harborough fair, hired himself to H. Hubbard from that fair to the next, being one year, at the wages of 3*l.* "subject to a liberty of being absent eleven or twelve days in the sheep shearing season," and to have the benefit of what he got during that time. He entered upon the service, and served Hubbard for above three-quarters of the year. He went to shear sheep in the season, for about eleven days, and served Hubbard the remainder of the year. He received to his own use what was paid him for the sheep-shearing, besides his wages of 3*l.* One day in the season he asked his master's leave to go a sheep-shearing: his master said he was going out, and could not spare him that day; and in consequence thereof he did not go. The pauper, during the shearing season, returned frequently to his master's house, and did what work was to be done; and his master found him his board as often as he returned home. The court were of opinion that this was an exception out of the contract at the time of making it. They held it to be a part of the contract, and not to be considered upon the footing of leave of absence given by the master, who, being bound by the contract, could not refuse agreeing to it. Consequently no settlement was obtained under this hiring.

Hiring for a year, with liberty to be absent eleven or twelve days sheep-shearing, gains no settlement.

Rex v. Bishop's Hatfield, Burr. S. C. 439; 2 Bott, 307. A man was hired from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, for 5*l.* wages, "with liberty to let himself for the harvest month to any other person." He served till the harvest month, and then hired for that month, and received wages for it. During that month he brewed for his master, and lodged in his master's house during the whole year; and served out the remainder of his time, and received his 5*l.* wages. By the court: "This is in effect only hiring for eleven months: and the harvest month is the principal month of the year. It is safest to keep to the statute. If we allow this, we shall not know where to stop."

Hiring for a year, with liberty to let himself during the harvest month, gains no settlement.

Rex v. Rushulme, 10 East, 325. The pauper was hired for four years, "with liberty to leave a week every year, to see his friends." Per Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "Here is a hiring for a period of four years, with an exception of a week in every year, that is to be taken distributively, a week out of each year. Therefore the master had no dominion over the servant for any one entire year, but only for one year minus one week in that year, and so on." (b)

So hiring for four years with liberty to leave a week every year to see his friends.

Rex v. Leamington Priors, 8 D. & R. 329; 4 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 79. Order of removal of Sarah Penn from Middleton Cheney to Leamington Priors confirmed. The pauper was hired to Mr. Cooper in Leamington Priors, at Whitsuntide, 1823, until Michaelmas in the same year. She entered into service immediately after being so hired, and continued therein until said Michaelmas, when she was again hired by said Edward Cooper until the Christmas day following. On the day after Christmas day, the Stipulation by pensioner to have two days in each half year to go and receive his pay, defeats his settlement.

Hiring for a year at weekly wages, with liberty to be absent in the sheep-shearing season, but to find a fit man at his own expense to do his work during his absence, but his own wages to go on during the whole time, will not gain a settlement.

Hiring for a year, to go away a month at harvest, and to make up the time after mistress offered the pauper to hire her for a year, to which the pauper agreed, the pauper at the same time requiring, and the mistress agreeing, that she should have during the year two or three days to see her friends; and she accordingly had three days in February, 1824, having first asked her mistress if she might have them, to which the mistress replied, "Yes, you had better have them now, as the season will soon begin when you cannot have them." Under this latter hiring she stayed till Michaelmas, 1824, when she was discharged, in consequence of being pregnant. Bayley, J. "Looking at the facts of this case, there is no doubt that this was not a hiring for a year. There had been two hirings for broken periods, and at the expiration of those broken periods, the mistress proposes a hiring for a year. The pauper agrees, but with a proviso; and the proviso is, that she shall be at liberty for two or three days to see her friends. Now there are many cases which say, that if at the time of hiring there is a stipulation giving the pauper the option of being absent during any part of the year, that time is to be considered as excepted out of the contract, and treated as a hiring for a year, minus the time the servant is entitled to be absent." Holroyd, J. and Littledale, J. concurred. Orders quashed.

Rex v. Over, 1 East, 599. The pauper let himself for a year, but being an East India pensioner, he was to have two days in each half-year to himself, to go and receive his pension. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said "There was no colour for contending that the pauper gained a settlement by this hiring and service. The case of the militia-man went altogether upon the ground that the leave of absence stipulated for was no other than what the law would have compelled without any such stipulation. It was part of the public service; no conclusion, therefore, can be drawn from thence in support of this settlement. Here was an express exception of four days in the year, during which the pauper was not to be under the controul of the master. See Rex v. Macclesfield (post, 387.)

Rex v. Arlington, 1 M. & Sel. 622. Removal from Arlington to Wilmington. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was hired for a year from Michaelmas, 1809, to Michaelmas, 1810, as shepherd to J. King, of Wilmington, to receive thirteen shillings and sixpence per week wages, and an allowance for a hog, and to be at liberty to be absent during the sheep-shearing season, but to find a fit man, at his own expense, to do his work during the time of his absence, but his own wages of thirteen shillings and sixpence a-week were to go on during the whole time. The pauper served the year, was absent during the sheep-shearing season, and employed and paid a person to tend the flock, but occasionally returned during that period, and assisted in the management of it, especially on Sundays, and from time to time gave directions to the person employed by him. It was argued that, though working for another person, he continued the servant of King. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "It has never been determined that a contract for service by deputy is service by himself. The distinction taken in all the cases is, whether the liberty of absence forms a part of the original contract, so as to be an exception out of it, or whether it be by permission of the master during the continuance of the contract. If this hiring could be deemed to confer a settlement, the consequence would be, that a person might gain as many settlements as there are forty days in one year. He might hire himself to A. with liberty to be absent with B. and C. and so on, and if he could get forty day's service with each, he might accumulate eight or nine settlements in the course of a year. Such a consequence would be preposterous. What does this hiring really mean? A hiring for a year is where the servant is to be under the control and command of his master for the whole year; but here the pauper was not to be so, but was to be at liberty to find a substitute for the sheep-shearing season. The case will scarcely bear a serious argument." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Turvey, 2 B. & Ald. 520, T. Smith was hired for a year from Old Michaelmas, to go away a month at harvest, and make the time after Michaelmas. He went away for a month at harvest, and continued in his master's service a month after Michaelmas. Holbeck and Adams cited Rex v. Rushulme and Rex v. Buckland in support of the order; and Marriott and Dwarris were heard contra. Abbott, C. J. said, "It has been decided in this court that where there has been a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, although that service has not been under one hiring, the servant gains a settlement. But I hope no rash genius will ever carry the matter any further. The only question here is, what is the meaning of the word 'year' in this statute. I apprehend the legislature clearly to have meant one entire consecutive period of three hundred and sixty-five days. Unless that were so, we might have to deduce a settlement of a pauper by taking different unconnected days and weeks from a long series of years, so as to make up in the whole a year's service. And so it would happen that a hiring for the month of August, for this and eleven successive years, would amount to a hiring for one year. I have often lamented, that in so many instances the court has departed from the plain and literal construction of the statutes relating to the settlement of the poor. As far as the authorities go, I have always held and shall always continue to hold myself bound; but where they are silent, I shall feel myself bound to construe these acts of parliament according to the plain and popular meaning of the words." Bayley, J. and Holroyd, J. concurred.

Meaning of the word "year." (a)

Rex v. Edmond, 3 B. & Ald. 107. The pauper agreed to serve T. S. a bricklayer, for three years, if he so long lived, at weekly wages, and in case he should neglect his master's business, or lose any time on his own account in any one week, during the first year, then that T. S. should deduct from his weekly wages in proportion; and T. S. agreed that he would pay wages in proportion to any over-work which the pauper might do in any one week. There were similar stipulations for the second and third years of the term; and it was also agreed that in case they could not work through severity of weather in any one year in the winter time, then that T. S. should pay no wages during that time, but should permit the pauper to employ himself in any other business whatever. It appeared that the pauper served one year and a half without availing himself of the stipulation. Abbott, C. J. "The agreement contains in substance an engagement to work only during certain hours of the day, and I do not see what remedy the master could have had, supposing the pauper had refused to work after the usual hours. The agreement, taken altogether, seems to me to contain a promise only to serve for a part of the year." Bayley, J. (inter alia) observed, "That if by the usage of trade certain exceptions are implied or introduced, they will not prevent a settlement. There is clearly an exception here, the period of frost. The contract is not confined to the particular trade. The pauper might engage to serve other persons, and so might contract inconsistent relations at one and the same time. Rex v. Martham (1 East, 239), is distinguishable from the present, because there was no such express authority as this to contract a relation of service with another master; besides, that was not a general contract of service, but to serve in the particular trade of a bricklayer." Holroyd, J. thought the contract was for service only during the usual hours.

So an exception of certain hours or days is an exceptive hiring. (b)

Rex v. Althorne, 2 B. & C. 112; 3 D. & R. 375; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 59. John Wiggins was removed from Mayland to Althorne. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, at Michaelmas, 1821, agreed with Mr. Croil, a farmer of Mayland, to live with him as his servant in husbandry, from that Michaelmas till the following, at 10s. per week for the winter half year, and 11s. per week for the summer half year; the pauper to have a month in harvest to himself, and if he and his master could not agree for the harvest month, the pauper was to harvest where he pleased. If any one offered the pauper more money than his master for the harvest month, the pauper had a right to go. At the commencement of the harvest, the master offered the pauper 5*l.* for the harvest, which the pauper at first refused, and required 5*l.* 5*s.*, but afterwards agreed to take the 5*l.*, and accordingly continued in his master's service during the whole year, and received his wages weekly. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that the sessions have rightly decided that this was not a con-and continued in the service during the whole year: Held, that this was an exceptive hiring.

The owner of a colliery hired his workmen for a year, but they were not to be required to work during ten days in the Christmas holidays; during the working days they were to receive two shillings and sixpence per day wages, and to forfeit a penalty for neglect; they were to do such quantity of work as was equal to a full day's work; and as soon as that was accomplished they were to be at liberty to go where they pleased; there was a reservation of the jurisdiction of the justices in case of any disputes: Held, that this was an exceptive contract, and that a settlement could not be gained under it.

ditional but an exceptive hiring. There may be nice distinctions between decided cases, but I think the distinction between a conditional and an exceptive hiring is broad and intelligible. I take a conditional hiring to be that where the parties stipulate for the continuance of the service for a whole year, but by fixing the terms upon which the service is to be continued, it is left to the option of either to put an end to the contract. If the bargain is made so that it shall be co-extensive with the whole year, but with liberty to either to dissolve it, then it is a conditional hiring; but if the servant stipulates that during a period of the year he shall be absent from labour, or that with respect to a particular period of the year there shall be a new bargain when the period arrives, then it is an exceptive hiring, and no settlement can be gained. In this case there is an express stipulation that the pauper shall have a month to himself in the harvest time, and if he and the master could not then agree for the harvest month, he was to harvest where he pleased. The parties therefore do not bargain beforehand as to the wages to be paid during the harvest month, but that is to be subsequent matter of contract. This is no more therefore than a hiring for eleven months, the twelfth month being scooped out of the original contract, and subject to a new bargain." Best, J. "I think Rex v. Bishop's Hatfield is an authority in point, and though the pauper in that case hired himself to another master during the harvest, that makes no difference."

Rex v. Gateshead, 2 B. & C. 117, n.; 3 D. & R. 333, n.; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 17, n. Case:—By a memorandum of agreement of 5th April, 1813, made between J. D. of the one part, and several persons therein named (of whom the pauper was one), of the other part, it was stipulated and agreed that the said persons should work at a certain colliery therein mentioned for one year, ending 5th April, 1814, on the terms and conditions, and subject to the penalties and forfeitures after mentioned. First, that the labourers should work for the whole year [except during ten days in the Christmas holidays, when they were not to work, nor to be liable to any penalties for not working.] (a) Second, that during the working days in the year, they were to receive each 2s. 6d. per diem, and in default of doing any work in any one of those days, they were to forfeit and pay one shilling each, as a penalty for their negligence; and third, they were not required to work the whole day, but to do such quantity of work as was equal to a full day's work, and as soon as that was accomplished, they were to be at full liberty to go where they pleased. Under this agreement the pauper served a year, and the question was, whether by such service he gained a settlement in the parish in which the colliery was situated. Abbott, C. J. "It is an exceptive contract, which completely negatives the idea of a yearly hiring and service. The last clause of the agreement cannot control its previous stipulations, and indeed there is no connection between the last and the preceding clauses. The mode of punishment for any breach of contract is stipulated for between the parties themselves, and supersedes the control which the magistrates in other cases would have over hired servants. Under this agreement the magistrates could not punish the pauper for leaving the service, which event is contemplated by the parties, who agree that for any default the servant shall pay certain fines or penalties for neglecting his work. In Rex v. Edgmond the court held that similar stipulations were express exceptions in the contract, and that the pauper did not gain a settlement by serving for a year under it. That case is directly in point with the present. It is manifest that here the pauper is not to be under the control of the master for the whole of every day." Bayley, J. "The pauper in this case, for any thing that appears, might have worked for any other master during the year; for if by extraordinary strength and skill he did a quantity of work which should be equal to a day's work, he was at liberty afterwards to do what he pleased." Best, J. "The stipulation in this case is to do a certain quantity of work

St. Helen's Auckland*, post, the court observed "that the reasoning proceeded on the facts stated in Barnwall and Cresswell; that therefore must be taken as the more correct report. during each day, and as soon as the work is performed, the control of the master ceases.

Rex v. Polesworth, 2 B. & C. 715; 4 D. & R. 258; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 202. Removal of Hannah Brindley from Polesworth to Saint Peter, Derby, quashed. Case:—The pauper's father, William Brindley, in December, 1784, agreed with William Boolows, his uncle, then resident in Polesworth, to serve him for three years, at 1s. per day, when he had work for him to do; and when he had not work for him he was not to be paid: Boolows told him at the same time he should not have work for him all the year round, particularly in the winter, and that when he had not work for him he might get work from other people. After making the agreement, William went to work in the collieries until the spring of 1785, and then went to work with his uncle, according to agreement, and remained with him about nine months, when his uncle told him he had no employment for him, and he worked several weeks with a Mr. Barrett, as a labouring man, and after that, his uncle having again work, he returned to him and continued to work for him about nine months longer, when he quitted him without his leave, and went to Birmingham, from whence he never returned to his service. He never received any wages from his uncle when he did no work for him, and never accounted with him for any wages he received from other people when absent from his service. After hearing Reader in support of the order, Goulburn, contra, was stopped by the court. Abbott, C. J. "In this case the master tells the pauper at the time when he is hired that he shall not have work for him all the year round, particularly in the winter, and when he had not work for him he might get work from other people. There is merely a hiring for so much of the year as the master has work for him. He has the control over the servant so long as there is work for him. As soon as there is no work the servant ceases to be under the control of the master, and is at liberty to get work elsewhere. We are all of opinion that there was not any hiring for a year." Order of sessions quashed. (See also Rex v. South Killingholme, ante, 361.)

Rex v. Chertsey, 2 T. R. 37. The pauper was hired for a year to Mr. Shirley for 4l., and served out that year in Chertsey. About three weeks before that service expired, her father, a day-labourer, in consequence of his wife's death, came to the pauper and applied to her to come and live with him to do the offices of a servant for a year in Thorpe, and offered her board and lodging, and such profits as she could make by keeping fowls, and what she could earn by her own labour; and if that did not produce as much as she got at Mr. Shirley's, her father was to make up the difference. She agreed to those terms, and came accordingly and lived with her father at Thorpe for a year and upwards, during which time she got about one guinea and a half by keeping fowls, and two guineas and a half by going out chairing, and taking in plain work; and at the end of the year her father gave her 10s. as an additional recompence for her having gone to reap with him in the harvest month. Ashhurst, J. "As to the hiring for a year, it is only necessary to read the words of the case to determine it; it states that the pauper's father applied to her to come and live with him to do the offices of a servant for a year on certain terms, which she agreed to, and that she came accordingly, and lived with him in pursuance of that agreement for a year. Then it was objected that the contract was not binding; but that is not so; she was hired to do all the offices of a servant for a year: the terms of the contract are not such as would enable the pauper absolutely to leave her father's service, but only to do particular work for her own benefit; she was first bound to perform all his work, and consistently with that she was at liberty to gain as much as she could earn by her own labour; this therefore was a good hiring for a year." Grose, J. "According to the terms of this contract she was not at liberty to desert her father's service; she was only permitted to do what other work she could consistently with her father's service, and her earning beside that will not prevent its being considered as a hiring for a year. And as to the service, it is expressly stated that the pauper lived with her father for a year in pursuance of that agreement." Both orders quashed.

Rex v. Westerleigh, Burr. S. C. 753; 2 Bott, 312. W. Ayliff was hired for a year to A. Tyler, of Old Sodbury, to serve her for a year, but he told her that he was in the militia, and he might be absent about a month in the year to attend on that duty, but that he would pay a man to serve in his place, or else he would make her an allowance out of his wages for the time he should be absent. He served her till May following, and then attended the militia for thirty days, and afterwards returned to his service with A. Tyler, and continued there until the end of his year, and then made her an abatement of 8s. out of his wages for the time he was absent. Lord Mansfield was not in court. Mr. Justice Aston thought this case reconcileable to Rex v. Beccles and Rex v. Goodnestone, Burr. S. C. 251 (post), and distinguishable from that of Bishop's Hatfield, that absence for a particular time, with the master's leave, not agreed for at the time of hiring, doth not dissolve the contract. But in the case of Bishop's Hatfield, the original hiring was with liberty to let himself for the harvest month to any other person. This made a clear chasm in the original contract. It was plainly a hiring for less than a year. In the present case a man is hired for a year, to serve for a year, but mentions an event that might happen of his being called out to attend his militia duty, and told his mistress that if it should so happen, he would either pay a man to serve in his place, or make her an allowance out of his wages. This is not a chasm in the contract, but a dispensation with the present service." Mr. Justice Willes premised that settlements ought to be favoured, and that militia men ought not to have any additional hardship put upon them if it can be avoided. However, he could not help thinking that the case of Bishop's Hatfield was very like the present case, and that the absence was as much part of the contract in the one case as in the other. If the mistress did not expressly agree to it, she at least acquiesced. Indeed, in the present case the servant agreed either to find a substitute or to abate out of his wages. Now this was at the election of the mistress; and she dispensed with his absence upon an abatement out of his wages. Upon this distinction, and this only, he would, for the advancement of settlements, distinguish this case from that of Bishop's Hatfield. Mr. Justice Ashhurst said that in a case which might affect a vast number of militia men, he was for leaning in favor of their gaining settlements; and he thought this case to be distinguished from that of Bishop's Hatfield. That case was certainly no more than a hiring for eleven months. But here was an alternative; it might happen that the servant should not be called out. Therefore he concurred in supporting the settlement.

So a hiring for a year, at so much per week, and to serve a month at the end of the year, as he should be absent in the militia for a month of the year, gives a settlement. (a)

Rex v. Winchcomb, Dougl. 391; 1 Nol. P. L. 383. The pauper hired himself in Chipping Norton five weeks before Michaelmas for a year; and at the time of the hiring it was agreed between him and his master, that his wages should be paid weekly, at 8s. a week, and that being a balloted man in the militia, he should be absent for a month, and in lieu of that month should serve another month at the end of the year. He was accordingly absent thirty days in the militia, and then returned to his service, but he only continued three weeks of the month, which was agreed to be served in lieu of his absence in the militia, leaving his master a fortnight before Michaelmas. He expressly swore that he did not serve his master a year by one week. It was objected that this was no hiring for a year, nor any service for a year at Chipping Norton. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the rest of the court: "There is in this case a hiring for a year; and there is also a service for a year, if it were not for the month's absence in the militia. A service must be for a continuation without interruption or adding together broken pieces to make up the year. But here the agreement as to the absence for a month in the militia was only what would have been implied,

(a) In Rex v. Elmley Castle, ante, 338, Taunton, J. observed "that these two cases were decided by men eminent for their knowledge of the law of settle-and what the master must have consented to. The year was completed five weeks before Michaelmas, and the additional month agreed for was only in the nature of a compensation for the want of the pauper's service while absent in the militia, and equivalent to a deduction of so much wages. This case, if not the same, is very like Rex v. Westerleigh (ante, 386). The court ought to lean in favour of settlements; and the bad consequences would be very extensive if we were to determine that a man shall lose his settlement by serving his country in the militia. We are all of opinion that this is a good settlement at Chipping Norton."

Note.—These cases are inserted here as Lord Mansfield gives as a reason for his judgment that the agreement for absence would have been implied if not expressed. (See as to these cases, Rex v. Holsworthy, 6 B. & C. 283; 9 D. & R. 332.)

There is also a class of hirings in which it is not the intention of the parties to except any portion of the year out of the agreement, but in which a stipulation is introduced as to the number of working hours. The effect of such stipulations upon the question of settlements will be seen in the following cases.

Rex v. Macclesfield, Burr. S. C. 458; 2 Bott, 300. The pauper was hired, with the consent of his mother, to work in Macclesfield at a silk mill there for the term of three years, at 6*d.* a week for the first year, 9*d.* a week for the second year, and 13*d.* a week for the third. The master was not to find diet or lodging; and the service was to be only eleven hours in the six working days; and all the rest of the time, as well as on Sundays, he was to be at his own liberty and his own master. He continued three years in the service: but within that time frequently absented himself from his work, sometimes for a day or longer, at other times for several hours in the day; for all which deductions were made out of his wages. He lodged the three years with his mother at Macclesfield, who received his wages; which not being sufficient to maintain him, the overseers of Sutton contributed 6*d.* a week during the whole time towards his maintenance. The question was, whether this was sufficient to gain a settlement at Macclesfield? By Lord Mansfield, C.J. "Here is no foundation to imagine that this can be a settlement on the ground of an apprenticeship. The only question is, whether it be a settlement as a hiring for a year and service for a year? The pauper was an infant of only eight years of age, at the time of the hiring, therefore he was not bound by the agreement. Indeed he might have affirmed it; (for the contract of an infant is not absolutely void, but only voidable at his own election.) But the master could not oblige him to stand to it. Then as to the contract itself, it was only to serve eleven hours in the day of the six working days, but during all the rest of those days and the whole Sunday the servant was at his own disposal. It is in the nature of a contract from week to week; and it cannot in this case be construed to gain a settlement; and it is plain Sutton did not understand it in this light, having contributed to the child's maintenance during the whole three years."

Hiring to work for three years, eleven hours a day, the rest of his time and Sundays to be his own, is not a yearly hiring.

Rex v. Kingswinford, 4 T. R. 219. Case:—The pauper J. Lockwood agreed with W. Bullock to serve him as an artificer in the art of a glass-grinder or in any other art he should think proper to employ him in for seven years; and he was not during that time to work for or to serve any other person, nor depart from his work without the leave of his master, but would continue and be in such service as aforesaid from six o'clock in the morning till seven in the evening of each day during the said term, including half an hour at breakfast and one hour at dinner times (except on Sundays), if in proper health. His master was to find him shop-room, and to pay him three shillings and sixpence per week during the term, and to provide him meat, &c. He served Bullock two years under this agreement. He occasionally worked in the night time, and often went on errands for his master on Sundays, and never worked with anybody else during that time, nor thought himself at liberty so to do. Lord Kenyon, C. J. said, "that there was no real distinction between this case and Rex v. Macclesfield, (ante, 387,) for that the fair construction of this agreement was, that the pauper was to be his own master on Sundays, and on other days after he had served the thirteen hours, because he had only covenanted to serve those hours, and that the expression of one was the exclusion of the other. It was essential in these cases that the servant should be under the power and coercion of the master during the whole time." (a)

Rex v. North Nibley, 5 T. R. 21, is a case similar in its material circumstances, and the court said that Rex v. Kingswinford had decided the question, and that such hiring and service did not gain a settlement.

Rex v. Buckland Denham, Burr. S. C. 694; 2 Bott, 311. The pauper, about seventeen years of age, was hired by his father to a clothier of Buckland Denham, to serve him as a sheerman for five years, and was to work sheerman's hours only (which are uncertain): it was understood that he should be at his own liberty at all other times. He served his master as a sheerman, according to the agreement, working the same hours as his master's other shearmen did. By the court: "This is not a good hiring for a year; because there is an exception in it, that the pauper was to work sheerman's hours only and to be at his own liberty at all other times. But if the contract be an absolute contract for a year, the not working on Sundays and holidays, if it be the custom of the country not to work on those days, ought not to hinder the gaining of a settlement."

Rex v. Birmingham, 9 B. & C. 925; 4 Man. & R. 691. Order of removal of W. Steam, &c. from Birmingham to Atherstone confirmed. Case:—The pauper went to live with J. Owen a button caster of Birmingham. After he had been with him some time Owen hired him for a year at 4s. 6d. per week. Nothing was said about Sundays. It was part of the terms of the hiring that the pauper was to work from six in the morning to seven in the evening, and might make as much over-work as he choose. He received earnest when he was hired. He served his master under this contract for a year, during which he lived in his master's house and boarded himself; he lived there on Sundays as well as week days, and on Sunday morning he used to ask if any thing was to be done, and if there was, he did it. He made a good deal of money by over-work, but never did any for any one but the master, and was never paid for it but by him: he was allowed 2d. an hour for over-work. At the expiration of the first year, he was hired by Owen for a second year on the same terms, except that he was to have 5s. 6d. per week wages and 4d. an hour over-work. He served the whole of the second year. He was hired for and served a third year on similar terms. Bayley, J. "This case is very different from Rex v. Byker (ante, 374). There the court thought the term was only mentioned as the measure of the wages, and that the contract did not impose any limit upon what was reasonably required by the master; and that the relation of master and servant continued during the twenty-four hours. But in this case there was a stipulation that the pauper was to work from six in the morning till seven in the evening, and might make as much over-work as he choose. It was optional in him to do over-work or not. He had a right to say to his master, I have worked thirteen hours and will work no more. This is clearly an exception in the contract, limiting the control of the master to the specific period of time therein mentioned." Littledale and Parke, Js. concurred. Order confirmed.

Rex v. Frome Selwood, 1 Bar. & Adol. 207. John Bagnall and family were removed from Birmingham to Frome Selwood. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper was hired by articles of agreement made the 16th day of August, 1820, by himself on the one part, and John Wright of Birmingham, bedstead maker, of the other part. It was agreed that, first, J. Bagnall doth undertake and agree with J. Wright by these presents, that he J. Bagnall, in consideration of the wages hereinafter agreed to be paid to him by J. Wright, shall and will from the date hereof, for and during and unto the full end and term of three years from thence next ensuing and fully to be complete and ended, work for and serve the said J. Wright in the business and employment of a bedstead maker, and in such particular branches thereof as the said J. Wright shall from time to time think proper to employ him: and also that he the said J. Bagnall shall and will from time to time, during the continuance of the aforesaid term, to the best of his power and capacity, make, manufacture and complete such goods as shall from time to time be given or delivered to him, or which he shall be requested to make: and also that he the said J. Bagnall shall work from six o'clock in the morning to seven in the evening in summer, and from seven in the winter to eight o'clock, in every working day during the said term, and shall not nor will, during the said term, work for or serve any other person whomsoever. And the said J. Wright, in consideration of such work and service, doth hereby undertake and agree with the said J. Bagnall to find him full employment during the said term, and to pay him on Saturday night in every week for the first year 7s., the second year 8s., and the third 9s. The pauper stayed in Wright's service in Birmingham for a year under the above agreement. The question for the opinion of this court was, whether or not the pauper gained a settlement in Birmingham by the hiring and service above mentioned. Bayley, J. "The rule is that if a party contract generally to serve in a particular trade, though he may be bound to work only during the usual hours of work in that trade, yet by so working he will gain a settlement. But if it be made part of the bargain that the person hired shall serve for specific hours only, then the relation of master and servant does not subsist out of those hours, according to the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, and that is an exceptive hiring. In Rex v. Buckland Denham (a) (ante, 388,) there was an express exception in the contract, the pauper was hired as a shearman to serve for five years to work shearman's hours only. The same observation applies to Rex v. Kingswinford (b) (ante, 387). The hiring there was for seven years to work for thirteen hours in the day (Sundays excepted). Rex v. Birmingham (c) (ante, 388), goes further than either of those cases. The pauper there was hired for a year to work from seven in the morning to seven in the evening, with liberty to make as much over-work as he pleased; and as it was optional in him to do over-work or not, and as he might refuse to work more than thirteen hours, the court held that there was an exception in the contract limiting the control of the master to the specific period of time therein mentioned. In the case of Rex v. North Nibley (5 T. R. 21, ante, 388), the terms of the hiring were the same as in the present case. They do not admit of the distinction contended for with regard to the difference between serving and working. There the pauper was hired as a colt shearman to work twelve hours each day, and that was held to be an exceptive hiring, upon the ground that the servant to gain a settlement must be under the control and coercion of the master the whole time of service. Now in this case, although the servant could not have worked for any other master out of the stipulated hours, he might have worked for himself, or at all events might have refused to execute during those hours any commands of his master in his business. This therefore was an exceptive hiring, and no settlement was gained by the service under it." Littledale, J. "I thought in Rex v. St. John Devizes (post, 392), and I think now, that if the case were res integra, an engagement to work thirteen hours in the day ought to gain a settlement, being all the work that could be reasonably exacted. But it appears to me that the authorities are conclusive in favour of the finding of the sessions." Parke, J. "I think this case is governed by the principle to be collected from Rex v. Birmingham. And it is to be observed, that the agreement is not simply for service but for service in a particular trade, so that the exception in the hours of working was an exception of the very thing which was the subject-matter of the contract of hiring." Order of sessions confirmed.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

Rex v. Norton Bavant, 4 Nev. & Man. 687. John White and family were removed from Norton Bavant to Frome Selwood. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper's birth settlement was in Frome Selwood. About eight years ago the pauper went to one Gutch in the parish of Corsley, to hire himself as a colt shearman; Gutch asked the pauper if he liked to work for him for a twelvemonth, and offered 4s. a week to work ten hours a day, from five o'clock in the morning till six in the evening, and to leave off in the middle of the day on Saturday, so as to make up the ten hours a day. The pauper served the year and slept in the same parish, sometimes at his master's and sometimes at home. About a month after entering into the service, it was agreed between the master and the pauper that the latter should receive one penny per hour for over-hours; and he continued to receive the same to the end of the year. Sometimes he looked after his master's horse, and sometimes worked in the garden. At the end of the year the pauper agreed with the master to stay on upon the same terms, with the addition of 6d. a week more wages. The pauper served a second year, doing nearly the same work as before. The pauper during both years worked over-hours at his master's request, and never refused when he was wanted. He was sometimes employed on Sundays, and was paid for so doing. The pauper kept an account of his over-time by the direction of his master, and was asked by his master if he would sooner do the over-work in his own time or in his master's. The pauper choose to work his over-hours in the evening. The question for the court is, whether the pauper gained a settlement by hiring and service in Corslay. Lord Denman, C. J. "I think it impossible for us to say that we are bound by the decision of the sessions. The sessions have found that there was a birth settlement in the appellant parish, and a subsequent settlement by hiring and service in the respondent parish: provided this court is of opinion that the hiring which they have stated amounts to a hiring for a year. The court is therefore bound to inquire whether it is such a hiring or not. We should find it very difficult to reconcile all the cases which have been decided as to exceptive hirings. This case is however precisely governed by Rex v. Birmingham (ante, 388), for the facts are quite the same." Bayley, J. in that case distinguishes it from Rex v. Byker (ante, 374), which had been cited. Here the master asked the pauper if he liked to work for a twelvemonth, and offered 4s. a week to work ten hours a day, from five o'clock in the morning till six in the evening, and to leave off in the middle of Saturday so as to make up the ten hours a day. There was a part of the week which the pauper was not bound to work for his master. That which took place after the original agreement forms no part of the contract. We are pressed with the authority of Rex v. Ossett cum Gawthorpe. In that case we did not intend to overrule Rex v. Birmingham, on the contrary, it is expressly mentioned and distinguished in the judgments. The distinction between the two cases is I admit a refined one, and one of our learned brothers (Taunton, J.) thought that we were wrong. There however the contract certainly was different from that upon which the question here turns. In that case there was a general hiring for five years stated, and then followed certain arrangements as to the amount of the wages. Here the actual contract of hiring itself is to work for ten hours a day only. Therefore without interfering with any of the decisions referred to, we may hold that this is an exceptive hiring." Littledale, J. "I am of the same opinion." Patteson, J. "I also am of the same opinion. I do not think that the sessions can be said to have found that this was a hiring for a whole year: for they have asked us to decide whether it is so or not. We distinguish between Rex v. Birmingham and Rex v. Ossett cum Gawthorpe. In the latter case I was not much pressed by Rex v. Birmingham, but was more so by Rex v. Frome Selwood (1 Bar. & Adol. 207). The question whether a contract of hiring is exceptive or not, depends upon whether over-work is optional or not on the part of the servant. In Rex v. Ossett cum Gawthorpe it was not optional. We all agreed there as to the principle though we differed as to the facts. Here the over-work is optional." Coleridge, J. "It is quite trifling to say that there has been any finding by the sessions which can prevent our going into the inquiry whether this is an exceptive hiring or not. They leave the question entirely open to us. There is no doubt a difficulty in reconciling all the cases upon this subject; but at the same time there is no class of cases in settlement law on which the principle is better settled. The difficulty arises from the courts having upon the same facts and the same principles come to different conclusions. It would have been better if the sessions had found upon the settled principle, that the hiring was incomplete or complete for a year. The principle being settled it is possible for any one who reads this case, without referring to other decisions upon the subject, to doubt that this is an exceptive hiring. During all the time beyond the stipulated hours the pauper was his own master. He might have gone away and worked wherever he would. This was clearly an exceptive hiring. That which came after the original contract in this case, shows what was the understanding of the parties. A distinction was then acknowledged by them between master's time and servant's time." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Ozelworth, Burr. S. C. 302; 2 Bott, 432. W. Hewett agreed with T. Palsor, clothworker, to serve him in his business for three years, at so much a week. He was to work twelve hours a day, and a penny for each hour over. Sixpence a week was to be retained as a deposit; which was to be repaid to Hewett if he performed the agreement, or if Palsor should discharge him before the end of the term. It was understood between them that Palsor might turn Hewett out of his service at any time during the term, paying him the sixpences detained. Hewett worked under the agreement for about six months; and then, being ill, absented himself about three months, and then returned, and was received by Palsor, and continued to work for him under the agreement till removed by the order, being about three-quarters of a year after his return. By the court: "Here is an actual hiring for three years, and a service under it for one year and a quarter. Besides, the two justices removed him whilst he was actually in his master's service."

Rex v. St. Agnes, Burr. S. C. 671; 2 Bott, 310. The father of the pauper contracted with Mr. Nankivell (the pauper being then fifteen years of age) for the pauper to work at Nankivell's stamps, situate in St. Agnes, (which stamps are mills, wherein several are employed in cleansing and manufacturing tin,) for one year, at the yearly wages of 5*l.* The pauper served Nankivell at the stamps for the year, by working therein daily, except holidays and Sundays, according to the custom of tanners, and his father received his wages as he had occasion for it. During the year the pauper ate, drank, and lodged with his father in St. Agnes, serving Nankivell at his stamps, and in no other capacity, nor ever became a part of his master's family. By the court: "This was an entire contract for a year, without any exception contained in it; and the service was according to the custom of the country. The difference is where the exception is part of the contract, and where the contract is absolute: the question turns upon this distinction. In Rex v. Macclesfield (ante, 387), it was part of the original contract: here it is not so. And they were unanimous that the pauper gained a settlement."

Rex v. Horwick, 10 East, 489. The pauper was hired as a bleacher and crofter for a year at 12*s.* a week; nothing else passed at the time of hiring, and he served the year. The custom is for each bleacher to be directed by his master to get up a certain number of pieces a week, calculating at so many pieces a day for six days; there is no stint as to hours, and if the bleacher finish his work in less than the time appointed, the rest of the time is his own to do as he pleases. The pauper on Sundays went where he pleased, without asking his master's leave. The pauper occasionally made up for lost time by working on Sundays, but this was his own act. The master had nothing to do with the bleachers on Sundays. Lord Ellenborough, "The law of the land breaks in upon such contracts as these on the Sundays, and the master in this case had as much right to the service of the pauper for the whole year as the law will allow. Here is a clear distinction between this case and Rex v. Macclesfield, Rex v. Kingswinford (ante, 387), and Rex v. N. Nibley (ante, 388). Here is an express hiring for a year, and

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

But if hiring is to serve three years, though only to work twelve hours a day, and if more to have a certain sum per hour, this gains a settlement.

So, also, where the exceptions are only implied, and not absolute.

Hiring to work as a bleacher and crofter.

Implied exceptions by the custom of the country will not defeat the settlement.

1. Of the Contract of Hiring.

A clerk in a merchant's house, hired by the year, but serving only during the usual hours of mercantile business, thereby gained a settlement, although these hours never occupied the whole day.

A hiring for four years, to work according to the rules of the factory, which were at the master's discretion. The pauper was told she was to work twelve hours a day: Held, not an exceptive hiring.

no express exception of any part of the year. But this is an attempt to introduce an implied exception from the practice of a particular house of manufacture; though implied exceptions in the times of service, by the custom of the country, have been held not to break in upon general contracts of hiring for the year."

Rex v. All Saints, Worcester, 1 B. & Ald. 322. A clerk in a mercantile house was hired by the year, but he served only during the usual hours of business, which did not, by the custom of the trade, ever occupy the whole day, and he went where he pleased, without asking his master's leave, when those hours were over. He did what he pleased on Sundays. After hearing Puller in support of the order, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said, "There is in every contract of hiring some implied exception of hours for relaxation, food, and rest; I cannot at least suggest to myself any contract in which such exceptions do not exist. The master here has a right to the service of the pauper at all times, but he does not require his services at any other hours than those mentioned: there is not any exception in the contract. The hiring then being general, and there being no exception but such as are necessarily implied in every contract, I think that the pauper by serving under it for a year, gained a settlement." Bayley, J. said, "The distinction between the two classes relative to this subject is, that in the one the exception to the service is expressed in the contract, and in the other it is left by the custom of the particular trade to be raised by implication. This case seems to me to range itself under the latter class; and therefore I think the pauper gained a settlement by this hiring and service." Abbott and Holroyd, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. St. John, Devizes, 9 B. & C. 896; 4 Man. & R. 681. Order of removal of Prudence Abrahams from Chippenham to Devizes confirmed. Case:—The pauper hired herself by a written agreement, made with Mr. S.'s foreman, to work in Mr. S.'s factory as silk winder for four years. S. agreed to pay her 2s. a week for the first year, and a progressive increase in each successive year, subject to a reduction for absence through sickness or otherwise from her work. She agreed in all things to observe and obey all the rules and regulations of Mr. S., as well with regard to the hours of attendance and of work as then made, and other particulars of working. She was to pay for unnecessary waste. At the expiration of the time, for good conduct, she was to receive a gratuity of 3*l*. When the pauper executed this agreement, the foreman told her that she must observe the working hours, and if certain work was not done, she must work twelve hours a day. The pauper entered on her service the day of the agreement. Rules for the factory had not at that time been reduced to writing. The foreman said they existed only in the breast of the master, but were known to and acted on by the work people. They were, during the service of the pauper, occasionally altered by the master, but the rules as to the hours were never changed. Time was at first allowed for tea, but afterwards revoked by the master's sole authority. The question was, whether this was an exceptive hiring, and whether parol evidence had been properly received. Bayley, J. "Where there is in a contract of hiring an express exception of any particular time, so that during that time the master cannot exercise any control over his servant, that is not a hiring for a year. By this agreement the servant stipulates to obey all the rules of the factory with regard to the hours of attendance. In every hiring the law will imply that the party hired shall work at all reasonable hours when required. The ordinary working hours in a manufactory are twelve hours a day; but it does not therefore follow that the master may not, on extraordinary occasions, require his servant to work at other hours. Whether he does so or not the relation of master and servant continues during the whole day. It does not appear what were the specific rules in this case; but assuming that one of them were to work twelve hours a day, yet, inasmuch as the regulations might be, and were, from time to time, altered by the master, the stipulation that the servant should obey the rules of the factory with regard to hours of work, did not give the servant any right to say that the master should not require her service at all reasonable hours. Such a stipulation does not necessarily imply that she is not to work beyond certain hours. The true meaning of this agreement is, that the relation of master and servant was to continue the whole day. There is no exception in the contract, and no remission of service, but such as the law will imply in every contract of hiring." Littledale, J. "To constitute a yearly hiring, the relation of master and servant must subsist during the whole year, and during the whole of every day. It has been held in several cases, that a hiring in terms for a year, the servant to work for so many hours a day, is an exceptive hiring. These cases have gone to a great extent. It seems to me, that unless by the terms of such a contract there is an express exception showing that the relation of master and servant is not to subsist during the whole year, or during the whole of every day in the year, it is a yearly hiring. By this contract the servant is to conform to the rules of the factory. That is a stipulation which the law would imply in every contract of hiring; and we cannot from that infer that there was an exception of any period of time during which the relation of master and servant was not to exist." Parke, J. "I have no doubt that any thing which passed by parol between the foreman and the pauper was not admissible evidence to explain the agreement. It is said there is an exception to the agreement by reason of that stipulation, whereby the pauper agrees to obey the rules of the factory. But that imports no more than a contract to obey the orders of her master, which is a term implied in every contract of hiring." Order of sessions quashed.

It must be a contract for service, and not an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. Those cases only are inserted here where the contract has been held to be a hiring. Those relating to imperfect apprenticeships are collected under that title.

Rex v. Little Bolton, 2 Bott, 222; Cald. 367. The pauper went to W. Stott, at Great Bolton, and asked him if he would teach him to weave counterpanes; Stott answered, he would teach him, if he would work with him two years and a half or three years, and the pauper's earnings were to be divided between them; the pauper was to find himself with meat, washing, and clothes; he was engaged on these terms, and an agreement in writing was entered into accordingly. The pauper worked with Stott under this agreement, in Great Bolton, about a year and a half, and then the pauper gave the master 20s. to be free, having then married. The master (whilst he was working under the agreement) found him looms, room, and materials; he never employed the pauper in any work but weaving; the condition upon which he taught the pauper to weave was one half of his earnings. Stott received the money, and paid the pauper one half, and looked on it that he had a right to receive it; but sometimes he let the pauper receive it. Lord Mansfield, C. J. delivered the judgment of the court. "We have looked into the authorities, and we find that all those cases of apprenticeships which have been holden to be defective, (b) and not convertible into hirings and services, speak of the pauper as an apprentice, and that he was to serve as such. There is no such statement here; and we are therefore of opinion that it is a good hiring and service." Orders quashed.

If there be an agreement in writing to teach a trade, and the person is not spoken of as an apprentice, it is a hiring.

Rex v. Eccleston, 2 East, 298. Removal from Little Bolton to Eccleston confirmed. Case:—The pauper, when about fifteen years of age, went to Tonge with Haulgh, and made a verbal agreement with S. Clough, a weaver of counterpanes, to serve him a year and a half. Clough was to teach him to weave counterpanes, and the pauper was to have one half of what he earned, and to find himself in every thing. Nothing else passed between them on making the agreement. The pauper worked with Clough for a year and a half; except for a fortnight, during which he remained absent; but Clough however brought him back into his service, and obliged him to stay a fortnight over the year and a half, in order to make up the time he had been absent from his service. During the time of his service he constantly slept at the house of his mother. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "I gave a reluctant assent to Rex v. Little Bolton (ante, 393); but as the case now before us is in terms the same as is there decided, I think it is better to abide by that determination, than to introduce uncertainty into this branch of the law; it being often of more importance to have the rule settled than to determine what it shall be. I am not, however, convinced by the reasoning of that case, and if the point were new, I should think otherwise. I should consider, as Lord Kenyon said, in Rex v. Laindon, that if the relation of master and apprentice be created by the contract of the parties, though they do not use the very words master and apprentice, yet, if they use words tantamount, it is sufficient. The word 'apprentice,' he observed, was taken from apprendre, to learn; and what was that but an apprenticeship, where the purpose of the contract was for one man to teach and the other to learn a trade. Then what was this intended to be? I should have said, upon general reasoning, that where the contract was that the master should teach the other a trade, and the latter was to do nothing ulterior the employment in that trade, it was a contract apprendre in the true sense of the word; and being defective in this case, for want of proper legal formalities, it could not enure as a contract of hiring in a servant. However, as Lord Kenyon did not think proper to over-rule Rex v. Little Bolton in terms, though he disapproved of what was there said; and as it was not overturned in Rex v. Highnam, or Rex v. Rainham, for the reason I at first gave, I think it better to concur in that decision, however unwilling I should have been to have done so in the first instance." Per Lawrence, J. "The case referred to is directly in point, and not having been over-ruled it ought to govern the present. Rex v. Laindon and Rex v. Rainham are both very distinguishable from the present."

If one be clubbed for three years, to be taught a trade, and contract to do any work he may be set about, it is a hiring. (a)

Rex v. Coltishall, 5 T. R. 193. At Lady-day, 1785, the pauper being about eighteen years of age, and a bricklayer's labourer, was clubbed with J. Rolfe, of Coltishall, for three years, at 6s. per week the first year, 7s. the second year, and 8s. the third year; to board, lodge, and wash for himself; he was to be taught the trade of a bricklayer. An agreement in writing was to be prepared for three years, but this was never done. The pauper served two years and upwards, and then, upon some difference, his master and he consented to part. No premium was paid. The pauper was to do any work Rolfe set him about, and was not to be absent from his business during any part of the time. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "that it was impossible to raise a doubt upon the case; for that the concluding part of it, which stated that 'the pauper was to do any work his master set him about (a) was decisive to show that he must be considered as a hired servant: and that, although one of his objects was to learn a trade, that was deemed equivalent to part of his wages.'"

Rex v. Martham, 1 East, 239. By an agreement made by the pauper's uncle, he was clubbed with B. a bricklayer, for three years, at certain weekly wages, to learn the trade of a bricklayer, and to do any other work his master might set him about, with a proviso, that if he were prevented from working by bad weather, illness, or want of employment, there should be a proportionable deduction of wages. It was holden that the pauper gained a settlement, though occasional deductions on those accounts were made. The case was decided upon Rex v. Coltishall.

Rex v. Shinfield, 14 East, 541. M. Lanesbury was removed from Reading to Shinfield. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper's husband, R. Lanesbury, in June, 1806, hired himself for a year to J. Palmer, brickmaker, and continued from that time upwards of a year in Palmer's service. On 29th September, 1806, the pauper's husband (being still a minor) and Palmer,

The pauper entered into a written contract (unstamped and without seals) to serve for three years, to learn to make bricks: Held to be a hiring in the relation of master and servant (b).

(a) This is not decisive. Rex v. Coombe; Rex v. Tipton.

(b) This case also stated, that "clubbing signifies a person contracting to serve for the purpose of learning a trade, and to have less wages on account of learning the trade."

signed an agreement on unstamped paper, and not under seals, under which the pauper's husband served the whole three years. The agreement was: "I, R. L., do hereby covenant and agree to serve J. P. for three years to learn to make bricks, and the art of burning, on condition of the said J. P.'s finding me sufficient victuals, lodging, and clothes, and to be clothed in the habit of a working man at the expiration of the three years on condition of my helping to attend the kiln on nights: 29th September, 1806.—(Signed) R. L." and attested. In the margin of the paper, near the attestation, was written, "I, J. P., consenting to the above agreement." The appellants produced R. Lanesbury's mother, who swore that Palmer came to her and asked her if she had any objection to her son being apprenticed to him, and she said, "No." The case having been argued, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "This was the case of a person who, though a minor, had power to contract for a hiring and service to another, or as an apprentice, (Drury v. Drury, cited in 3 Term. Rep. 161.) Quicumque viâ datâ, the pauper gained a settlement in Shinfield; for if the instrument were invalid as being a fraud upon the law, it is clear that there was no good apprenticeship created, because it was not created in the manner prescribed by the law; and if invalid and not receivable in evidence, what is there to do away the former contract of hiring for a year? But supposing it to be valid and not operating as an apprenticeship, but as a hiring in the relation of master and servant, what is this but the case of a continuing service operating under a new contract of hiring, merely superadding other terms whereby the servant was to have food and clothing provided for him in the manner stated, and an opportunity of learning the trade of his master, instead of seeking for a compensation for his service upon a quantum meruit. It is therefore unnecessary to determine whether or not this was a good contract of hiring and service, as created by the written instrument. And all the cases cited by the appellant's counsel differ from the present, because in none of them was there a good contract of hiring and service, independent of the imperfect contract of apprenticeship in dispute. But here there was an original perfect contract of hiring and service, which was not defeated by an invalid instrument. With respect, however, to Rex v. Little Bolton (ante, 393), the court, in Rex v. Eccleston (ante, 393), considered it as a subsisting authority, whatever question there might have been upon the subject at first, and I think the convenience of the thing is in support of it, but it is not necessary now to discuss that point." Grose, J. "Here there was originally a good contract of hiring and service, and that was not done away with by the subsequent instrument, whereby the parties merely prolonged the duration of the contract, and fixed the compensation to be made by the master for the service." Le Blanc, J. "This case is distinguishable from all the former cases in which the question has been, whether the contract was to serve as an apprentice, or as a hired servant; where if the court considered that the contract was to serve as an apprentice it could not enure to give a settlement, as in the case of an hired servant, for in none of those cases was there any valid contract of hiring and service existing before, independent of the instrument in question. But here the husband of the pauper had first entered into a good contract by parol, as a hired servant for a year, and pending that contract he and his master entered into a written agreement, by which it is contended that the parties meant to contract for an apprenticeship, and that this, though invalid for the purpose of creating an apprenticeship, yet changed the nature of the service under the former hiring into a service as an apprentice, and therefore prevented the gaining of a settlement as a hired servant. But I do not accede to that argument; because, if there were at one time a subsisting valid contract of hiring and service for a year, and pending that the parties enter into an invalid agreement, I do not see how that can do away the former valid contract. But even upon the construction of the written instrument itself, I do not think that it is to be taken as a contract of apprenticeship. In all the former cases where the instrument in question has been so construed, it has been stated that the parties intended to contract in the relation of master and apprentice, only they had contracted informally in order to avoid the stamp duties. But here the contract is for Lanesbury to serve Palmer for three years, to learn the art of a brickmaker, on condition of Palmer's finding him in board, lodging, and clothes; there is no contract by the master to teach him, but only for the boy to have the opportunity of learning the business. It is said that no wages are reserved, but that is no more than what often happens with boys at service; they get less at first, because they must first learn their business before they can be of use to their masters in it. Then though it is stated here that the boy was to serve his master to learn his business, that would not prevent it from operating as a contract of hiring and service. I do not think, therefore, that this was, in the terms of it, an agreement for an apprenticeship, so as to supersede the former contract of hiring and service. But even if it were intended as an apprenticeship, yet the instrument being invalid, would not supersede the former valid contract." Bayley, J. "I consider the instrument as a contract of service, and not as an apprenticeship. There was an original good contract for a year between the parties as master and servant generally, and after three months' service generally under it, they entered into a new agreement, by which the boy was to serve his master for three years, not generally, but to learn to make bricks and the art of burning, upon condition of being found in board, lodging, and clothes. The meaning of the parties, therefore, was, that the general service before contracted for should be restrained to such service as would enable the boy to learn his master's business. If an apprenticeship had been intended, there would have been words introduced into the agreement binding the master to teach the boy, and there being no such words of obligation on the master, and the written contract not having the ordinary words of binding to serve as an apprentice, and the intent of the parties, as collected from the terms of it, being at least equivocal, we are warranted by the cases in saying that the object of it was merely to confine the general service, before contracted for, to such parts of the master's employ as would enable the boy to learn his business. If this, therefore, was to give an extraordinary benefit to the servant, the master might well stipulate for receiving such service without the payment of wages." Orders confirmed.

A verbal agreement by the father that his son should work with another for two years, to have what he earned, and to allow the master two shillings per week for instruction, and the use of a frame and standing: Held to be a contract of hiring and service, and not of apprenticeship. (a)

Rex v. Burbach, 1 M. & Sel. 370. Removal of Mary, the wife of W. Timson, from Burbach to St. Mary, Birmingham. Order quashed. Case:—The father of the pauper's husband made a verbal agreement with R. Palmer, of Burbach, frame-work-knitter, that his son should be with Palmer, and work with him for two years, and have what he got, and that he should allow two shillings per week out of his gains to Palmer: viz. one shilling for teaching him the business of a frame-work-knitter, ninepence for the rent of a frame, and three-pence for the standing of the frame. Nothing was said about his being an apprentice. The pauper's husband served Palmer for two years at Burbach, and had what he earned after the two shillings per week were deducted, who found a frame and all materials, but the pauper's husband paid for the needles himself; and in regular work he earned about ten shillings per week. The pauper's husband had no right to work for any body else in Palmer's frame, nor did he do so to Palmer's knowledge; he received no wages, and boarded and slept all the time at his father's house, where his washing was done; he did no act as a servant for Palmer by his order; and on Sundays he was at his father's house. Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "The case was fully argued on both sides. The ground of argument taken is, that the father was the contracting party, and could not bind the son. It certainly cannot be contended that the son would at all events be bound by the contract of the father; but in every case, if a contract be made by a person standing in a peculiar relation to another, on his behalf and for his benefit, and that other performs his part of the contract, there is no authority which should restrain me from leaving to the jury whether he did not adopt the contract. It seems absurd to say that if a party contract on my behalf that I should do work, and I do it, that the rule of omnis rati habitio does not apply. Every jury upon such a question would find a previous mandatum evidenced by the service afterwards. Here the son is acting as servant; but if it were doubtful, the sessions have drawn the conclusion, and have not submitted to us any question whether he was bound by the contract. The question then is, whether this is a contract of hiring and service, or of apprenticeship. It certainly cannot be called an apprenticeship, nor does it bear any of its forms; for although there is mention of an allowance to be made by the son on account of the master's teaching him the business, yet that is not peculiar to the contract of apprenticeship: it enters into the contemplation of almost every contract of hiring and service, how far the servant has learnt his art, or stands in need of farther instruction; and according to his proficiency a consideration is made in the rate of wages. It is the measure to which each party resorts in apportioning the compensation; and if the circumstance of the servant's having to learn his art is to make a difference, it would change the nature of most contracts of hiring and service, even in the meanest situations, into that of an apprenticeship. As to Rex v. Little Bolton (ante, 393), without saying whether one quite approves the principle of that case, it is enough to say that the court has been so much in the habit of acting upon that decision, that it would now be dangerous to set it aside. I do not say that if that case were erroneous, and only destitute of legal foundation, it would not be right to set it aside; but if it stands on plausible grounds, it ought not to be canvassed too nicely. This case is stronger than Rex v. Little Bolton; there the master agreed to teach the pauper if he would work with him two years and a half or three years; so that the teaching was of the very essence of the contract. Here there is no express contract by the master to teach, (a) only an allowance by the servant out of the earnings for teaching, which perhaps may amount to an implied one. I will not say that an action might not be maintained upon this contract for not teaching, although upon a demurrer to a declaration framed upon it, there might be difficulty. Admitting, however, that such a contract may be inferred, it is by no means so clear as assumed in argument: and even if it were, it would not be so strong as Rex v. Little Bolton, which was an express contract. There Lord Mansfield observed upon the agreement not speaking of the pauper as an apprentice; and here there is no mention of apprenticeship, except as far as learning and teaching are ingredients in the contract of apprenticeship, which they are also in almost every contract of hiring and service regularly entered into. Therefore, without saying that Rex v. Little Bolton is not law, we cannot hold that this is not a good hiring and service." Le Blanc, J. "With the exception of name, this case and Rex v. Little Bolton are the same." The other judges concurred. Order of sessions confirmed.

Services, &c.

The 8 & 9 W. & M. c. 30, s. 4, enacts, "that no person so hired shall be adjudged or deemed to have a good settlement in any such parish or township, unless such person shall continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year." (See statute, ante, 329.)

(a) If there is a contract to learn, one to teach will be implied. Rex v. Crediton (post). (b) See the division of the subject, ante, 311.

2. The Service under the Contract.

In order to perfect a settlement by hiring and service, it is therefore necessary that the person continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year. (Ante, 329.)

But it is obvious that a person may abide in the same service under different successive hirings, and the law does not require that the hiring and the service shall be for one and the same year, to entitle the party to a settlement.

It is said that in Dunsford v Redgwich, Fol. 133; 2 Bott, 364; the court declared that there ought to be one entire contract, and one entire service for a year, pursuant to that contract. But it is proper to remark, that the point in question in that case was, whether a hiring for two half years should be deemed a sufficient hiring, and not what should be a sufficient service under such hiring.

Rex v. Overton, Burr. S. C. 549; 2 Bott, 366. The pauper Bailey was settled in Overton, and on the 25th day of March contracted with Orpwood, of the parish of Steventon, for the wages of 20s., to serve him from the said 25th day of March, 1697, until Michaelmas then next following, and which time she served accordingly. At Michaelmas, Orpwood contracted with her from the said Michaelmas for one year ensuing, for the wages of 30s., and she remained with him until some time in the month of April, 1698, in which month, by mutual consent, she left her service, and he paid her the proportion of her wages that were then due. The sessions conceived that the pauper, by continuing more than one whole year under this hiring, gained a settlement in the parish of Steventon; and the Court of King's Bench were of the same opinion, for the service under the hiring for half a year, and the half year's service under the hiring for the year, answers the end of the statute 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, and is a good service for the year.

The same point precisely was determined in Rex v. South Molton, Raymond, 426; a case the records of which cannot be found, but which, Sir James Burrows says, may possibly be the same case as Rex v. Overton. (See Burr. S. C. 550.)

Brightwell v. Westhallam, 1 Sess. Ca. 87; Fol. 143; 2 Bott, 251. There was a hiring and service from three weeks after Michaelmas to Michaelmas, and then a hiring for a year, and service for eleven months. The Chief Justice said, "if there were a service for a year, under a hiring from week to week, and then a hiring for a year, and serving for forty days, (a) he should adjudge that a settlement. The reason is, because by the 3 W. & M. c. 11, a hiring for a year, and forty days' service under it, made a settlement; in regard that the hiring for a year showed that the person was not likely to become chargeable, for that he was able to work; but by 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, the service must be during the space of one whole year. So forty days is a good settlement to an apprentice, in respect to his skill and art, by which he is supposed unlikely to become chargeable. So a person that has paid parish dues, or served offices in a parish, gains a settlement by forty days, because he is supposed a person of substance, unlikely to become chargeable. But the late act requiring service for a year, as well as an hiring, we think it sufficient if the words be answered, considering this with the design of the former statutes."

Rex v. Aynhoe, 2 Sess. Ca. 119; Fol. 144; 2 Bott, 253. The pauper was hired from Christmas to Michaelmas, and served till Michaelmas; then was hired for a year, and served till Midsummer. And this was adjudged a settlement. Rex v. Overton, and Brightwell v. Westhallam, were cited.—Lord Raymond, C. J., said, "The case of Westhallam was express to the point, and he would not break into it; but if it had been res integra, or a case not adjudged before, he should have thought it ill. Here the service was antecedent to the hiring for a year." The greater part of the judges thought this case to be against the statute, but that they were more strongly bound by the pre-

A service for a year, though under different hirings, is good, if one of the hirings be for a year.

A hiring and service from three weeks after Michaelmas to Michaelmas, and then a hiring for a year, and service for eleven months after second hiring, is a good year's service.

A hiring and service from Christmas to Michaelmas, and then a hiring for a year, and a service till Midsummer under the second hiring, will suffice.

(a) But in Rex v. Adson (post), it was held that forty days' service under such yearly hiring was not necessary to gain a settlement.

cedent; and were unwilling to set aside a resolution solemnly adjudged, though not according to their own opinion."

Rex v. Underbarrow and Bradley-Field, Burr. S. C. 545; 2 Bott, 259. A. Kellet hired herself at Christmas to J. Thompson, till Whitsuntide, which time she served. At Whitsuntide she hired herself to Thompson for one year, and continued in the service till the beginning of March, when she and her master parted by consent. It was urged, that the two cases of South Bolton and Rex v. Overton were determined upon facts prior to the explanatory statute of the 8 & 9 W. III., before which statute a hiring for a year, and a service for forty days, gained a settlement. And it was observed that in Rex v. Aynhoe, Lord Raymond and Mr. J. Page declared that if it had been then res integra, they should have judged it to be no settlement: and now it appears to be so; as the two supposed precedents were no precedents at all, being prior to 8 & 9 W. III. By the court: "The authority of these cases will be just the same, whether the facts were prior to the statute or not; because the court determined them as upon facts subsequent to the statute. And there having been many determinations the other way, the court were unanimously of opinion that, for the sake of certainty, it was best to adhere to settled determinations. Though there might be room for great doubt upon this point, if the matter were again open, yet the rule stare decisis is always proper, and especially in these cases of settlements." (a)

Rex v. Adson, 5 T. R. 98 The pauper was hired eight days after Old Michaelmas, 1786, to Old Michaelmas following, and continued in his master's service till the day after Old Michaelmas-day, 1787, when he was hired by his master till the Michaelmas following, and under that hiring he served only ten days. The sessions thought that the second hiring was a hiring for a year, but that the pauper had gained no settlement under it, as he had not served forty days subsequent to that hiring. This case was argued in Michaelmas term last, when only Lord Kenyon, C. J., and Grose, J., were present. Lord Kenyon was of opinion that a settlement was gained by the hiring and services stated in the case: but Grose, J., being of a different opinion, it stood over for further consideration; and now Lord Kenyon said, "That they were both of opinion that the pauper gained a settlement."

Rex v. Underbarrow and Bradley-Field, Doug. 309. Hallhead was hired for a year, from Whitsuntide, 1770, to Whitsuntide, 1771, to Burrow, for the yearly wages of 18s. She lived with him till the 12th of May, being Old May-day, 1771; her master then removing to a new farm in Strickland Roger, carried her with him, where she served seven days, which completed her year, and received her wages. Then she hired herself to the same master for another year, from Whitsuntide, 1771, to Whitsuntide, 1772, for the wages of 25s.; and she continued with him in Strickland Roger from Whitsuntide, 1771, till Candlemas, when by mutual consent she quitted her service, and received her wages up to that time. Lord Mansfield, C. J. "We are all very clear that this was a continuance of the same service with an increase of wages."

Rex v. Sutton, 1 East, 656. The pauper hired himself by the week to Mr. Hatch, of Sutton. Nothing was said about Sunday in the contract; but the pauper worked on that day occasionally when asked by his master, without receiving any additional wages, though he sometimes received some victuals. He received his wages every Saturday night or Sunday morning: he did not reside in his master's house, but boarded himself. At the end of nine months, on his master's family servant going away, the pauper was hired in his place for a year, at 12*l.* per annum, and served eleven months under that hiring. Lord Kenyon, C. J. "It has now been too long settled to be recalled, that if there be a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, though but a small part of the service were performed under the yearly hiring, a

2. The Service under the Contract.

So, will a hiring and service from Christmas to Whitsuntide, and then a hiring for a year, and service till the beginning of the March after the Christmas.

So a hiring and service for less than a year, and then a hiring for a year, but only ten days' service under the yearly hiring, will gain a settlement.

A hiring and service for a year, at certain wages, and then a hiring for another year at higher wages, and service for part of the latter year, is a continuance of the same service; and the settlement is in the parish where the service concluded.

Services similar and dissimilar, may be connected.

(a) Upon searching the records, it has appeared that the case of Rex v. Overton was after the 8 & 9 W. III., and the mistake arose from the errors of the several reporters of that case as to the particular times of her hiring and service.

2. The Service under the Contract.

settlement will be gained. But an attempt has been made to introduce a new head of settlement law, of which I have no knowledge, under a notion that only services ejusdem generis, as it has been said, can be joined. The term got into fashion some time ago. At that period Mr. J. Foster thought that settlements were too easily acquired by the construction which the court was inclined to put on the statute: but since then the leaning has been in favour of them; and it has been supposed that a person ought to gain a settlement in that parish where he has laboured for a certain time, as a reward for his labour: a strange idea, if examined; because somewhere or other he must at any rate be maintained, if he be in want of it. I know not how to state this as a question upon which any doubt can be made. The pauper was hired by the week; nothing was said about Sunday; it is very seldom that there is: why then is that day to be excluded? If a servant be hired for a year, nobody doubts but that Sundays are included; then why not included in a weekly hiring, if no exception be made? The sessions have found that there was a hiring by the week, which must mean the whole week. There is nothing stated to show it was otherwise intended. The pauper was paid sometimes on the Saturday, sometimes on the Sunday; and whenever the master ordered him to do any work on the Sunday, he did it: what is to be concluded from thence, but that it was his duty to do so? How do these facts show that he was not under the master's control on the Sundays as well as other days of the week? In Rex v. Wrington (infra) it appeared from the circumstances that Sundays were excluded. But it is said, that the services cannot be joined, because they were not ejusdem generis. I really know not what that means, nor where the line is to be drawn. Suppose a postillion were made coachman, would those be deemed services ejusdem generis? It is said, that he at first was an out-door servant, and then a family-servant; but I do not know what difference that made in his services. Upon the whole, I cannot do better than what the justices below have done; they have determined that there was a continuing service for a year, and a hiring for a year, and that he gained a settlement; and I think they are warranted by the authorities in that conclusion."

Service for a year, partly under a weekly and partly under a yearly hiring, gives a settlement.

Rex v. Ragworth, Cald. 179; Bott, 378. S. Ward was, by an order of two justices, removed from Bagworth to Ratby. Order quashed. Case:—Nine weeks before Old Michaelmas, 1780, the pauper was hired by W. Hunt, of Ratby, by the week, and served him till Old Michaelmas, when she was hired for a year from that time, and served till about a fortnight before the following Old Michaelmas, when being with child, she and her master parted by consent, and she received her wages up to that time. That she was employed in the same manner during the time she served by the week, as under the hiring after Michaelmas. Willes, J. "The question raised upon the merits is perfectly clear; the pauper did not live in this family occasionally, or work merely as a day-labourer or char-woman, but constantly as a menial servant, and employed throughout in the same services; and a hiring for a year, with a year's service in the whole, and that of a similar nature throughout, though it is made up of several hirings, (provided there be no discontinuance,) gives a settlement." Buller, J. "Here is a continuance in the service for a year: and it has been long settled, that where the service extends throughout the year, you may couple any number of preceding hirings and services with a hiring for a year; the extent and duration of the several preceding services, 'where such services have been similar,' have never been adjudged to vary the law, but there must be one entire hiring for a year."

Exception to the rule in the above cases. (a)

Rex v. Wrington, Burr. S. C. 280; 2 Bott, 270. Ann Stokes, the pauper, when thirteen years of age, went to Chew Magna, to her aunt; and

(a) The distinction between this and the two preceding cases seems to be, that in this the service was as an artizan, and the Sundays were excluded; see Lord Kenyon's judgment in Rex v. Sut- ton (ante, 399); whereas in the two former cases the paupers were menial or domestic servants, and there was no exemption from service on Sundays.

soon afterwards went to Windford, and worked with Nicholas Walker, cloth-worker, in the business of burling clothes, by a weekly hiring. She continued to work with Walker for a year and a half. On the last Saturday of the service the pauper covenanted to serve Walker for a year, at 1*l.* 10*s.* wages; entered immediately into the service, and continued therein eleven months. By the court: "The pauper did not acquire a settlement by this service. For though a subsequent service for less than a year, performed under a hiring for a year, may be coupled to a prior service, which was not performed under a hiring for a year, provided it be a continuance of the same service, yet the subsequent service cannot, in the present case, be coupled with the former, because the former hiring was not of the same kind with the latter: the former was as a day labourer, or weekly labourer at the most; not as a hired servant, who is part of the master's family. (a)

Rex v. Dawlish, 1 B. & Ald. 280. Order of removal from Clyst Honiton to Dawlish confirmed. Case:—The pauper, by indenture, dated September 3, 1804, was bound apprentice by the parish of Broadhembury to R. Percy of that place, till she should attain the age of twenty-one: whilst under this indenture she served J. Blackmore, with Percy's consent, for two years in Dawlish; after which, in May, 1812, she hired herself as a yearly servant to Mrs. Bryant of Clyst Honiton, for 4*l.* a year. In the September following the indentures expired. At the end of her year the pauper again hired for another year to Mrs. Bryant, and served ten months under this last hiring. There was no interruption between the two services. The first year's service with Mrs. Bryant was without the knowledge of Percy. After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J., said, "If these were res integra there might be some difficulty in admitting the principle, that a service without a contract might be coupled with service under one, so as to gain a settlement; but that having been decided, this case ranges itself under the same class." Abbott, J. said, "The first contract was either valid or void; if valid, then there is a good hiring and a good service; if void, then the first year's service will be a service under no contract at all, which, according to the argument, it is admitted may be coupled with the service under the second hiring. In either case a settlement is gained."

Rex v. Harbury, 1 Bar. & Adol. 360. Gardner was removed from Harbury to Snitterfield. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper was hired on the 20th of September, 1823, to serve Mr. Richard Smith, of Snitterfield, for fifty-one weeks. The pauper went into Mr. Smith's service on the 18th of October, 1823, and served Mr. Smith for fifty-one weeks. On the 8th of September, 1824, Mr. Smith again hired the pauper for a year, to commence from the Old Michaelmas ensuing. The pauper remained in Mr. Smith's house, and worked for him regularly from the 18th of October, 1823, until about three weeks before Old Michaelmas, 1825. He served under the said yearly hiring till about three weeks before the Old Michaelmas, when the contract was dissolved. The case merely stated these facts, no point was submitted for the opinion of the court. Bayley, J. "There was no express hiring for the 10th of October, but there was a continuation of the service, not as it appears objected to by the master; Rex v. Dawlish (supra) applies." Littledale, J. "The words of the case are sufficiently strong. We cannot understand from them that the pauper worked as a servant on all the other days, but not on the 10th. Parke, J. "The sessions have in substance found a continued service from October 18, 1823, till the dissolution in 1825. I think their conclusion upon the facts as found by them is wrong." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. St. Mary Kedwelly, 2 B. & C. 750; 4 D. & R. 309; 2 D. & R. Mag. Ca. 291. This case is stated at length under the title of Imperfect Apprenticeships, post. The court were of opinion that the first contract created the relation of master and scholar, and it was contended that service under that contract would connect with service under a hiring as a servant. Rex v. Dawlish was quoted, and Bayley, J. said, "There a year's service was performed after the expiration of the indenture;" and in giving judgment, he said, "to gain a settlement by hiring and service, the service must be under a contract creating the relation of master and servant. Here the first contract created the relation of teacher and scholar, and the service under it not being under a contract of hiring, cannot be coupled with the subsequent service. Littledale, J. "The service must be for a year under a contract or contracts, creating the relation of master and servant.

Rex v. Croscombe, 2 Stra. 1240; Burr. S. C. 256. Joseph Garnsey was removed from Croscombe to St. Cuthbert's. Order quashed. Case:—The pauper hired himself for a year to Dr. Lucy, and lived a year with him in St. Andrew's, and had his wages and livery; and, without coming to any new agreement, continued with him a quarter of a year longer. Then he removed with his master to St. Cuthbert's, where he continued to live with him about six months, still under the same contract. It was urged, that this was not the same service, for that the first contract was completed and determined. It had gained the servant a settlement in St. Andrew's by serving a whole year there. To which it was replied, that it is the constant practice for servants to go on upon the first agreement without any new one. And if this were not the case, then a servant who had lived with his master twenty years in different parishes without any new contract, must be settled in the parish where his master had lived in the first year of his service. And by the whole court: "As there was a hiring for a year, and a continuance under the same service, it is sufficient to gain a settlement; and such settlement must be in the parish where the service was performed the last forty days."

Rex v. Apethorpe, 2 B. & C. 892; 4 D. & R. 487. The pauper was hired, about six years ago, to Mr. Gilby, of Brigstock, for a year, to commence at Old Michaelmas, the whole of which service he performed at Brigstock, sleeping in that parish. Before the end of the year Gilby hired the pauper from the following Old Michaelmas to the New Michaelmas. There was no interruption of the service; and under the second hiring the pauper served his master about half a year in Brigstock, and then removed with him to Sudborough, where he finished his service under such hiring. Per Bayley, J. "If the pauper gained any settlement in Sudborough, it would follow, that wherever there was once a hiring for a year, and the pauper afterwards continued with the master as a weekly servant for twenty years, and resided in twenty different parishes, he would be settled in the parish where he resided for the last forty days, although at that time he were not hired for a year. It appears to me that Rex v. Croscombe (supra) does not bear upon the present case. There the pauper hired himself to live with Dr. Lucy as his servant for a year, for 4*l.* and a livery; he did accordingly live with his master during that year, and without coming to any new agreement, continued with his master in the same parish about a quarter of a year longer. The master then removed to another parish, and the pauper continued to live with him about six months in the latter parish upon the terms of the first contract, and was paid wages at the same rate. Now in that case, at the expiration of the first year, a new hiring for a year was fairly to be presumed, from the circumstance of the pauper continuing in the same service without any alteration of the terms; and if the service in the last year was to be considered as a service under a renewed yearly hiring, that case does not at all bear upon the present. That such was the ground upon which the court proceeded in that case, appears from what was said by Willes, J., in delivering the judgment in Rex v. St. Giles, Reading, Cald. 56; (post, 407), 'Rex v. Croscombe (supra) does not apply, because the court presumed the continuance of the old contract.' There being no authority therefore bearing upon the subject, we must look to 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7: 'if any unmarried person, not having child or children, shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall be adjudged and deemed a good settlement therein.' The word therein refers to the parish or town into which the party has been hired for one year. The settlement, therefore, attaches to him in that parish where he has the character of a servant hired for a year. The 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, recites, 'that doubts had arisen touching the settlement of unmarried persons, not having child or children, lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year;' and enacts, 'that no such person hired as aforesaid, (i. e. lawfully hired into the parish for one year,) shall be adjudged or deemed to have a good settlement in any such parish or township, unless such person shall continue and abide in the same service during the space of one whole year.' The latter statute, therefore, requires, that in order to gain a settlement by the hiring and service mentioned in the former statute, (which was a hiring into a parish for a year,) the party should continue in the same service for the space of one whole year. The former statute requires that the contract should be for a year, and that the service should be under the contract of hiring there mentioned. The latter statute requires besides, that in order to gain a settlement the service should continue for a year. I am therefore of opinion, that a settlement can be gained by hiring and service in that parish only where the party has the character of a servant hired for a year; and that being so, the pauper did not gain a settlement in Sudborough. Holroyd, J. "In Rex v. Croscombe, Lee, C. J. certainly gave an extra-judicial opinion, that the service in the second year need not be under any contract of hiring, provided it was a continuance of the same service; but when the state of the law, as it existed between the 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, and 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, comes to be considered, I think it perfectly clear that that opinion cannot be supported. By 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, overseers were authorized to remove a pauper to a parish which was his last place of settlement for forty days, either as householder, &c., or as a servant. At that time, therefore, a service for forty days conferred a settlement. The 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 3, enacts, that the forty days' continuance of any person in a parish or town, which then conferred a settlement, should be accounted from the publication of a notice in writing which he should deliver to the churchwarden or overseer of the poor, and the latter was to cause it to be read publicly in church. Sect. 6 provided that any person exercising an annual office in the parish during the year should gain a settlement, without having delivered such notice in writing; and sect. 7 enacted, that if any unmarried person, not having any child or children, should be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service should be adjudged and deemed a good settlement therein, although no notice in writing were delivered and published. Now the words such service must refer to a service under the contract of hiring mentioned in a former part of the clause; and if that be so, this statute clearly required that the service should be under a contract of yearly hiring. The legislature in this statute seems to have considered the exercising of an annual office in the parish during the year, and the being hired into the parish for a year, as equivalent to the notice to the parish which was required by the former section. Inasmuch, however, as the exercising of the parochial office was not sufficient to give a settlement, unless it were exercised during the year, doubts were entertained whether the service under the contract of hiring should not also continue during a year. If the service for the year were not required by that statute, the contract of hiring for the year is the only circumstance from which the parish could be deemed to have had notice; and if so, it was essential that the contract should be made in the parish. But doubts being entertained whether service for a year was required, statute 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, was passed. Sect. 4 recites, that doubts had arisen touching the settlement of persons unmarried, not having any child or children, lawfully hired into a parish or town for one year; and then enacts, that no such person so hired as aforesaid shall be deemed to have a good settlement in such parish or township, unless such person shall continue in the service during the space of one whole year. The latter statute did not intend to dispense with any thing required by the former, but to add another qualification to those already required to confer a settlement. The service spoken of in the latter statute is the same service that was contemplated by stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, viz. a service under a contract of hiring for a year. I think, therefore, that in order to give a settlement in any parish, some part of the service must be under a contract of yearly hiring.

Rex v. Buckingham, 3 Nev. & M. 72; 5 Bar. & Adol. 953. T. Burnell and family were removed from Maidsmorton to Buckingham. Order confirmed. Case:—The birth settlement of the pauper, Thomas Burnell, was in Buckingham. On the 28th of February, 1828, he was hired by H. Smithson, Esq. of Maidsmorton, for a year, as a footman and groom, at the wages of 7*l.* and a suit of livery. On the following day he went into the service and continued until the 9th of May following. Mr. Smithson being a West India planter, was about to visit his property in Berbice, and on the 9th of May came to an agreement with the pauper, whereby the latter engaged to bind himself to serve Mr. S. in Berbice as overseer and clerk on his plantations, for the term of three years from the first day of his arrival in Berbice, at the salary for the first year of 15*l.*; for the second, 20*l.*; for the third, 30*l.* current money in Berbice; and Mr. S. promised to pay the above money as it became due (the first-named doing his duty), and to find him his board and lodging and doctor's charges, as is usual for overseers in Berbice. On the preceding day (May 8th) Mr. Smithson paid the pauper 1*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*, the amount of three months' wages. The pauper continued with Mr. Smithson at Maidsmorton till the 12th of May, and the same day went with him to London, where they continued until the 20th, when they embarked for Berbice. The pauper acted in the capacity of servant to Mr. Smithson during his stay in England after he quitted Maidsmorton, and during the voyage. They arrived at Berbice on the 10th of August following. A few weeks after landing they remained at a friend's house, and the pauper lived with Mr. S. as servant, and they then proceeded to Mr. Smithson's plantation at Berbice. The pauper then entered into the office of overseer and clerk, and acted also as servant about the person of his master and lived in his master's house. This continued until February following (1829), when Mr. Smithson having declared his intention of returning to England, the pauper expressed his desire to return also. Mr. Smithson at first objected, but ultimately consented, and the pauper did accordingly accompany his master to England, acting in the capacity of his servant as on the outward voyage. They landed in London on the 10th of May, 1829, and the pauper continued there until the 14th, when they returned to Mr. Smithson's residence at Maidsmorton, and the pauper continued to act as his servant in the house until the 1st of June without any thing passing as to hiring or terms of service. Three or four days before the 1st of June Mr. Smithson told the pauper he meant to give him 20*l.* as his salary up to that time, of which he then gave him 10*l.*, and promised him the remainder whenever he should want it. On the 1st of June the pauper was married, and the same day, previous to the marriage taking place, Mr. Smithson and the pauper came to an agreement for the pauper's service as weekly servant at 4*s.* a week, to live and board in the house as before. Pauper continued in such service until the September following, and then left and received the remaining 10*l.*, his weekly wages having been regularly paid. The pauper was never absent from Mr. Smithson's service a day from its commencement in February, 1828, to its determination in September, 1829. The whole amount of wages received by the pauper for his service to Smithson was the sums of 1*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.*, 20*l.*, and the weekly wages. The question was whether the pauper gained a settlement in Maidsmorton. Denman, C. J. "The argument is that the legal effect of the second agreement was to put an end to the first; I think not; and if not, then there were forty days' residence in Maidsmorton under the yearly hiring, and the pauper gained a settlement. The pauper's agreement of the 9th of May amounts only to an undertaking by him that when he should go out to Berbice he would bind himself to serve as clerk and overseer for three years from the day of his arrival there. It does not appear that he ever did so bind himself; and though it is stated that soon after his arrival at Berbice he entered upon the office of overseer and clerk, yet he continued to act as servant about the person of his master and lived in his master's house. The contract contemplated by the second agreement never came into operation." Little- dale, J. concurred. Taunton, J. "It is said that the first contract was vacated by the second, and Rex v. Great Chilton, (5 T. R. 672,) has been relied upon. Much as I respect the authority of Lord Kenyon, I should have concurred with the opinion of the majority of the judges in that case. There the pauper having been hired for a year from Martinmas, agreed with his master to serve him for a year from the ensuing May day at weekly wages, the court held properly that the two contracts were inconsistent, and that the latter put an end to the first. The latter contract there was not executory but absolute, from a given day. But here the two contracts are not inconsistent; the pauper engages to bind himself to serve, he does not enter into an actual contract to serve, and it does not appear that any further contract was ever made between the parties: it is not immaterial that during the whole period of service he continued to act in his original character of servant. There is no decision to show that where the service is clearly referable to a yearly hiring, that the master's going abroad, and the service afterwards being in a foreign country, destroys the settlement of the servant." Patteson, J. "The sessions have found that the pauper continued to act as servant about the person of his master, and that he continued to do so till he came home. That could not be under the second contract, but must have been under the first." Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Farleigh Wallop, 1 Bar. & Adol. 336. J. Bullpett and wife were removed from Basingstoke to Farleigh Wallop. Order confirmed. Case:—In the first week of January, 1824, the pauper was hired by Mr. Faithful, in the parish of Farleigh Wallop, to serve as under carter from that time till the following Michaelmas at 3s. 6d. per week and 1l. at Michaelmas for wages. The pauper served till Michaelmas, 1824, when Faithful again hired him till the following Michaelmas if he had no sale, at 3s. 6d. per week and 3l. at Michaelmas for wages; if he should have a sale the pauper was to go. The pauper served till February, 1825, when Faithful had a sale, and the pauper went away from his service, having received 1l. 10s. from Faithful for wages. It was contended on the part of the appellants that the latter hiring was not a hiring for a year, for it was liable to be defeated by a contingency within the year, which contingency happened within that period. The sessions, however, held that it was a sufficient yearly hiring to allow of the service under it being connected with the previous service, and that therefore a settlement was gained in the appellant parish. Bayley, J. "I am of opinion that there was in this case a sufficient hiring and service to confer a settlement. The statute 3 W. & M. c. 11. s. 7, enacts, 'that if any unmarried person not having child or children shall be lawfully hired into any parish or town for one year, such service shall be adjudged and deemed a good settlement.' The subsequent statute, 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 30, s. 4, requires that the person so hired shall continue and abide in the same service for the space of one whole year. The question in this case is whether the pauper was lawfully hired for a year within the meaning of the former statute? In order to form a judgment whether there was a hiring for a year, we must look to what took place at the time of the hiring. The sessions find that at Michaelmas, 1824, Faithful hired the pauper till the following Michaelmas if he should have no sale, at 3s. 6d. per week and 3l. at Michaelmas for wages; if he should have a sale the pauper was to go. There was liberty, therefore, reserved to the master to put an end to the contract of hiring within the year; but until he exercised that liberty the hiring was for a year. The pauper was under an obligation to serve for a year, provided the master required his service for that period, and did not do any thing to determine the contract. A hiring may be for a year, absolutely or conditionally; in either case it is a hiring for a year. Here the pauper served more than eight months before Michaelmas, 1824; then that which I consider a hiring for one year, within the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7, took place, and there was a service for four months under the yearly hiring. It is quite clear that service for the whole year under the yearly hiring is not necessary to confer a settlement. Here the pauper served more than a year under two hirings, and one of them was for a year. If he had left the service of his master after he had served under the two hirings for a year, but before any sale had been determined on, he would have been settled in the parish where he resided the last forty days before he quitted the service. In that case it would have been wholly immaterial whether there had been any sale or not: a settlement once gained cannot be defeated by a subsequent event. There having been a service for a year, and the service in part having been under a yearly hiring, I am of opinion that a settlement was gained." Parke, J. "I am of the same opinion. The case depends on the statutes 4 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7, and the 8 & 9 W. & M. c. 30, s. 4. The first of these statutes requires a hiring for a year, and the second a service for a year, but the whole service need not be under the yearly hiring. The sessions have found that there was a hiring from Michaelmas, 1824, to Michaelmas, 1825, determinable in a given event, viz., in case the master should have a sale. That was a hiring for a year, defeasible within the year by matter subsequent, and such a contract is a good hiring for a year within the meaning of the statute. There was altogether more than a year's service, and part of that service was under the yearly hiring. No case has been cited to show that a settlement once obtained can be defeated ab initio by matter subsequent, and there is no reason for our so holding, looking either at the words of the act of parliament or decided cases, for the pauper has been lawfully hired into the parish within the words of the 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7; and having been so hired, has continued and abided in the same service so as to satisfy the words of the statute 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30, s. 4. I cannot distinguish this from a case where the contract being originally for a year has been dissolved within the year by mutual consent. In that case a settlement would be gained, provided there has been in the whole a year's service." Order of sessions confirmed.

Rex v. Fillongley, 1 B. & Ald. 319. W. Downes was removed from Coleshill to Fillongley. Order confirmed. Case:—The pauper, previous to Old Michaelmas, 1812, was hired by W. Hollick, of Ansley, from the then next Old Michaelmas, for a year, at 7*l.* 10*s.* wages. At the same time Hollick said to the pauper that he did not know the custom of the parish as to hiring for a year or fifty-one weeks; that he would inquire, but he believed it must be for a year, and hired him for a year. The pauper entered into the service in pursuance of this contract; three or four days after which Hollick (having previously to the pauper coming into his service ascertained that the practice of the parish was to hire for fifty-one weeks), asked the pauper whether he would consent to the hiring being for fifty-one weeks, to which the pauper consented. He continued in Hollick's service until a week before Old Michaelmas in the next year, when Hollick paid him the 7*l.* 10*s.* for his wages, and asked him to stay on till Old Michaelmas, which he agreed to do on being paid for it; he staid till Old Michaelmas, and received 1*s.* 6*d.* for that time. After argument, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. "If the statutes are to be strained in any respect, it seems to me that the mind revolts much more from coupling a previous service with a subsequent hiring for a year, than from the conclusion to be drawn in the present case. I think this case, therefore, within the limits of the former decisions. If it were now for the first time under our consideration, I should be disposed to pronounce a different judgment: but the decisions are so numerous upon the subject, and we should overturn so many settlements if we were to overrule them, that I feel myself bound by their authority to hold this to be a good hiring and service." Bayley, J. "I am of the same opinion, upon the ground of the authorities alone. There is in this case a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, and that according to the decisions will be sufficient to confer a settlement." Abbott and Holroyd, Js. concurred. Order of sessions quashed.

Rex v. Caverswall, Burr. S. C. 461; 2 Bott, 372. S. Brassington, the pauper, was hired for a year to E. Brassington, at Trentham, and served him till within three weeks of the end of the year; when, on some disputes arising betwixt him and his master, he was with his own consent discharged from his service, and received all his wages, except what was deducted for the three weeks. As soon as he left his service he went to London, and was absent about a fortnight. Upon his return, at Mrs. B.'s request (his master being then from home), he went again into the service; and within a week after the expiration of the first year his master hired him again for another year, and he served him in Trentham for about six months of that second year, and then left him. By the court: "Here was a discontinuance. The first contract was absolutely dissolved, and so continued for a fortnight or three weeks. Therefore this last service cannot be connected with the former part of the year, and consequently no settlement was gained at Trentham."

Rex v. Alton, 2 Bott, 317. The pauper, R. Johnston, hired himself to his uncle, D. Johnston, a turner, for a year. The pauper was to be found in board, pocket-money, and clothes, by his uncle, for whom he was to work in his trade of a turner; after he had served six months, his master finding him idle, they came to a new agreement, by which the pauper was to work in the trade by the piece, and to be paid by the piece for what he should earn, and he to find himself in board and clothes; on which last terms he served to the end of the year, sometimes working by the piece when he boarded out, and at other times he served his master in the house, and then he was boarded by his master. The sessions held that this new agreement determined the contract, and that the pauper gained no settlement. The court: "It is not necessary that all the service should be under a hiring for a year; a service under a hiring for less than a year may be coupled with service under a hiring for a year, and give a settlement; there are many cases to that purpose: there can be no doubt but the original agreement still continued, and besides, the second hiring being general, would be equivalent to a hiring for a year." Order quashed.

Rex v. St. Giles's, Reading, Cald. 54; 2 Bott, 261. Daniel Davies, the pauper, went into the service of Mr. Wilder, who kept an inn in Reading, on 19th December, 1763, under a general hiring as post-boy, and continued in that service for seven months, when he married his present wife. After his marriage he continued in his service four months, when he took lodgings in St. Giles's, and removed thither with his wife, where he slept for seven months, continuing to serve his master the whole time without coming to any new hiring, making eighteen months in the whole, and then left his service. Willes, J. delivered the judgment. "This case depends upon the construction of the 7th sect. of 3 Will. III. c. 11. The act was intended for the benefit of unmarried persons, and the principle of it is, that the parish that reaped the benefit of the labour of a man unincumbered with a family, ought to make a provision for that man when not able to provide for himself; but not for others from whom they derived no benefit: the 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 3, s. 30, used the very same words as the former statute, 'unmarried person not having child or children.' The meaning of these acts is obvious, that the labour of one man shall not be sufficient to incumber a parish with the maintenance of a numerous family. It has been determined (Rex v. Hedsor and Rex v. Hanbury), that marriage does not dissolve the contract, if it happen during the year in which a man has been hired as a single man; to such only the benefit of the act was meant to be extended, and for this reason married persons ought to continue in the settlement acquired before marriage. If there had been a residence of forty days in St. Giles's, at the end of the first year the pauper would have been well settled there; it would have been within Rex v. Hedsor; but that is not the present case. Rex v. Croscombe (ante, 402), does not apply: 1. Because that was the case of a servant unmarried during the whole of the year. 2. Because the court did there presume the continuance of the old contract. Here the pauper was incapable of making a new contract at the commencement of the second year; presumption can go no further; at that time he was a married man. In this case, suppose at the end of the first year a new agreement had been made, a service under that could not have given the pauper a settlement. Shall he then by an implied contract do that which in express and direct terms he could not do? If the original hiring were constructively to be continued throughout the second year, it might last for twenty years; and parishes might be burdened with families, from whose labour they had received no benefit.

2. Of Lapse between connected Services.

If the hiring be from November to Michaelmas, and the servant continue in the service till the second day after Michaelmas without any new agreement, and on that day there be a new agreement for a year from that day, the two services may be coupled by the means of the service upon the intervening day.

2. Of Lapse between Connected Services. (a)

Rex v. Sulgrave, 1 T. R. 778. The pauper was hired to J. Welch of Wormleighton, November, 1785, till Michaelmas next, at 6*l.* 10*s.* wages. Two or three days before Michaelmas-day, his master offered him the like sum for the year ensuing, which he did not think sufficient. On Michaelmas-day his master offered him seven guineas, and they agreed to all but the expense of washing. The pauper had no intention of leaving his master, and he believed his master had no intention of parting with him; he continued in his master's house and did his work as usual, but without any obligation; he lodged at his master's house, and did not remove any of his clothes, or offer himself to any other master, nor did his master seek after another servant. He thought himself at liberty to have left his master if any better hiring had offered. He did not agree with his master on that day, but the next day but one, being the second day after Michaelmas, he agreed to accept seven guineas as before offered him for the year ensuing. He did not expect that his wages were to be due on the Michaelmas following, but at the expiration of the year, from the day on which he agreed to accept the seven guineas. He continued in the service till Whitsuntide. Ashhurst, J. "I think this was a good service in Wormleighton, according to the authority of all the cases cited. All that the statutes require is, that there should be a hiring for a year, and a continuance in the same service for a year. Now it is stated, that the pauper had no intention of leaving his master, and that he did all his master's work as usual; and though he thought himself at liberty to leave his master's service on the Michaelmas-day, and when he agreed with his master the second day after Michaelmas, he considered that the year was to be computed from that day, yet there was a good hiring and service for a year. If so, the only question is, whether there were any discontinuance? It appears from the case there was not; for the servant continued in the same capacity, he did his work as usual, and if he had continued to serve for half a year, without entering into any new contract, he would have been entitled to a compensation for such service; the law would have implied that he continued under the former agreement, and would have measured his damages by his former wages. Then he must be taken to have been in the capacity of a hired servant during that time. This is like Rex v. Croscombe (ante, 402); in which case the servant was as much at liberty to quit his master's service after the first year, as the pauper in this case was on the Michaelmas-day, and it might as well have been said that in that case there was not a continuance of the same service, but there the pauper gained a settlement in St. Cuthbert's. Rex v. Fifehead (infra), and Wichford v. Bretford, do not apply; for one was determined on the ground of there being no fraction of a day; and in the other, there was a total discontinuance of the service; and though the service was only discontinued for a day, it could not be coupled with the subsequent one, so as to give the pauper a settlement."

Rex v. Fifehead Magdalen, Burr. S. C. 116; 2 Bott, 371. W. Trim hired himself to a master at West Stower, from Midsummer to Lady-day, for 40*s.* At Lady-day he received his wages of 40*s.* and left his master's service, and then went to his father's house in West Stower; and in about an hour returned to his master, and agreed with him for a year, at 3*l.* 10*s.* a-year, and lived with his master half-a-year. When he went from his master's house, he had no clothes but what he wore, except a shirt, which he left at his master's house. Lord C. J. Lee said, "He remembered the resolution was first come into in Lord C. J. Parker's time, that a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, were sufficient to gain a settlement, though all the service should not be under the same contract; and that Sir Thomas Powys (who was just come into the court) very much boggled at it: but now,"

An hour's interval between the termination of the first service and the beginning of the second, does not amount to a discontinuance, although the servant leave the place for that hour.

(a) See division of the subject, ante, 331.

he added "the rule is established, that if there be a hiring for a year, and a service for a year, it will gain a settlement, though the whole service is not under the first hiring. And in this case, the absence for an hour, which was only to consult his father about a new contract, ought not to be looked upon as a discontinuance. Upon every new contract there is a sort of discontinuance. The last day of the former contract was the first day of the second service. And this was only an hour's absence within the space of that same day. Therefore he remained a servant during the whole time of the completion of his year."

Rex v. Ellisfield, Cald. 4; 2 Bott, 375. The pauper, Samuel Bulpit, was hired on the 6th of December, 1773, to J. Dalman of Ellisfield, to serve till Michaelmas, 1774; he went into the service the next day, and continued therein till nine o'clock on Michaelmas-day, when he received his wages, and took his clothes, and left his master's house and service: about an hour afterwards, his master came to him and desired him to stay, but the pauper asked more wages than the master was willing to give, but said he would see him presently at Basingstoke fair, held that day for the hiring of servants. At the fair at one o'clock he made an agreement with his master to serve him till Michaelmas following, and went into his service that evening, and continued therein for three months: the pauper thought himself at liberty to hire himself to any other person as soon as he left his master's house, and should have hired himself to any person who would have given him the wages he asked his master. By Lord Mansfield, C. J. and the court: "There is not the difference of an iota between this case and that of Fifehead (ante, 408), and every argument used there would apply in the present. It is said there, as here, that the pauper left his master's service, received his wages, and was absent some time; he might have hired himself with any other master during his absence: upon his return he does agree to continue the old service, but makes a new contract for more wages: there was, therefore, a complete abandonment and discontinuance. The ground on which the court went in that case, and which holds equally in the present, was, that the law will not make a fraction of a day; and the reason and justice of the case is with the settlement. As to the interruption and discontinuance, Chapple, J. observed very properly in the Fifehead case, that upon every new contract there is a sort of discontinuance, and if this were otherwise the law of connecting two hirings within the year, which was now settled, could not be supported, where the first period was suffered to elapse before the second contract was made.
